There are some Choctaws still remaining in Mississippi who have persistently refused and successfully resisted all efforts of the Federal Government and the Choctaw Nation to have them move west and affiliate with the tribe.

The testimony before the subcommittee discloses many thousands of persons of doubtful descent, African and other, living in Mississippi and surrounding States, who have attempted to assert claims as Choctaw Indians.

Such Indians of real Choctaw blood as still reside in Mississippi appear to take little interest in the claims asserted by their alleged attorneys. On the other hand, those claiming remote Indian blood and of doubtful descent have manifested much interest in being enrolled and sharing in a division of the Choctaw funds in Oklahoma.

The contention of these latter seems to have been inspired and augmented by certain attorneys who have sent agents among these people advising them that they were Indians and taking contracts for their enrollment for a contingent fee of from 30 to 40 per cent of recovery, and in many instances a small cash retainer in addition.

According to statements and admissions of these attorneys and their agents, two firms alone, those of Cantwell & Crews, of St. Louis, Mo., and Ballinger & Lee, of Washington, D. C., and Ardmore, Okla., hold contracts with 15,596 individuals, carrying provisions for fees aggregating $10,882,815.

The testimony further shows that a syndicate for the purpose of securing the enrollment of Mississippi Choctaws and a participation in the tribal estate of the western Choctaws have been formed under the name "The Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co.," capitalized at $100,000, $25,000 of which has been paid in and used. The directors of this corporation are S. L. Hurlbut, of El Campo, Tex.; H. Masterson and W. A. Smith, of Houston, Tex.; and T. B. Crews and H. J. Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.

This claim of the Mississippi Choctaw attorneys for enrollment of their clients and participation in the Choctaw Nation's estate is by no means a new contention. The claim was, under direction of law, fully adjudicated by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes (House Doc. 274, 55th Cong., 2d sess.) and afterwards by the Federal court, to which appeal was taken (Jack Amos et al. v. The Choctaw Nation, Decisions of United States courts in Indian Territory, 465), both decisions being adverse to the Mississippi Choctaw contention for enrollment.

In rejecting the claim of nonresident Mississippi Choctaws the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes said in part:

"This historical review of the acquisition of this territory by the Choctaw Nation and its subsequent legal relations to it makes it clear in the opinion of this commission that the Mississippi Choctaws are not under their treaties entitled to all rights of Choctaw citizenship except an interest in the Choctaw annuities and still continue their residence and citizenship in Mississippi. (House Doc. 274, 55th Cong., 2d sess.)"

In affirming the decision the United States District Court for the Central District of Indian Territory closed its decision with the following paragraph:

"To permit men with, perchance, but a strain of Choctaw blood in their veins, who, 65 years ago, broke away from their kindred and their nation, and during that time, or the most of it, have been exercising the rights of citizenship and doing homage to the sovereignty of another nation, and have become strangers to the people, to reach forth their hands from their distant and alien homes and lay hold on a part of the public domain, the common property of the people, and appropriate to their own use, would be unjust and inequitable. It is therefore the opinion of the court that the absent Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled to be enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation. The action of the Dawes Commission is therefore affirmed and a decree will be entered for the Choctaw Nation. (Jack Amos et al. v. The Choctaw Nation, Decisions of United States courts in Indian Territory, 465.)"

An appeal was taken from these decisions by the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Jack Amos case was dismissed upon motion of the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws. (190 U. S., 873.)

Several years subsequent to the date of these decisions excluding the Mississippi Choctaws from enrollment this matter was again taken up and readjusted by the legally constituted authorities of the Federal Government and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, by which agreement the Mississippi Choctaws were given additional time for identification and establishment of bona fide residence in the Choctaw Nation in Indian Territory. (Supplemental agreement, "An act to ratify and affirm the agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians," etc., approved July 1, 1902.)

The Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma has dealt justly and liberally with the Mississippi Choctaws, always granting them full citizenship in their nation with all emoluments thereto whenever they would agree to affiliate with the tribe, and the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma is under no legal, equitable, or moral obligation to enroll the Mississippi Choctaws as citizens of the tribe in the West at this time.

By the agreements negotiated between the Federal Government and the Choctaw Nation all native western Choctaws were required to be on the reservation by June 28, 1898, or stand debarred from enrollment and participation in the tribal estate forever thereafter, and this rule has been strictly adhered to.

The time for establishment of residence on the reservation was extended to the Mississippi Choctaw claimants until July 1, 1903, giving the Mississippi Choctaws five years to move on the reservation after the time for establishment of such residence had been closed to the native Choctaws.

After 11 years were consumed by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes in making up the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations such rolls were affirmatively closed by action of Congress on March 4, 1907.

The rolls of the Choctaw Nation were held open to the Mississippi Choctaws from 1830 until March 4, 1907, giving the Mississippi Choctaws 77 years in which to complete enrollment with full benefits of citizenship.

The Federal Government as such is neither legally nor equitably obligated to enroll Mississippi Choctaws with the Choctaws west, and is under only such moral obligation to the Mississippi Choctaws as is due to dependent North American Indians who were originally occupants and owners of the soil and who have been deprived of their patrimony by white settlers.

The passage of H. R. 12586 would completely upset and undo 11 years of careful, painstaking work of the Interior Department in settling the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, turn the wheels of progress backwards for more than 20 years, and, as has been said by President Taft, "open up a Pandora's box of troubles, which the life of the present generation might not see closed."

The passage of H. R. 12586 would doubtless result in stupendous claims of millions of dollars against the Federal Government on the part of the Oklahoma Choctaws because of a division of their funds among persons whom the Federal commissions and Federal courts have decided were not entitled thereto.

Its passage would lend encouragement to grafting attorneys with contracts for enormous attorneys' fees, running into millions of dollars, and hold out inducement for procuring additional contracts from spurious claimants.

Your subcommittee therefore recommends that the Harrison bill (H. R. 12586) be not favorably reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

Respectfully submitted.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR ON THE HARRISON BILL (H. R. 12586).

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 8, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I have the honor to refer herein to a communication of August 12, 1914, from Hon. C. D. CARTER, then acting chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, with which was inclosed a copy of H. R. 12586, entitled "A bill to reopen the rolls of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribe and to provide for the awarding of the rights secured to certain persons by the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, of date September 27, 1830." He also referred to H. R. 4536 and requested that I consider the two bills together and make a report thereon.

Upon examination of H. R. 4536, I find that said bill is identical with H. R. 19213, introduced by Mr. HARRISON, of Mississippi, in the Sixty-second Congress, second session, upon which last-mentioned bill the department submitted to your committee a report dated July 2, 1912. H. R. 12856, introduced in the present Congress by Mr. HARRISON, is a similar bill to the above-mentioned bills, except that in said H. R. 12586 an additional paragraph is included in section 2 to provide for the enrollment of all persons who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission in its report of March 10, 1899, commonly known as the McKennon roll, and of all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission from March 10, 1899, to March 4, 1907, whose identification was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, but whose names did not appear on the final citizenship rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations.

The claims of Mississippi Choctaw Indians to recognition as citizens of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma and to share in the property of said nation are based upon article 14 of the treaty of September 27, 1830. (7 Stat. L., 335.) Pursuant to the terms of the treaty, a large number of Choctaws were transferred from Mississippi to the country west, later known as Indian Territory. These Choctaws who so removed and their descendants now constitute the main body of what is known as the Choctaw Nation. There were, however, a considerable number of Choctaws who remained behind in Mississippi, some of them under the provisions of article 14 above mentioned.

Said article 14 provided that the persons who claimed thereunder should not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever removed were not to be entitled to any part of the Choctaw annuity. The Indians who remained behind, under the provisions of said article 14, received either land in Mississippi or scrip, which gave the applicants the right to enter public lands in certain Southern States. A part of said scrip, however, was later commuted by a money payment. Some of the fourteenth-article claimants later made their way west and joined the main body of the tribe in the Indian Territory. The Choctaw Council by various acts recognized the right of said absentee Mississippi Choctaws to remove to the nation, and actually invited them to do so.

Under the provisions of the Atoka agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes contained in the act of Congress of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495), the supplemental agreement contained in the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), and later acts of Congress for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said agreements, the claims of individual Mississippi Choctaw Indians to be identified and to be enrolled as entitled to share in the property of the Choctaw Nation were fully considered by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and by the department after full hearing, at which the claimants had ample opportunity to present all the evidence which they could procure in support of their claims. Very few claimants were able to prove descent from an ancestor who received or applied for benefits under the provisions of article 14 of the treaty of 1830.

The history of the Dawes Commission enrollment work relative to Mississippi Choctaw claimants is very fully set out in a communication of April 14, 1914, from William O. Beall, at one time secretary of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. A copy thereof is inclosed for your information.

For your further information as to the history of the Mississippi Choctaw claims and of the department action in the preparation of the final rolls there is inclosed a copy of department letter of July 2, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

Judge William H. H. Clayton, in his decision in the case of Jack Amos v. The Choctaw Nation, a copy of which may be found in the appendix of the annual report of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, said that no treaty or acts of the Choctaw Council or of any officer of the Choctaw Council since the treaty of 1830 could be cited, or at least he had not found them, whereby any right or privilege had been conferred, granted, or recognized in or to a Mississippi Choctaw so long as he remained away from his people, and that no right was recognized or conferred upon such absent Indian except upon the condition that he should remove to the nation, and the right was not to be consummated or enjoyed until actual removal.

Mississippi Choctaw Indians who, while the opportunity was theirs under the privileges accorded them, refused to emigrate with the tribe to the new country west, and who never shared in the burdens and hardships of the pioneer life incident to the establishment of the new tribal government west of the Mississippi, have at this late date (now that the tribal property of the Choctaw Nation made valuable by the emigrants is being divided per capita among the enrolled recognized citizens of the nation) no equitable right to share in said property.

With respect to persons who were identified by the Dawes Commission as Mississippi Choctaws under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495), but who failed to remove and make settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, as required by the act of Congress of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641, secs. 41, 42, 43, and 44), it may be said that, irrespective of their unfortunate condition of poverty and ignorance, there is no ground, legal or equitable, for holding the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations responsible for the failure of said identified persons to comply with the law as to removal and settlement. No obligation rested upon the United States to provide means for the removal of such Indians.

Referring to the class of claimants whose names were contained in an identification roll submitted by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes on March 10, 1899, but never approved by the Secretary of the Interior, your attention is invited to the fact that the commission soon recognized the inaccuracy and incompleteness of that roll and requested the department to disregard it and to return the same to the commission. In order that there might be no doubt as to the standing of said roll, it was disapproved by the department on March 1, 1907. The larger part of the persons whose names were contained on that disapproved roll were afterwards placed on the approved identification rolls, and those who complied with the law as to removal and settlement were enrolled on the final rolls of the Mississippi Choctaw Indians.

In the investigation and examination of Mississippi Choctaw claims made in 1900 and the years following by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes every effort that was possible to be made was made by said commission to reach all persons who had any equitable claim to recognition as Mississippi Choctaws, and especially to find those who were full-blooded Choctaw Indians.

H. R. 4536 and H. R. 12586 in effect provide, so far as the Mississippi Choctaw claimants are concerned, a general reopening of the rolls of the Choctaw Nation, necessitating a review of all the cases which had been adversely decided by the United States courts, the Department of the Interior, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, as well as the consideration of claims not heretofore presented or considered, and empower the Secretary of the Interior to determine the rights of the claimants upon such evidence as may be produced by the applicants, without regard to any adverse judgment or decision heretofore rendered by any court or commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, or the Department of the Interior, and without regard to any condition or disability heretofore imposed by any act of Congress.

The records of the department show that Mississippi Choctaw claimants have been to an unusual extent the victims of numerous extortionate contracts, and the correspondence in many cases indicates that contracts were obtained through misrepresentations as to the facts, and in some cases that such contracts were obtained from claimants who believed that the persons obtaining the contracts were Government agents. Your attention is invited to the report of Inspector McLaughlin of this department, which report appears in print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 10, 1914, commencing on page 13022.

Referring to section 9 of said bills, I am of the opinion that, in view of the large amount of tribal property yet to be disposed of and of other matters affecting the tribes, it would be inadvisable to abolish the tribal organization of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations at the present time.

In view of the facts as presented to me, I am of the opinion that no legislation should be enacted for the reopening of the rolls of the Choctaw Nation for the benefit of the Mississippi Choctaw claimants.

Very truly, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

JANUARY 16, 1915.

J. F. MCMURRAY, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The per capita payment to the Choctaws is again before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi has requested to be heard by the committee, evidently in opposition to making the per capita payment until some action is taken on the Mississippi Choctaw case.

I am informed that when the Choctaw and Chickasaw agreement was pending the friends of the Mississippi Choctaws introduced in the Senate a proposed amendment, by Senator Harris, as follows: That sections 41, 42, 43, and 44 be struck out and provision made as follows:

"41. All persons heretofore identified by the Commission of the Five Civilized Tribes as Mississippi Choctaws, and whose names appear upon the schedule dated March 10, 1899, prepared by said commission under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495), and such full-blooded Mississippi Choctaw Indians as may be identified by said commission, and the wives, children, and grandchildren of all such full-blood Choctaws, shall alone constitute the 'Mississippi Choctaws' entitled to benefits under this agreement.

"42. All 'Mississippi Choctaws,' as herein defined, who shall remove or may have removed to the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes within 12 months after official notification of their identification, shall be enrolled by said commission upon a separate roll designated 'Mississippi Choctaws'; and lands equal in value to lands allotted to citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes shall in like manner be selected and set apart for each of them. All such persons who reside upon the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes for a period of one year after enrollment as above provided shall, upon proof of such bona fide residence, receive patents as provided in the Atoka agreement, and they shall hold the lands thus allotted to them as provided in the Atoka agreement for citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and be treated in all respects as other Choctaws."

I am further informed that when this question came up on the floor of the House of Representatives, anticipating that a fight would be made to amend the Choctaw agreement so as to recognize the schedule of March 10, 1899, and to establish the full-blood rule of evidence and provide for the mixed-blood children of full-blood parents, and to obviate the restriction proposed by sections 41, 42, 43, and 44, you proposed as a compromise measure an amendment submitted by Mr. Curtis, in charge of the bill; that you drew this amendment in conjunction with the Assistant Attorney General of the Interior Department, and that it was accepted by the friends of the Mississippi Choctaws as a compromise of this controversy and as a final settlement of the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws.

I understand further that for this reason you would regard the reopening of the rolls of the Mississippi Choctaws as a violation of the compromise agreement and unfair to the Choctaws and Chickasaws West who agreed to this adjustment for the purpose of getting a settlement that was intended to be permanent, the Harris amendment not having been pressed after the compromise was entered into.

Please advise me if the above statement is substantially correct as representing the truth as you remember it.

Your immediate reply will be appreciated.

Respectfully,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1915.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Senate Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your favor of the 15th instant, asking information relative to the amendment of Mr. Charles Curtis, of Kansas, offered in June, 1902, to the Choctaw-Chickasaw agreement then pending before Congress, to the effect that the Mississippi Choctaws of full blood might be enrolled as "Mississippi Choctaws" without making proof that their ancestors had complied with section 14 of the treaty of 1866, beg to say:

The fight at that time to enroll Mississippi Choctaws was at a white heat; the United States authorities in charge of the enrollment work had held that no Choctaw or Chickasaw (except Mississippi Choctaws), who had not previously established a residence in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, could under the law be enrolled. The effect of this holding was immediate and made all claimants to Choctaw-Chickasaw citizenship claim as "Mississippi Choctaws."

These authorities had previously rejected the application of more than 50,000 persons claiming to be Mississippi Choctaws, and the Dawes Commission had estimated the value of a Choctaw or Chickasaw enrollment, together with the property following same, to be about $8,000, so that any lawyer who could originate and put through a successful enrollment plan for these people could see millions in it.

It was the talk of the hour and could be heard about the hotel lobbies more than any other subject. Such a tempting bait naturally brought a swarm of advocates. Some of the ablest and most reputable lawyers of the country were giving their talents and influence to this subject, to say nothing of the army of unscrupulous persons who were swarming about the flesh pots.

The first hard work for the representatives of the claimants to do was to prepare such an amendment to the bill as would do the work and then to see that it became a part of the law.

Both the Senate and House Committees on Indian Affairs had been struggling with the question for a long time. Almost daily some new plan of settlement was suggested by some one representing the claimants. The following offered by Senator Harris is one of the many plans suggested:

"41. All persons heretofore identified by the Commission of the Five Civilized Tribes as Mississippi Choctaws, and whose names appear upon the schedule dated March 10, 1899, prepared by said commission under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495), and such full-blooded Mississippi Choctaw Indians as may be identified by said commission, and the wives, children, and grandchildren of all such full-blooded Choctaws, shall alone constitute the 'Mississippi Choctaws' entitled to benefits under this agreement.

"42. All 'Mississippi Choctaws,' as herein defined, who shall remove or may have removed to the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes within 12 months after official notification of their identification, shall be enrolled by said commission upon a separate roll, designated 'Mississippi Choctaws'; and lands equal in value to lands allotted to citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes shall in like manner be selected and set apart for each of them. All such persons who reside upon the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes for a period of one year after enrollment as above provided shall, upon proof of such bona fide residence, receive patents as provided in the Atoka agreement, and they shall hold the lands thus allotted to them as provided in the Atoka agreement for citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and be treated in all respects as other Choctaws."

The Senators and Congressmen from Mississippi and Alabama were deeply aroused over the matter. The argument you could hear made by all shades of persons, from the dignified Senators of the States directly affected to the coffee coolers about the claimants' camps, was that there were full-blood Choctaws in Mississippi who could not even speak the English language, who had no opportunity to join their tribe, and that the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians in the Indian Territory were rolling in wealth and had more land than they could possibly use.

All parties agreed that a concession on the part of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations at that time, if accepted, would be final and permit the Government to complete without delay the division of the Choctaw-Chickasaw estate; that otherwise the delay might be indefinite. This was the argument that caused the two nations to make the concessions that cost them about $15,000,000.

The supplemental agreement had been before the Choctaw and Chickasaw authorities in one form or another since 1900.

The original purpose of these people in making the agreement was to change none of the laws of their tribes affecting citizenship to these tribes. They had all along believed that their wishes would control as to these matters, but now it had become apparent that the Government would not be entirely guided by their suggestions, and they had advised me if a provision could be drawn settling the matter for all time, and affecting only the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, and not endangering the rolls as to the mixed blood, to put it in.

I had become convinced that a compromise was necessary to a final settlement, when Mr. James S. Sherman, chairman of the Indian Committee of the House, sent for me and suggested that I had best prepare an item giving the full bloods in Mississippi another chance to go West and take lands in the Choctaw country. We together went across to the Senate end of the Capitol to confer about this matter with Senator Platt, of Connecticut. It was there agreed that such a provision should be prepared by me and submitted to the committees; that in preparing the item I should confer with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Attorney General of the Interior Department. This amendment was drawn by me with the assistance of Mr. W. A. Jones,

Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the able Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department.

In considering the matter I conferred with many Senators and Congressmen; among others of the Senate were Senator Jones, of Arkansas, Platt, of Connecticut, Quarles, Morgan, McCumber, Quay, Stewart, Harris, Du Bois, Clarke of Montana, and with Messrs. Sherman, Stevens, Curtis, Little, and Lacy, of the House, and many others.

The prevailing sentiment seemed to be that if a plan were offered giving the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws an opportunity to move to the Choctaw Nation and take lands it would forever settle the question.

In drafting the amendment three thoughts were uppermost in my mind:

First and paramount, to settle the Mississippi Choctaw question for all time.

Second, to give the full bloods of Mississippi an opportunity for a limited time and under proper restrictions to move to the Choctaw Nation and acquire lands and become permanent citizens.

Third, to eliminate the full-blood argument from the general enrollment proposition of these tribes, and thus avoid the danger of legislation taking a wider range.

I should, under all the circumstances, regard it as an act of very bad faith upon the part of the United States Government with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations to open the doors to further admissions to their rolls or longer delay a division of their estate after these concessions by which they bought and paid for their peace.

Very respectfully,

J. F. McMURRAY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1915.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Senate Committee on Indian Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Section 41 of the act of July 1, 1902, commonly known as the supplementary agreement, confirmed and ratified on September 25, 1902, by a vote of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, provided that the application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw should be received after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of said agreement and further provided that proof under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 that their descendants had received a patent thereunder or were entitled thereto was expressly waived as to full bloods and could not be invoked against such.

When this treaty was made I was governor of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians, and I seriously and earnestly opposed the enactment of such a provision, but finally agreed to a waiver of proof as to full bloods and an extension of time within which to apply for citizenship and within which to remove west only as a compromise settlement, and to settle forever and finally the citizenship question.

Yours, very truly,

D. H. JOHNSTON,
Governor of the Chickasaw Nation.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. WILLIAM H. MURRAY, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM OKLAHOMA.

I am a citizen of the Chickasaw Nation, admitted under the tribal laws for naturalization for white men, and have been since 1899.

At the time of the making of the supplementary agreement of September 25, 1902, I was the secretary of the National Party, the dominant political party of the tribal government, and by reason of said position was one of the managers of the party. The National Party, through its leader, Gov. Douglas H. Johnston, as governor of the nation, was responsible for the making of the said supplementary treaty. The opposing party called a meeting in my home town, Tishomingo, with a view of opposing the ratification of this treaty; and Holmes Willis, a very prominent citizen by blood of the Chickasaw Nation, and I attended this meeting in an effort to defeat the movement in opposition to its ratification. We also made public addresses to citizens of the tribe throughout the nation, urging its ratification. Both in the Tishomingo meeting and everywhere upon the "stump" we were met with the charge that we had permitted the reopening of the rolls in violation of former treaties, court decisions, and decisions of the Dawes Commission for the admission of the so-called Mississippi Choctaws. To this reply we urged that it became necessary to do so in order to secure from the Government a final and speedy settlement of tribal affairs and the immediate allotment in severalty, and the distribution of tribal funds to individual members, and that such agreement was made as a necessary compromise in order to secure such settlement.

The real and only issue involved in the entire campaign was this question of citizenship and the reopening of the rolls. Acting upon the advice of the makers of this treaty, it was ratified with the universal belief of all parties that it meant a speedy settlement, and that no further effort would ever be made to reopen the rolls or to permit the admission of any other claimants to enrollment.

There is no shadow of claim in this case, and I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oregon desire to speak on this matter?

Mr. LANE. I want to make a brief statement.

Mr. OWEN. I will withdraw my motion if the Senator desires me to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma withdraw his motion?

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I listened very patiently to the hearings before the Indian Committee which were held in the last few weeks. I listened to nearly everything, I think, that was said upon this subject. The matter of the Mississippi Choctaws and their rights to property were not so fully entered into as were the rights of other Choctaws living in Oklahoma, who represented that they had been left off of the rolls; that they had a legal right with the other Choctaws that are enrolled to share in the moneys belonging to the Choctaw Nation.

It was stated then, and I do not think it was disputed, at least it was not disproven, that the governors of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations entered into a contract with a firm of attorneys to keep off of the roll all persons whom they thought were not entitled to go upon the roll. Just how much further that contract went I do not know, but in the contract it seems that the attorneys were to be paid 9 per cent of the amount which they would save to the nation by keeping persons off the roll who otherwise would have property accrue to them.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, would the Senator object to my calling his attention to a fact in regard to that contract?

Mr. LANE. No.

Mr. OWEN. The contract related only to the court citizens—the citizens who had been sent to the court and whose cases had been decided by Judge Clayton's court, from which an appeal was taken to the citizenship court. It did not relate to the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi at all.

Mr. LANE. No; I am not talking about the Mississippi Choctaws. I was not referring to them.

Mr. OWEN. This item is on the Mississippi Choctaws only.

Mr. LANE. Yes; and, incidentally, this appropriation carries the rights of these other Choctaws.

Mr. OWEN. I thought the Senator was referring to an amendment which related only to the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. LANE. No; I am referring only to the question that is involved as another issue of this subject. I was talking of the complaint which was made by Choctaws who still live in Oklahoma and who claim to have the same rights that the Oklahoma Choctaws do. They made the statement, and, as I say, it was not successfully disputed—I do not know that it was disputed at all—that there was a commission of 9 per cent offered to shrewd and able attorneys to keep as many as possible off the rolls. Afterwards that contract was modified by the order, I think, of the Secretary of the Interior, and the attorneys received only 4 per cent; but at a 4 per cent commission they realized a fee of $750,000. Now, after this contract was entered into it was also stated—and it seemed to me without any successful denial of the fact—that the tribal rolls in possession of the governors of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes were placed in the hands of these attorneys and by them locked up for safe-keeping, so that no access was had to them by the Dawes Commission or whoever else might be investigating the facts at the time, and they were denied the information which would have settled the claims of many persons who were justly entitled to go upon the rolls. It was also stated that it had been proven that there were a number of Choctaws who knew that their names were on that tribal roll, or the names of their parents, and that they were justly entitled to go upon the rolls, and when they made application to the governors of these nations they were told in some instances that they could only go upon the rolls by paying $100 in cash to get their names enrolled.

Mr. VARDAMAN. They had, as I understand, attorneys employed for the purpose of keeping them off the rolls.

Mr. LANE. For the purpose of keeping them off the rolls.

Mr. VARDAMAN. They were not only concealing the information from them, but they had attorneys employed to prevent them from getting on the rolls.

Mr. LANE. To see that they did not get on the rolls. Now, it went a step further than that. This firm of attorneys were also furnished all their expenses in chasing down the records and hunting up evidence against persons who were trying to get upon the rolls. There were many thousands of people, no doubt, who did not rightfully belong upon the rolls who were trying to get upon them. It seems to be a fact that the final result was that a large number of persons were kept off the rolls who really were entitled to go upon them, and just as much entitled as anybody who did get on; and, at the same time, I have no doubt that others who did not belong upon the rolls did get upon them.

In summing up this matter in my own mind, I came to this conclusion, that given a firm of three sharp, able, and capable attorneys, working on a percentage basis, dependent upon the number of names and the amount of property they could keep off of the rolls, they would not be doing their duty by their clients or themselves if they did not keep off as many as they could, to render the tribal rolls as small as possible, so that there would be more to divide up among those who remained on the rolls, and also a larger fee for the attorneys who kept them off. I could understand how, if they were philanthropic gentlemen, good-hearted, easy-going folk, they might let people get on that roll and by doing so lose their fee and fail to render proper and faithful service to the people who had employed them. I think the people who got on the pay roll, who got past those lawyers, had to get up pretty early in the morning to do so. They kept many people off, and, under the circumstances, it was their duty to keep them off.

Later along, it seems, there was a commission created by Congress which investigated these claims of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and at a later date there was a time set at which the rolls were to be closed; and there were thrown before the Secretary of the Interior about 2,000 unsettled cases, just at the time, or about the time, set for the rolls to close. He was unable to look into them. It was a work which would take months and months, and, perhaps, even years; and he rubber-stamped them "rejected"—rejected them by hundreds. He himself, in a report which he made to Congress, makes the statement that there were a large number of these names, or a certain number of them, that in his opinion rightfully belonged upon these rolls.

This is a portion of the report to the Sixty-second Congress, third session, page 131, Senate Document 1139. It is found on page 779 of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, Sixty-third Congress, third session. In this report this is what the Secretary of the Interior said:

> The department concurs in the views of the Indian Office. Unless the time is extended many persons entitled to enrollment will not be enrolled. The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and the commissioner have been for years taking testimony and rendering decisions in cases involving complicated questions of citizenship in these tribes, and some of the cases have not yet reached the department.
> While the department has disposed of most of the citizenship cases which have come before it, it apparently can not give due consideration to all the cases still pending and to be submitted by the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Indian Office by the time prescribed by the section of the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stats., 137).

Now, if it is true that there are Chickasaws and Choctaws who are justly entitled to be upon the roll of citizenship and have been left off through no fault of their own, it seems to me that it would be unfair upon our part, and later along would be subjecting this Government to a suit for the recovery of the moneys if it paid them out to some one else and did not recognize and equitably settle those claims. For that reason I voted against the provision in the committee, and wished and hoped that these claims, which are now of record in the department—the unsettled claims which they have not had the time to investigate—might be handed to the Secretary of the Interior, that he might be authorized to get enough clerical help to sift the matter properly and come to Congress and say just who was entitled to go on the rolls, and then settle the matter and close it on that basis.

That is aside from any claim which the Mississippi Choctaws have, for with that question I do not pretend to be familiar. I am giving you a résumé of the testimony as I heard it and the conclusions to which I came without prejudice to either side. It seems to me that if you pay out this $5,000,000, or whatever amount it is—and it is no mere bagatelle in the way of money, these hard times—to the Choctaws and Chickasaws who are on the rolls, leaving out these others, you are subjecting this Government to a just claim; and this Congress and this Senate, or its successor, will be engaged later along in making an appropriation out of the National Treasury to pay to those who have been unjustly deprived of their shares of the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

EXPLORATION FOR AND DISPOSITION OF OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. VARDAMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment before the vote is taken?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to ask the indulgence of the chairman of the committee for a matter of very pressing and acute emergency legislation in regard to my own State.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It refers, Mr. President, to a condition that has arisen by reason of a decision of the Supreme Court within the last three or four days, which puts a stop to the largest and greatest industry in that State. If I may have five minutes, it is what is known as the Mid-West oil decision. It was a decision involving the validity of the first withdrawals of public lands. After the first withdrawals of public lands the oil situation developed in that western country and upon some of the withdrawn lands. It went on from year to year, until it has become the largest and best industry in my State. Those withdrawals having been sustained by the Supreme Court by a divided opinion, of course it leaves that industry in the air. They can do nothing, and the Secretary of the Interior has no power whatever to relieve the situation by leasing any of these lands to the parties now operating them.

There is upon the calendar of the Senate a House bill, a general leasing bill, which there is no prospect of having passed at this session. It is my purpose to call up that bill from the calendar and move to strike out all except the enacting clause, and to submit an amendment which covers that situation. I will say that the amendment is also included in the general leasing bill. The Secretary of the Interior has been consulted, the Committee on Public Lands of this body has been consulted, the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives has been consulted, and all agree that this is the only way by which this very acute and critical emergency may be met.

I ask leave to call up from the calendar Order of Business 837, House bill 16136.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 16136) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with—it is a somewhat lengthy bill—and that the amendment which I send to the desk may be acted upon. It proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This allows the Secretary of the Interior to make leases in these particular cases.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Wyoming moves to strike out all of House bill 16136 after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

> That upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States, within six months from the date of this act, by any locator or his successors in interest of his or their claim to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in an order of withdrawal, upon which oil or gas had been discovered, was being produced or upon which drilling operations were in actual progress January 1, 1914, and the claim to which land was initiated prior to July 3, 1910, or within 60 days after the final determination of the right to a patent for such lands, provided the said locator or his successor in interest shall apply for a patent for such lands within 60 days from the passage of this act and shall diligently prosecute the same to a conclusion, the Secretary of the Interior, upon a written application therefor may, within his discretion, lease, on such reasonable terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to such locator or his successors in interest the said lands so relinquished, or for which patent has been denied, not exceeding, however, the maximum area of 2,560 acres in any area 50 miles square to any one person, association, or corporation, said leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of a royalty of not more than one-eighth of the oil or gas extracted or produced from the leased premises or the proceeds thereof, each lease to be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for succeeding periods of 10 years, at a royalty not exceeding the maximum provided herein and upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.
> SEC. 2. That where public lands containing deposits of oil or gas were, prior to withdrawal thereof from mineral entry or location, occupied or claimed by bona fide claimant or claimants in good faith under the placer mining laws of the United States, and the claimant or claimants, or his or their assigns or successors in interest, has continued as the bona fide occupant or claimant of such lands, and since July 3, 1910, has diligently prosecuted such work as was necessary and designed to effect the discovery of oil or gas upon such lands, and has discovered oil or gas thereon prior to the passage of this act by the drilling of a well, such claim may be perfected under the provisions of said mining laws and a patent for the lands embraced therein issued.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Wyoming. Did these operators go on these lands and begin their operations after the orders of withdrawal?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. After the first order of withdrawal, some of them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They went upon the lands relying upon the illegality of the withdrawals, I suppose?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, they went upon the lands. There was a question, of course, as to the legality of the withdrawals.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suppose they had legal advice that the withdrawal was illegal?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, yes; there is a division of legal opinion everywhere. There was a divided court in deciding the question, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What court was that?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator means in this recent decision?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought the Senator had reference to some previous decision.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; this recent decision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was aware that the court was divided there. I believe Mr. Justice Day rendered the dissenting opinion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. Of course the decision in the court below was reversed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And they have been continuing operations up to this time. I will say to the Senator that it was an agreed case that went to the Supreme Court.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the entire terms and conditions of the proposed lease, if this bill should pass, are left to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It depends entirely upon the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the substitute which the Senator has offered limited to Wyoming?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; it is limited to lands in exactly the same position, some of them in California, some of them in Wyoming.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How are they described? How is that class of lands described in the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The class of lands is not described in the bill, but the class of entries is described.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In what way? The Senator will pardon me for asking so many questions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; I am trying to get my answer in as concise form as possible. It is those who entered upon the lands under claim of title prior to the time when we authorized the withdrawals in 1910, and some of them prior to the first withdrawal, but all of them prior to 1910, and who have continued in actual operation and in actual production.

Mr. POINDEXTER. All those conditions are specified there?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. All those conditions are specified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the exploration for and disposition of oil and gas."

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	James	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Johnson	Pittman	Smoot
Burton	Jones	Poindexter	Stone
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thompson
Chilton	Kern	Reed	Vardaman
Clapp	La Follette	Robinson	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Saulsbury	Warren
Crawford	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Weeks
Fall	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	White
Fletcher	Lippitt	Shields
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Hollis	Myers	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have responded to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I move to strike out, beginning at line 10, page 72, down to and including line 7, page 73.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 72 strike out, beginning in line 10 on that page, down to and including line 7 on page 73, the following words.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $200 per capita, in the case of the Choctaws, and $100 per capita in the case of the Chickasaws, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act, except where contracts have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law: And provided further, That such contract shall first be approved by the existing Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate may not consent to the payment of these funds until the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws shall be adjudicated and determined. I do not know that I can add anything to what I have already said in support of their just, moral right to participate in this estate. It is a matter known to Senators who have given any thought to the subject that every device, every scheme, that avarice could suggest or duplicity employ have been employed to defeat these people of their rights. Unscrupulous, shrewd, sagacious lawyers have been retained to keep these unfortunate, unlettered people to whose mind the ample page of knowledge has not been unfolded from finding out their rights and making it difficult when they are informed as to their rights for them to acquire them. Every obstacle was put in their way to deceive and mislead them. Groping in the darkness of ignorance they have fallen an easy prey to every snare that the hired lawyer and scheming politicians could lead them to.

The Federal Government owes it to these people to provide means, to employ counsel if need be, to set in motion the machinery which may be necessary to protect them. The Mississippi Choctaw has no money, he has no friends who will bestir themselves in his behalf. As I stated a moment ago, if you were to publish to-morrow in the newspapers of the State of Mississippi that there was a home awaiting him over in Oklahoma if he would pack up and go to it, unless somebody should carry the news to him 90 per cent of them would not find it out in six months.

There is no question at all, I take it, about the fact that these people are descendants of the Choctaws who exchanged their land in Mississippi and Alabama for the land in the Indian Territory under the treaty of 1820. There is no doubt about that at all. Is this Congress, this Government, the guardian of these unfortunate people, going to permit the Choctaws in Oklahoma, many of whom are more white than Indian, to take advantage of a technicality and rob the Mississippi Choctaws of their birthright? The suggestion is shocking to the moral sense of every right-thinking man. It is to my mind a gross abandonment by the guardian of the sacred interests of his ward.

Now, let the Government of the United States put the machinery into operation. Let honest, incorruptible, intelligent men be employed by the Government to go and take these wards of the Government in hand. Do justice by them, without the aid of the unscrupulous lawyers, whose only interest in the Indian is to fleece and plunder him.

I am not interested in the legal question involved. We are not sitting here as a court to interpret and enforce law. We are sitting here as a legislative body, whose function is to make laws and do justice. It is the duty of the Congress to see that its most helpless citizens—these silent, long-suffering stoics of the woods—shall be protected against the shrewdness, the chicanery, the avarice, and the greed of a few men who have grown rich by exploiting their property. The ward has become the victim and the guardian the plunderer.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up any further time of the Senate. I want the Senate to vote upon this matter. I should, however, like to have a full Senate here to vote upon it, and, of course, if the Senate determines to adopt this measure, the result of such acquiescence, denying to the Choctaw of Mississippi his right to the enjoyment of his interest in the estate of his fathers, the responsibility is with you. I leave the matter to your prudence and sense of duty.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	James	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Johnson	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Jones	Pittman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Poindexter	Stone
Chilton	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Clapp	La Follette	Reed	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Robinson	Walsh
Fall	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Warren
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Weeks
Gore	Lippitt	Sheppard	White
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Hollis	Myers	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to answer the arguments of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. I discussed this subject at great length last summer. I do not need to canvass that ground again. I do not mean to thrash that straw again, because nothing can be added. Moreover, I have too much respect for the weariness and exhaustion of the Senate at this hour.

Mr. President, the Mississippi Choctaws have been paid thrice over. Since that time they have been afforded seven opportunities to remove to Oklahoma and to establish their rights. All who have removed to Oklahoma have been generously treated, and those who could establish their blood are allowed to share the tribal estate in Oklahoma. This has cost the Oklahoma Indians some $1,800,000.

The proposition to once again pay the Mississippi Choctaws has only one argument and only one advantage in its favor, and that is the advantage of habit. It has been done so often that it seems to have crystallized into a habit on the part of our Mississippi Choctaw friends. To refuse this payment now would be a gross injustice to the Oklahoma Indians. It is not the Mississippi Choctaws alone who are Indians and who are in need. We are withholding from the Oklahoma Indians that money which they actually need, not merely for the comforts of life, but for the stern necessities of life.

I trust the Senate will not undertake to be generous to the Mississippi Choctaws at the expense of the Oklahoma Choctaws. If anybody is under any obligation to the Mississippi Choctaws it is the Government of the United States, and I shall join those who feel that they have such a claim in affording them an opportunity to have it tried out and adjudicated; but I appeal to the Senate to be just to the Choctaws of Oklahoma before they undertake to be generous to the Choctaws of Mississippi, especially at the expense of the Oklahoma Choctaws after their Mississippi friends have thrice been paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May we not have the amendment stated, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 10 on page 72 to line 7 on page 73.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). My pair is not transferable, but I desire to be counted for a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Not knowing how he would vote on this subject, I do not suppose I am at liberty to vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] voted, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENYON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I think he has not voted, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The present occupant of the chair transfers his pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and votes "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bankhead	Lane	Reed	Smoot
Burton	Lippitt	Sheppard	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Oliver	Shields	Weeks
La Follette	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.

NAYS—33.

Ashurst	Hollis	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Hughes	Newlands	Stone
Chilton	James	Owen	Thompson
Clapp	Johnson	Pittman	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Poindexter	Warren
Crawford	Kern	Pomerene	White
Fall	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Shafroth

NOT VOTING—48.

Borah	du Pont	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brady	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Goff	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Bristow	Gronna	Overman	Sterling
Burleigh	Hardwick	Page	Sutherland

Culberson	McCumber	Sherman	Townsend
Cummins	McLean	Shively	Williams
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi the yeas are 15 and the nays are 33. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] having announced their pairs, and being present in the Chamber, a quorum has voted. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi is rejected. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to offer the amendment which I send to the desk to be added to the paragraph which has been under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjudicate those applications for enrollment upon the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes which were pending unadjudicated in the department on December 1, 1906, and also those which came to said department between said date and the final closing of the rolls on March 4, 1907, and to add to the appropriate rolls the names of those persons shown to be entitled equitably to such enrollment: Provided, That such readjudication shall be made upon the record as it stood on March 4, 1907: And provided further, That upon such enrollment the said Secretary shall pay to each of said enrolled persons, in lieu of an allotment of land, the sum of money directed to be paid to each person enrolled upon said rolls by the act of August 1, 1914.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I realize the difficulty of getting the attention of Senators to any serious consideration of this important matter at this hour. We have been driving along here from early morning until now, worn by more than 15 continuous hours of work in committees and on this floor and we are now waked out of sleep and called into the Chamber to vote upon amendments to this appropriation bill, I think, without really understanding the effect of our votes.

The amendment which I have offered, Mr. President, is not to reopen the Choctaw rolls. I believe if this amendment is adopted it will save—I think I know that it will save—the Government two or three or four million dollars. Congress never will be able to escape the payment out of the Federal Treasury of the claims that will be presented by those who are entitled but who have been denied their right to a distributive share in this property unless some provision is made for a rehearing in those cases which admittedly were disposed of without the careful consideration to which they were entitled.

These Indians are the wards of the Government, and the Government is charged with the distribution of their property. Congress in 1906 passed an act fixing an arbitrary time limit within which all claims for enrollment must be presented and finally determined. That time limit expired on the 4th of March, 1907. So many claims and such a mass of testimony were presented to the Secretary of the Interior, who was finally adjudicating these cases, that it became utterly impossible for him to give them any consideration. As early as the 12th of January just prior to the 4th of March, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior appealed to Congress for more time within which to consider these cases. Congress ignored that communication. Again, on the 1st of March the Secretary of the Interior called the attention of Congress to the fact that it was utterly impossible to consider and pass upon those claims within the fixed time limit. Again, on the 2d of March and again on the 4th of March the Secretary reported to the President of the Senate fully stating the large number of unadjudicated cases pending and frankly setting forth the absolute impossibility of disposing of them in a just and orderly manner.

Mr. President, I have here, if the Senate has the patience to listen to it, the record evidence to back up and support my statement.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. To my mind there is no question whatever that this amendment should be adopted. I have tried time and again to get an amendment limited to this situation without opening the entire question; and I should think that the Senator from Oklahoma would accept this amendment—though, of course, I can not speak for him—but if he can, it will save discussion, and I know the Senator from Wisconsin does not care to discuss the matter beyond the necessity of argument.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, we can not possibly consider such an amendment, and the most complete answer is available.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not yield now in the middle of my remarks for any statement of that sort.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator will pardon me, but I supposed that the amendment might be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As many Senators as desire to do so can quit the Chamber, but now I am going to put into the Record the evidence upon which Senators must have some fixed responsibility for the votes they cast. In an effort to condense as much as possible what I have to say, I have dictated it.

The governments of each of the Five Civilized Tribes during all of their history until 1896 had full control of their tribal membership.

They settled the question as to who had a right to belong to the tribe. They maintained tribal authorities, whose duty it was to pass upon the qualifications for membership and to admit or reject to such membership. In 1896 by an act of Congress the United States took control of this enrollment matter. It provided that thereafter the commission known as the Dawes Commission should make the rolls of these tribes. It became the plain duty of the Government to see that all persons entitled were enrolled.

The object of this enrollment was to make a basis for the distribution of tribal property. The Dawes Commission was to determine the number of beneficiaries, in order that the property might be distributed by the United States. In regard to the obligation resting upon the United States under this act, Joseph W. Howell, an attorney in the Interior Department, who had been intimately connected with the enrollment matters of these tribes for many years, in a report to the Secretary on March 3, 1909, at page 104 of Senate Document 1139, Sixty-second Congress, third session, has the following to say.

Mr. Howell, speaking of the Government having undertaken the work of enrollment, says:

> Having once undertaken it, it was incumbent upon the Government to discharge the duty in an orderly manner and only after full consideration of the matter, otherwise there could not fail to result a train of errors which would necessarily cry out for correction for many years to come.

During the 10 years which followed 1896 various agreements were entered into with these five tribes, and various acts of Congress were passed which changed the methods of procedure of the commission and provided for appeals from its decisions. In 1906 Congress provided that after March 4, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior should have no jurisdiction to add to the rolls of any of said tribes. The magnitude of the work had been such that this arbitrary time limit rendered it impossible for the Interior Department to complete the consideration of the cases pending before it.

In regard to this provision of law contained in the act of April 26, 1906, Mr. Howell, in the same report, from which quotation has heretofore been made, on page 127, had the following to say:

> Time has shown that it was an absolute physical impossibility to complete the work within the time prescribed in this statute. The fact is that the work was not and could not be completed by March 4, 1907, and the department is required each day to confront difficulties and to struggle with complicated questions which seem utterly beyond solution under its present jurisdiction. It might perhaps have been possible for the department to complete the enrollment work within the time given it by Congress for that purpose, to wit, approximately one year, had there been no extra duties placed upon the Secretary by said act. I have learned from the office of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes that the new work arising under that act, by reason of the provisions therein relating to the enrollment of children living March 4, 1906, was of itself sufficient to provide work enough to last for one year. The result was that two years' work was thrown upon the department by the act, and only one year was given in which to accomplish it.

On page 130 of the same report Mr. Howell makes further comment in the following words:

> With the extra work imposed by the act itself in connection with the enrollment of the new-born children, it became absolutely impossible for the department to complete the work within the time prescribed, and to-day it may be said with perfect truthfulness that the word "complete" falls far short of describing the condition of the enrollment work and the citizenship rolls, as of March 4, 1907.

On January 12 the department, realizing that it was an impossibility to complete this work of enrollment prior to the following March 4, forwarded to the Senate a report from the Indian Office, in which it was recommended that an extension of at least one year be granted. This letter of transmittal by the Secretary read, in part, as follows (p. 131, S. Doc. 1139):

> "The department concurs in the views of the Indian Office. Unless the time is extended, many persons entitled to enrollment will not be enrolled. The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and the commissioner have been for years taking testimony and rendering decisions in cases involving complicated questions of citizenship in these tribes, and some of the cases have not yet reached the department.
> "While the department has disposed of most of the citizenship cases which have come before it, it apparently can not give due consideration to all the cases still pending and to be submitted by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Indian Office within the time prescribed by the second section of the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat., 137)."

In a letter of March 1, 1907, further report was made to the President of the Senate showing the number of cases which were pending in the office of the Secretary of the Interior on February 25, 1907, together with the number of persons included in said cases. Report was also made in said letter showing the number of cases received in the Secretary's office from the Indian Office between February 25 and March 1, 1907, together with the number of persons affected thereby.

March 2, 1907, the President of the Senate was further advised concerning the number of cases pending before the Department of the Interior.

Final report on this subject was made March 4, 1907, to the President of the Senate. Therein it was shown that there were 2,023 cases before the Secretary of the Interior which required examination and decision after February 25, 1907, and on or before March 4, 1907.

Congress failed to respond to these recommendations for an extension of time within which the Interior Department might adjudicate in an orderly manner cases then pending before it. In regard to the condition which resulted from this failure to extend the time, Mr. Howell, on page 137, says:

> If the plain truth be stated, it must be said that the condition of the enrollment work on March 4, 1907, was far from finished; because of this fact the department was compelled to cope with a situation most confusing. It was plunged into litigation, the end of which has not been reached.

I read from page 138:

> Throughout the work many novel questions arose for which no precedents could be found. It was inevitable that mistakes should be made in construction and that work could not be completed upon the first attempt. Moreover, no one could anticipate the amount of work which was likely to arise, and new men could not be trained to be of value in less than a year. Coupled with all the other difficulties was the unceasing pressure which was brought upon the department not only from Congress, but from other sources, to hurry the work along.
> I have mentioned these difficulties in order that it may be realized fully that the arbitrary closing of the rolls on March 4, 1907, was unreasonable, in view of all the circumstances, and necessarily worked great injustice to many persons.

The department during these years of enrollment work evidently were confronted by very adverse conditions. It appears that the tribal authorities contended that the United States should not have taken from them jurisdiction over their own rolls. They therefore refused to deliver to the commission rolls and other records necessary under the law for a determination of the questions of blood and affiliation which were presented.

The nation employed attorneys for the purpose of contesting further enrollment, and it is evident from all the hearings and records that these attorneys by their action further complicated the situation. In regard to the failure of the tribal authorities to deliver rolls and records, and in regard to the action of the tribal attorneys, Mr. Howell, on pages 142, 144, and 146, reports as follows:

> This roll was made up of books by counties. It was probably the best preserved and most complete roll of the Choctaw Nation in possession of the commission. According to the report of the commission of January 24, 1903, it was discovered and delivered to the commission during the latter part of the year 1902. It was indexed some time between January and April, 1903. Looking back for a moment it will be remembered that the act of June 10, 1896, requiring the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, in adjudicating cases thereunder, to give due force and effect to the rolls of the said tribes. It is, therefore, very much in point to note that, notwithstanding the requirements of the law, the commission never saw or used this roll for more than six years after said act of June 10, 1896. These facts bring to mind the said act of May 31, 1900, and in connection therewith it should also be noted that, notwithstanding the limitations therein restricting the jurisdiction of the commission to enrolled or admitted citizens, this roll of 1885, constituting a part of the very foundation of the commission's work, was not received until more than two years after its date.

That is, until 1903, more than two years after the date of the act of May 31, 1900.

Now, Mr. President, it developed that some of these rolls disappeared. There were some attorneys employed by these tribes to keep people off the rolls. The distributive share of each Indian was in excess of $4,000. It was agreed between these attorneys and the tribes that the attorneys should have a commission or a contingent fee of 9 per cent for each Indian they kept off the rolls. They came to the Interior Department with this contract, and sought to get a confirmation of and approval of it under the law. The Secretary of the Interior refused to approve it unless these attorneys would accept a fixed limitation of $225,000 for their work as the maximum which they should be entitled to under the contract. However, I will not digress, but will adhere to a discussion of this evidence.

Mr. President, the line of procedure adopted by Mr. HOWELL in making this investigation is described by him on pages 158 and 159, Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress:

I arranged an itinerary and requested the district agents to send out word through their interpreters, Indian policemen, etc., of my proposed coming and to make arrangements to enable me to come into contact with as many persons as possible. I thought it well, however, to instruct them not to give notice of my itinerary to the press, for I knew that I would be unable, in the one or two days at my disposal at each office, to meet and examine all of the persons who might be thus induced to try to see me. The most that I could hope for was to get a general idea of the situation.

At the various appointments I met and examined all persons who desired to see me concerning matters of enrollment, taking due care to inform them beforehand that my visit was not the result of any change in the law, and that they were not to understand that they were making application to me for enrollment. I explained to them instead that I came as the representative of the Secretary of the Interior in order that he might obtain information directly concerning them. I encouraged the people to be frank in their statements, but informed them that whatever they said would be made a matter of record and could be compared at any time with former statements made by such of them as had theretofore been heard by the commission. A stenographer accompanied me and made a report of all statements; subsequently he furnished me with a typewritten transcript of his notes, copy of which is inclosed as Exhibit F. In order that we might not be compelled to rely alone upon the statements of the applicants, I also carried with me a camera, furnished by the Geological Survey, and secured pictures, inclosed as Exhibit G, of many of the persons who appeared before me. This was not possible, however, in all places, for the examinations were conducted upon several occasions until late in the evening. Through the investigation in this way my information concerning a considerable number of applicants came from the people themselves. I was careful to have it understood beforehand that no attorney nor agent would be allowed to be present. I did this in order that the claimants would be left free to answer entirely according to their own ideas and the promptings of their own minds. I did not, however, wish to avoid meeting attorneys and agents, and whenever possible met and conversed with them, as with other individuals, noting in fact that they were able to throw a great deal of light upon the situation. The district Indian agents proved another source of much value. They have now been in the field sufficiently long to be acquainted with many Indians, through whom they have heard of deserving and equitable cases of persons omitted from the rolls. These men, with the aid of the assistant agents, the Indian policemen, and the Indian interpreters, brought to my attention a considerable number of cases of people who, for various reasons, were unable to meet me, and whose enrollment would perhaps never be accomplished under any circumstances if they were left to take the initiative unaided by the Government. Another source of information which proved particularly valuable was the tribal officials and public men who are members of the Indian nations. These men have a widespread acquaintance, and when interviewed did not hesitate to give me freely the information at their disposal. I also conferred with a number of men in public life, such as superintendents of Indian schools, heads of public institutions, and the like. From all of these I gathered information relating to a large number of persons. It will, of course, be impossible for me to give a detailed statement concerning each case; but, instead, I will confine myself to a statement of my impressions of the situation taken as a whole and describe by classes the persons whose cases deserve special consideration.

I was strongly impressed with the fact that as a general rule persons having the most meritorious cases were the least able to take the necessary steps to secure their enrollment. I found that such persons were frequently unable to undergo the expense of traveling by rail, even a few miles, in order to have their cases investigated. Distance, though short, was an impassable barrier between them and their rights, and when it came to leaving their homes and incurring hotel expenses, even for a short time, the impossibility of their doing anything for themselves was still more certain. This condition of affairs can not be readily appreciated from Washington, or even from Muskogee, but when one is in the field going from place to place he can feel keenly that persons laboring under extreme poverty, ignorance, ill health, or other disabilities must be assisted by the Government of the United States through affirmative action on its part if their cases are to be thoroughly investigated. To many such persons a few dollars in the hand means more than the vague and shadowy prospect of an allotment worth thousands of dollars to be received some time in the indefinite future.

It is very evident, Mr. President, that Mr. Howell's examination was a thorough one, and at the same time it was so guarded as to prevent his accepting fictitious cases. Remember, Mr. Howell was investigating the cases, records of which had been before him during the rush period immediately preceding March 4, 1907, cases which the department had been forced, on account of the lack of time, to simply mark "denied." He was investigating the very cases which are now being urged for reconsideration.

In regard to what should be done in order to correct the errors which have resulted from the hasty disposition of the many cases which passed through the department between December 1, 1906, and March 4, 1907, Mr. Howell says, pages 175 and 176:

ACTION WHICH SHOULD BE TAKEN TO COMPLETE UNFINISHED WORK, TO CORRECT OBVIOUS ERRORS, AND TO ADJUST INEQUALITIES.

Time has demonstrated that the work of enrollment was in an unfinished condition on March 4, 1907; that cases were inadvertently overlooked in the course of adjudication; that a considerable number of people failed to secure their citizenship rights through administrative causes; that mistakes in names and classification were made; that there was inequality of opportunity, and that various other unintentional wrongs were committed, with the result that persons similarly situated have not been accorded equal rights under the law.

The laws mentioned hereinbefore, governing the work of enrollment, were of a general nature well calculated to secure quick results in the disposition of ordinary cases which did not involve complicated or unusual questions, but those laws were not of such a nature as to render it possible to make proper disposition of special cases involving unforeseen circumstances, unexpected questions, and great hardship.

It is now apparent that these general laws should have been followed by laws of broader scope and of a less technical nature, increasing the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior to such a degree as to enable him to dispense justice untrammeled by jurisdictional limitations.

Substantial justice may be done without further opening of the rolls. As originally and properly used, this expression related to the admission of new classes of people—for example, persons who died prior to or were born after a given date—but it is obvious that it has no proper reference to the completion of unfinished business or to the correction of mistakes. It was to be presumed as a matter of course that a given class having been granted the privilege of making application, submitting testimony, and making up records, would be entitled to have the work relating to their class completed rather than abandoned when in an unfinished condition. Nor is it to be presumed that the United States ever intended this condition of affairs to come to pass. Otherwise, the Government would be guilty of exercising bad faith in the treatment of its wards.

Even the time allowed might have proved sufficient for the disposition of the work then on hand, but the very act which provided for the termination of the enrollment work at a given date also imposed another year's work upon the department in the enrollment of minor children. This fact, taken in connection with the many other duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Interior, had much to do in bringing about the present situation.

The Secretary of the Interior should now be vested with a jurisdiction which will enable him to apply equitable remedies to the situation. A court of equity, in the performance of its regular functions, would not hesitate to correct a deed by changing the name of a party or modifying a description of land, or otherwise to reform an instrument in order to make it conform to the intention of the parties. In like manner the jurisdiction which should now be conferred upon the Department of the Interior would enable it to correct mistakes due to obvious error, thereby securing an early settlement of mooted questions and reducing the probability of prolonged litigation.

To rectify wrongs unintentionally done subsequent to January 1, 1907, I firmly believe that the department should be vested with jurisdiction to review all cases which were denied enrollment by the Secretary, or otherwise passed upon adversely by him or his office, subsequent to that date, with power in the Secretary of the Interior to correct obvious errors wherever found. If this be done, provision will be made to cover a large percentage of the meritorious cases.

It should be remembered that the cases investigated by Mr. Howell have not been investigated by any other officer of the department. It has been contended that the investigation made by Mr. Pollock, to which reference is frequently made, covered all of the cases which the department has investigated.

It is contended that these persons enrolled upon the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes by the act of August 1, 1914—public, No. 160, Sixty-third Congress, page 21—are all the persons who have been erroneously omitted from these rolls.

This act of August 1, 1914, enrolled 315 persons. Two hundred and ninety-seven of these people are persons found in what is known as the Pollock list, set out in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress, at pages 44 to 92, inclusive. It will be noticed that this list is headed:

List of persons apparently entitled to enrollment, but whose names were omitted because no application was made or by reason of mistake or oversight.

It will further be seen that Mr. Pollock's list contains the names of 515 persons entitled to enrollment. Of these only 297 have been enrolled. What is to be done with the remainder?

It should be remembered that when Mr. Pollock made this investigation his instructions were to investigate cases of persons who had made no applications.

On page 40 of the Senate document above referred to will be found an extract from his instructions which he quotes in his report and which reads as follows:

You will give special attention to the matter of adding names to the rolls of citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes making such investigation and taking such testimony as you and the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, with whom you will cooperate in this matter, may determine to be necessary. The cases to be investigated are those of minor orphan children, incompetents, and Indians in incarceration, whose claims were not presented for adjudication, and such other cases as have unusual merit.

At the bottom of page 41 of the above-mentioned report Mr. Pollock says:

A large majority of the cases brought forward in these nations (Choctaw and Chickasaw) were those which theretofore had been presented, considered, and decided by some duly constituted tribunal. The records had been made up and there was no occasion for a further investigation in the field. They were not of the class contemplated by the instructions under which the investigation was being made. Testimony was heard in a few of these cases upon the urgent insistence of the parties, with the distinct understanding in each instance that the case was not then under consideration, and that the additional testimony would simply be filed with the record already made up. The attorneys for the nation objected to the examination of any witnesses in such cases, claiming with force that those cases had been finally adjudicated and that there remained no jurisdiction to reopen or take any action in connection therewith.

This portion of Mr. Pollock's report referred to requests made to him for investigation of some of the many cases arbitrarily disposed of by the Interior Department within the last few days immediately preceding the 4th of March, 1907.

From the Howell report it appears that in six days preceding March 4, 1907, the department disposed of 2,023 records, and that in all of these the applicants were rejected.

It will be contended that if provision is now made for further consideration by the Interior Department, in a few years other applicants will appear and the matter will never end.

This is not a good reason for not directing the Interior Department to complete the work which it admittedly was unable to do immediately prior to March 4, 1907. No court would deny a motion for rehearing, and Congress should not.

[At this point Mr. VARDAMAN conferred with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I will give way for anything that will promote a better attendance. I think if you can get the river and harbor bill or the omnibus claims bill up you will have a pretty full House here in a little while.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator knows that I have given him attention, and I am in no sense hostile to this amendment. I am not in any sense hostile to it. I do not like the dogmatic way in which Senators wave aside amendments. I have a mighty good notion now, so far as I can, to accept this amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, you will get rid of a pretty long speech if you do.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to get rid of a long speech.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I would be glad to save the time for other business. I know there is pressing business before the Senate; but if I can save three or four million dollars to the Public Treasury, which will be taken from it to pay the legitimate claims of these Indians, if the tribal property is distributed without recognizing their rights, I am willing to go on all night.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I hope nobody will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield, and to whom?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to anybody who wants to interrupt me, just so that I do not yield the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator yield to me to prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment. I give notice now that if we adjourn to-night, it is "farewell, river and harbor bill." If the Senate adjourns without passing the Indian bill you can make up your minds that there will be no river and harbor bill and no claims bill. Now, we might as well be frank about this. The Indian bill must be passed to-night or there will be no river and harbor bill. I am a pretty good man physically, and I think I can stand on my feet about 20 hours. A fair warning is all you are entitled to. Pass the Indian bill now, or your river and harbor bill will be as dead as a mackerel on the shining sands.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator makes that statement without full reflection. The Senator has devoted four or five days to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so far as I am authorized to do so I accept the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRYAN. If that can be done, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Oklahoma Senators do not like it, and object to it, all right. I can not help it. I want this bill passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let us vote on it.

Mr. OWEN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. ASHURST. When I say I accept it——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not want to make a speech, but I——

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not want this amendment voted down.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to vote for the amendment. If it is voted down, the Senator can offer it again in the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me say just one word in conclusion and I will submit it to a vote. The great objection which has always been interposed to admitting any other Indians to these rolls has been that fraud was committed and fraud attempted in the cases that were disposed of before this rush period just prior to March 4, 1907.

Mr. OWEN (in his seat). I have a speech several hours long.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want it understood that this——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield and to whom?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not yielding to anyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was so much audible conversation upon the floor that the Chair concluded the Senator was yielding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Oklahoma is going to argue the matter, I want to continue my presentation. If he expresses his willingness——

Mr. OWEN. I do not want to take any time about it. I can answer the Senator's argument in five minutes and that is all I want. But I do not think the Senator ought, under the intimidating influence of a long speech, force us into something we do not want. I do not think that is quite fair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; I do not want to force the Senate into accepting anything here that does not meet the judgment of Senators who vote upon it. Of course I do not think it is quite fair to have my amendment voted on by Senators who stay off the floor when it is presented and when the argument upon it is made and then come in and vote it down without in many cases knowing the merits of the proposition.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield to me a moment to ask a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. FALL. I am, of course, impressed with the sincerity of the Senator, but he has stated his purpose to save cost to the United States. Is it not a fact that if five years from now it were really found that these Choctaws whom the Senator is speaking for are entitled to be enrolled there is still enough Choctaw property to pay them ten times over without its costing the Government of the United States anything?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I do not know about that, Mr. President. If this distribution goes on as it has been proceeding, a little each year—that is, $200,000 one year, a million or two the next—I do not know just how long these funds will last. I do not know just what property these tribes have remaining undistributed.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will permit me, the Secretary of the Interior——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. OWEN. The Secretary reports that there are $23,000,000 of undistributed Choctaw property, so that $4,000,000 would really make no difference on that ground.

Mr. FALL. That was the point I was going to submit.

Mr. OWEN. It might at some future time if this distribution should be made on a larger scale.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I believe in the validity of the claims of these Indians. I believe that every time this claim is presented, every time this subject comes up in Congress, and without getting a fair hearing is rejected, it confirms the action theretofore taken and makes it harder each time to get a patient hearing by Congress. I think the matter ought to be thoroughly thrashed out.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield just one moment more?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I simply want to state in justice to some of the Senators, at least to myself, that I have been on the floor the greater portion of time during the Senator's speech; that I think I have made about as thorough a study of this question as any one Senator, and I vote, I think, knowingly on the subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was going to say that the proposition I have submitted here, the amendment which I have offered, does not propose to open these cases to the presentation of testimony. It merely proposes to take the cases that were before the Interior Department in those few months known as the rush period—from December 1, 1906, to March 4, 1907, a period of about three months—and on the records of the Interior Department as they existed on that date that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to try out the equitable rights of those people to be placed upon the rolls. If they are found equitably entitled to be upon the rolls, the Secretary is directed to enroll them. Now, that does not open the rolls to opportunity for fraud. It takes the records of the Interior Department as made at that time, the cases which were not considered upon their merits, about which the Secretary of the Interior warned Congress three or four times in five or six weeks that he did not have time to consider.

Mr. President, I trust the Senate will not shut the door on these people now, as has heretofore been done, on a very imperfect hearing. I believe that if Senators understand the merits of this case it can not possibly fail of receiving favorable action here and now.

Mr. President, it is in evidence in this case that these attorneys who had this contract with the Choctaw Tribe, which contract the Secretary of the Interior would not approve—a contract for 9 per cent of $4,000 for every Indian they kept off—came to Congress 11 days after the Secretary refused approval and secured an amendment put on some bill—an appropriation bill, probably—authorizing what was known as the citizenship court—a specially created court, a legislative court down in Oklahoma—authorizing it to pass upon the amount of attorneys' fees they should receive. The department placed a maximum of $225,000 as the value of their services. Under the approval of the citizenship court the attorneys took a fee of $750,000. And there went out of this appropriation bill to-day a proposition under which these same attorneys would have been authorized to have gone into the courts with their old contract for 9 per cent and then present their claim de novo. These attorneys had a pretty strong reason for not allowing the Secretary of the Interior or the Dawes Commission or anybody else to get the evidence which would deprive them of 4 per cent of $4,000 for every Indian they kept off. That was the percentage this legislative court fixed and permitted them to have.

It is in evidence over and over again that they got wagonloads of the records out of the archives of these Indian tribes, records which determined the right of people to be on this roll; and that they locked them up; that they never submitted these records to the Dawes Commission; and that, as a result, people were not able to make good their right who should have, in justice, been placed upon these rolls. In these records was found, after the rolls were closed, the proof of right to enrollment.

Mr. President, a statute was passed by Congress making it a penal offense for anybody to retain the rolls and records of these Indian tribes, and it was only when the Secretary of the Interior, under its provisions, put the screws to these gentlemen that those rolls and that evidence were surrendered. The statute making the retention of these records a penal offense was enacted one year after Congress had refused to listen to the appeals of the Secretary of the Interior for an extension of time within which to adjudicate these cases in an orderly manner.

Mr. President, I want to say to Senators who have come in here and listened 10 or 15 minutes to this discussion that I had a connected argument which I intended following. I have abandoned that. I am going to stop now and reserve the right to speak again on this amendment if I find it advisable after the Senator from Oklahoma or anyone else speaks on the other side.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall take only two or three minutes to answer the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Dawes Commission, authorized by the act of 1896 to make these rolls, had control of and access to the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, and had little or no difficulty with regard to the enrollment of those who were confessedly members of that community. There were, however, a very large number of people desiring to be enrolled, because the citizenship of the Choctaw Nation was worth approximately $8,000 apiece. For a family of five it amounted to a value of $40,000. The consequence was that every person who could claim to be remotely of Indian blood, and there were many who were shown to be Mexicans and negroes claiming to be Choctaw Indians, came in and demanded to be enrolled. Cases involving large numbers of claimants were proven to be based on perjured testimony, proved to be perjured testimony in case after case. Those people who were avowedly known to be members of that community had no difficulty in being enrolled, but it was with the greatest difficulty and greatest expense that the Government of the United States met perjury.

It has been shown in the hearings before the Senate committee that there was a single witness upon whose testimony 250 people were wrongfully admitted. He was brought before the citizenship court, and was before the court cross-examined, and he falsely and absurdly testified that the chief justice of that court was himself a full-blood Indian. His testimony was proven to be perfectly fraudulent and utterly worthless. The chief justice sat there hearing this Choctaw citizenship witness give this testimony, describing the chief justice himself as being a full-blood Indian, when he notoriously had no Indian blood whatever.

The Dawes Commission heard these citizenship cases for 10 years. Appeal after appeal was made from the Dawes Commission to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, appeals from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, then upon some technicality sent back to the Dawes Commission for a rehearing, and appeal again to the commissioner and to the Secretary, such cases sent back sometimes two or three times. Finally after 10 long years Congress passed an act requiring these rolls to be closed as of the 4th of March, 1907.

There remained after these 10 tedious years a number of cases that had dragged along which finally were sent in to the Secretary of the Interior during the last two or three months preceding March 4, 1907. These were cases nearly all of which had been repeatedly before the department prior to that time. I doubt if there was a single case that had not previously been passed upon by the department itself, but the Dawes Commission was the tribunal authorized to make these rolls, and they had these rolls before them for 11 years. Is there never to be an end of controversy? Is that country never going to have its peace? These Indians gave up their tribal governments, they gave up their right to be independent tribes, they agreed to allot their lands, to become citizens of the United States, to become citizens of a new State, and in exchange for these great concessions the Government agreed to distribute their property to them per capita, and now, after all this time has elapsed, from 1898 to 1915, 17 years since the promise was made of the distribution, the pitiful per capita of $200 apiece is vehemently denounced and Congress is urged not to allow it, and attorneys representing these claimants are here trying to prevent even school privileges being provided for these people.

Mr. FALL. I wish to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Is the Senator familiar with any of the attorneys' contracts—the contracts for fees?

Mr. OWEN. No; I am not familiar with them. There was a record made in regard to it, but I am not really familiar with it.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator know what percentage the outstanding contracts now are bearing; that is, the Indians agreeing to pay the attorneys representing these claims?

Mr. OWEN. I do not really remember just what it was. It was quite large, I believe. The Senator refers to the Ballinger contract?

Mr. FALL. Yes; the Ballinger and various other contracts, running from 25 to 50 per cent of recovery. Has the Senator any recollection about it?

Mr. OWEN. I recall seeing the record of these contracts. I have finished all I wish to say. I only should like to say that this matter has been brought up time and time again since the rolls were closed, and four different Secretaries of the Interior since 1907 have reported adversely on reopening these rolls. The last adverse report was that of Franklin K. Lane, which I put in the RECORD to-night. In referring particularly to the Mississippi Choctaws he says, in substance:

> In view of the facts presented to me I am of the opinion that no legislation should be enacted for the reopening of the rolls for the benefit of the Mississippi Choctaw claims.

Here is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, April 24, 1914. They searched these records from 1907 to 1914 to find whether anybody had been left off erroneously, and they made this report. It was written to me after I inquired of him if any persons were entitled to be enrolled.

> APRIL 24, 1914.
> In response to your request of April 22 I am inclosing herewith a list of the names of persons who, upon the investigation heretofore made, have been found apparently equitably entitled to enrollment on the rolls of the various tribes composing the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma—

This was written April 24, 1914, seven years after the rolls had been closed—

The data as to each of these names have heretofore been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and may be found in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

This list contains the names of all those whom the department has found equitably entitled to enrollment, omitting, as suggested, the names of newborn Choctaw freedmen.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

I do not want to take any more time of the Senate, because I know the Senate is exhausted. Those names were put in the bill and they are now enrolled.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, first with respect to attorney's contracts. Upon the Indian bill two years ago Congress placed a provision making it illegal for an attorney to enter into a contract with an Indian for the recovery of property or money from the United States without first obtaining the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Last year Congress placed on the Indian appropriation bill a provision making it illegal for any attorney to enter into a contract with applicants for enrollment on the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, and voiding all such contracts made prior to that time.

Mr. President and Senators, I am not arguing for this provision to secure a fee for some lawyer. I am standing here to save, as far as I am able, this Government from being assessed—the people of the whole country ultimately from being assessed—to pay to the wards of the Nation for the distribution of their property to others, denying them the right to which the examination of the record would show they were entitled.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior which the Senator from Oklahoma referred to just now relates to inquiries addressed to the Secretary of the Interior as to those entitled to be on the rolls, as shown by an investigation made by a Mr. Pollock. That investigation was made after this Howell investigation, and was made pursuant to a carefully managed plan that limited his investigation to newborn and incompetent Indians.

It made no pretense of having investigated the claims of the Indians who were shown by the records to be as much entitled to be on this roll as was the chief of the tribe. These cases, the Senator from Oklahoma says, were heard time and again by the Dawes Commission, and that such commission was the body authorized by Congress to make this investigation. The law provided an appeal from the Dawes Commission to the Secretary of the Interior, and these Indians were entitled to have these appeals fully heard. Almost the first duty that I performed when I came to the Senate as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs was to listen to a review of the work of the Dawes Commission in passing upon these cases. I then got the impression upon my mind in a way which I can never forget, that there were many—I do not know how many—but that there were many, many Indians entitled to be upon these rolls who never had a chance to be heard upon the merits of their cases either before the commission or upon appeal before the Secretary.

In the last hours of the life of the Dawes Commission, as in the last days of the time when the Secretary of the Interior was pleading with Congress for an opportunity to better examine these records, it is in proof in this case that the Dawes Commission disposed of hundreds and hundreds of cases. It appears that in the last hours before the time expired only two minutes in time, as shown by their records, could have been given to the consideration of each of these cases, adjudicating the rights of Indians and of their children to share in this property—Indians who had been born to the allegiance of the tribe, who had lived with the tribe, and had always been recognized by the tribe as being members thereof.

It is in evidence—well, Mr. President, I must not yield to my desire to discuss this evidence. I will not at this time, and with the congested condition of business on the calendar, take another moment, but am content that the amendment be submitted to a vote.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to say simply a word in regard to this subject. So far as voting to open the rolls down there is concerned, generally speaking, I could not think of doing so. While perhaps there is here and there an individual whose name ought to have gone on the roll that has not gone on it, I realize that to open the rolls generally would lead to a condition that would be infinitely worse in its evil results than the loss here and there to an individual; but there were these rolls in the department at that time; the time had been fixed to close the work of the department; and since then I have tried several times to get parties to come to an understanding involved in the amendment now offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], but every time we have drawn or sought to draw up or prepare such an amendment, an effort would be made to put language in it to enlarge it and open up the rolls generally. So I never have stood for any of it.

Now, I realize how the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] desires that this matter shall be closed; but the trouble is, I say to him in all frankness and candor, that I do not believe the matter will ever be settled until the department is authorized not to open the rolls, not by a law that opens the court to those who claim they are entitled to enrollment, but by legislation, like this amendment, limit the department itself and the investigation to the act of the department in readjudicating those cases that were before it on the 1st day of December, 1906 and those who came before the department between that time and the 4th day of March, 1907. I believe that until that time does come every Indian appropriation bill that comes before Congress will be the subject of a controversy in regard to this subject, and that as to every Indian appropriation bill that comes before Congress, especially in the closing hours of a session, its passage will be jeopardized by an attempt to open those rolls and the effort to prevent the consummation of that attempt. I believe this limits it. It is not the opening of the rolls; it need not create any general, widespread thought in Oklahoma that conditions are unsettled. It simply goes to the extent of authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to reexamine and readjudicate these cases upon the record that was before him on the 4th of March, 1907.

Much as I regret to vote against the views of the Senator from Oklahoma with reference to a matter in his own State, I believe the only solution, the only way to put an end to this controversy that looms up upon every occasion of the passage of an Indian appropriation bill is to adopt an amendment like this. Therefore I shall feel constrained to vote for the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I had not intended to say a word, but I myself have some little knowledge of the propositions involved in these amendments. I knew these people 32 years ago in the Choctaw Nation, and I have known them ever since. I know something of the history of the Choctaw Tribe and the enrollments.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] seems to think that if this amendment is adopted it will close the whole proposition. There are over 8,000 claimants who are persisting in forcing their claims at every session of Congress. As to the limitation of this particular amendment, if it would have the effect of closing these rolls and settling this matter definitely once for all, if that was the object, why was not the amendment offered sooner and before any effort was made to close the rolls once for all? Why was it not offered last year or at some previous time, so as to have the whole question closed?

Mr. OWEN. We thought we were closing them last year.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] knows perfectly well that the adoption of this amendment will not settle the question of the Choctaw rolls and that Congress could not settle it if it were to provide in so many words by legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. This amendment, it seems to me, draws a line so plainly between those cases that do strongly appeal to Senators and Representatives—and sooner or later they will make a successful appeal, I believe—and the other cases that I had no compunction in voting against the amendments that have been offered to open these rolls, but I would have compunctions in voting against this amendment.

Mr. FALL. That is quite satisfactory to the Senator himself, but it settles nothing at all. In 5 minutes more or in 15 minutes more or in one month more, if this amendment is adopted, another amendment might be offered placing some other Choctaws on the rolls or some other Chickasaws on the rolls. The Senator says that the question will never be ended until this amendment is adopted. I say to you that this question never will be ended until the Indian Committee ceases to sit day after day listening to attorneys who are paid to try to get Choctaws on these rolls, where they do not belong.

It never will be settled until this body ceases to listen to it, as they have been listening to it year after year. It never will be settled unless when Congress establishes a commission it will abide by the decision of that commission. If Congress will sit here and listen year after year at every session to this matter being opened up, it will never be settled. Never so long as there is a greedy attorney who seeks to gain a 50 per cent fee or a 25 per cent fee, despite the action of Congress in undertaking to limit his fee or to provide that he should not get any fee; never so long as the attorneys are allowed, as they have been in every session of the committee, to haunt the committee room and persist in bothering the committee to death arguing this question; and never so long as Senators persist in opening it here will it be settled.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate for nine years, and I will say that the cause of the Indians to whom I refer was never presented to the Indian Committee before in that period of time. The first hearing held at this session took three days and was heard by not more than six or seven members of that committee.

Mr. FALL. Of course, the Senator's memory may be better than mine, but I have a very strong impression that the same arguments that were made, and to which I listened this time with reference to certain Choctaws, were heard before. If I did not hear them before the committee, then I have discovered the same arguments in my reading of the case.

I will say another thing to the Senator, which is that if these rolls were opened, in my judgment, from what I know of the rolls and what I know of Choctaw affairs, there are possibly about 30 Choctaws who should have been enrolled, and I will venture to say that for every Choctaw who was cut off this roll illegally there are illegal Choctaws on the rolls.

If there are any of these Choctaws who the Secretary of the Interior believes are entitled to enrollment, all he has to do is to say so to the committee and let the committee bring in a bill here and enroll them. We can certainly leave it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is just what this amendment proposes to do.

Mr. FALL. He has already the authority. You do not need to give it to him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will pardon me, the law cut him off in 1907 by its terms. It prevented him from adjudicating cases after that time, and the law never has been changed, excepting as to the 318 individuals.

Mr. FALL. I agree with the Senator. Certainly the Secretary——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thought the Senator said the Secretary had power to do this himself.

Mr. FALL. The Secretary has no power to put them on the rolls of the Choctaw Nation, but he has the power and authority to submit to the Indian Committee of Congress the names of those parties whom he thinks are entitled to enrollment, with the suggestion that Congress put them on the rolls. I will vote to do whatever he says is proper in the matter. Whenever the Secretary says that a man is entitled to go on these rolls, I will vote to put him on the rolls.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I thought the——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FALL. For a question.

Mr. LANE. I thought that the Secretary of the Interior had no funds to expend upon expensive investigations. That is what I supposed.

Mr. FALL. But the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested that these names are in the Secretary's office; that he knows them and can ascertain them, and does not have to undertake an expensive investigation.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I am through.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not want to say anything further about it, except that we believe that to reopen this matter simply is opening a Pandora's box to our country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENYON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have been unable to transfer my pair, but desire to be counted as present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I desire to be counted for a quorum.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENYON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to my colleague [Mr. CUMMINS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN];

The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. CRAWFORD. I inquire if the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has.

Mr. CRAWFORD. "Present."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	Hollis	Lee, Md.	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bryan	James	Newlands	Thompson
Burton	Johnson	Pittman	Vardaman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin the yeas are 33, the nays 13. Senators in the Chamber and paired but not voting are the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, on page 4, after line 18, I move to insert the words:

And section 8 of the act of March 1, 1895, is hereby reenacted as to that part of Oklahoma known as Indian Territory immediately prior to statehood, and section 2140 of the United States Revised Statutes is made applicable to that part of Oklahoma.

That relates to the suppression of the liquor traffic, and the attorney of Oklahoma has requested that that be done in order to enable him to supress that traffic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send up his amendment to the desk?

Mr. OWEN. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 18, after the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to insert the words:

And section 8 of the act of March 1, 1895, is hereby reenacted as to that part of Oklahoma known as Indian Territory immediately prior to statehood, and section 2140 of the United States Revised Statutes is made applicable to that part of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, House bill 11246, providing for an adjudication in the Court of Claims of the annuities of the Santee Indians, has passed the House and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate with amendment. Last night it passed the Senate, but on account of the amendment it is improbable that it is going to get through the shuffle; and I offer it as an amendment. I intended to do so, anyway, except that on a call of the calendar that bill was acted upon. I offer it as an amendment after line 15 on page 79 of this bill. The Senate acted upon it favorably last night, but, as I say, on account of the amendment it is doubtful whether it will become a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been read. The question is on agreeing to it.

The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance that may be found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases for any annuities that may be ascertained to be due to the said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7th Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10th Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of rendition of judgment, and shall determine and include the present value of the same, not including interest, and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty, and to ascertain and set off against any amount found due under said treaties all moneys paid to said Indians or expended on their account by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863: Provided, That the treaty of 1868 shall not be a bar to recovery, but all equities and benefits received thereunder by the Santee Sioux Indians shall be taken into consideration in the determination of the amount of recovery. Upon the rendition of such judgment and in conformity therewith the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to ascertain and determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing thereon the names of all living members of said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom only the names of those found to have personally participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore employed by said bands of Indians to prosecute their claims under this act under a contract which has been approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the existence of the facts stated in said petition, and no other verification shall be necessary. Upon final determination of the cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find to be reasonable upon a quantum meruit for services performed or to be performed, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys so employed by the said bands of Indians and their associates, and the same shall be paid out of the balance found to be due said bands of Indians when an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by the court amount in the aggregate to more than 5 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered, and in no event shall the aggregate amount exceed $25,000: Provided further, That the court shall by its decree distribute such fees equitably between the attorneys who have been employed by said bands of Indians in said cause.

Mr. ASHURST. Will not the Senator from South Dakota ask to have the committee report printed in the RECORD?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the above-entitled action was referred, having examined the same, report favorably upon said bill and recommend its passage without amendment. In support of said bill the committee begs leave to submit with the foregoing recommendation the report of the House Committee on Indian Affairs accompanying said bill.

[House Report No. 344, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11246) providing for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, having duly considered the same, recommends that the bill do pass.

"During the second session of the Sixty-second Congress your committee favorably reported a bill of this character, and a copy of such report is hereto attached and made a part hereof. Also, a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior is hereto attached and made a part of this report, showing the attitude of the Department of the Interior toward such legislation."

[House Report No. 444, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21887) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine the amount of unpaid annuities that would be due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians as if the act of forfeiture of 1863 had not been passed, after deducting therefrom all payments to said bands, or to any of the members thereof that are properly chargeable against their annuities, beg to report that after giving careful consideration of the whole matter they report back an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following:

"'That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance that may be found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases for any annuities that may be ascertained to be due to the said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., p. 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., p. 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed: Provided, That the court in rendering judgment shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of rendition of judgment, and shall determine and include the present value of the same, not including interest and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against any amount found due under said treaties all moneys paid to said Indians or expended for their benefit by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863: Provided, That the treaty of 1868 shall not be a bar to recovery, but all equities and benefits received thereunder by the Santee Sioux Indians may, in the discretion of the court, be taken into consideration in the determination of the amount of recovery. Upon the rendition of such judgment and in conformity therewith the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to ascertain and determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing thereon the names of all living members of said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom only the names of those found to have personally participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

"'Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore employed by said bands of Indians to prosecute their claims under this act under a contract which has been approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law upon information and belief as to the existence of the facts stated in said petition, and no other verification shall be necessary. Upon final determination of the cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find to be reasonable upon a quantum meruit for services performed or to be performed, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys so employed by the said band of Indians and their associates, and the same shall be paid out of the balance found to be due said bands of Indians when an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by the court amount in the aggregate to more than 5 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered, and in no event shall the aggregate amount exceed $25,000: Provided further, That the court shall by its decree distribute such fees equitably between the attorneys who have been employed by said bands of Indians in said cause.'

"The situation as to the claim of these Indians is briefly as follows:

"Prior to 1863 the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands, known as the Upper Sioux, and the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands, known as the Lower Sioux, lived on adjoining reservations in the State of Minnesota. Formerly the Upper Sioux and the Lower Sioux, in similar but separate treaties, had ceded all of their lands to the United States, save the small reservations on which they were then living, and in consideration for the cession the Government agreed to pay them certain annuities.

"By act of Congress approved February 16, 1863, the annuities of both the Upper and Lower Bands were forfeited in consequence of the Sioux outbreak of 1862.

"By act of Congress approved June 21, 1906, Congress restored the forfeited annuities of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands (Upper Sioux) and conferred jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the amount of unpaid annuities that would be due them as if the act of forfeiture had not been passed, and also to ascertain and set off against said amount all sums which had been paid to or for said bands, or to or for any members thereof, since said act of forfeiture was passed, which the court should find were properly chargeable against said annuities, and to render judgment for the balance, if any.

"The reports of the committees of Congress in support of the legislation for the relief of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands will be found in Senate Report No. 2561, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, page 80, and House Report No. 2751, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

"The substitute bill now reported and recommended (H. R. 21887) follows the legislation for the relief of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands and should be passed for the same reasons.

"The annuities of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands (Lower Sioux) arose as follows:

"By the first article of a treaty dated September 29, 1837 (Stat. L., 538), the Medawakantons ceded to the United States all of their lands east of the Mississippi River and all of their islands in said river, the consideration for said cession being $15,000 per annum 'forever.' Of this annuity 27 installments had been paid at the time of the outbreak.

"It is the policy of the Government to discontinue perpetual annuities by capitalizing the same at their present value, which is provided for in this bill.

"By the second article of a treaty made at Mendota in the then Territory of Minnesota, on the 5th day of August, 1851 (10 Stat. L., Treaties, p. 56), the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians ceded to the United States 'all their lands and all their right, title, and claim to any lands whatever in the Territory of Minnesota or in the State of Iowa.'

"The consideration for the land ceded by this treaty, adjusted according to terms of the treaty and amendments thereto, was, in annuities, $61,450 for a period of 50 years. Of these annuities, 12 installments had been paid at the time of the outbreak, leaving 38 unpaid.

"The devastation of property and the loss of life resulting from this outbreak is familiar history; but the evidence shows that nearly every guilty Indian is dead.

"It is established that many individual Indians of these two bands bore arms to suppress the outbreak, while others gave aid and comfort to settlers and prisoners, saving captive women and children, thus incurring the risk incident to arraying themselves against the hostile Indians.

"The question arises: Were these Indians who participated in the outbreak guilty of treason or an act of disloyalty to the United States Government, or were they guilty of committing a crime against society as individuals? If they are to be considered as committing an act of treason or disloyalty, then it would seem the Government should deal with them as it dealt with the disloyal members of the Five Civilized Tribes.

"Congress, by act approved July 5, 1862, provided for forfeiting the annuities of any Indians, including the Cherokees and other Indians composing the Five Civilized Tribes, who joined the Southern Confederacy and took up arms against the Union. After the war the Government made new treaties with all the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, restoring every dollar of the annuities to loyal and disloyal alike; and later Congress, in one or more cases, went even further and paid to these Indians an additional consideration for their lands ceded, being the difference between 31 cents an acre, the amount provided to be paid them by the treaty, and $1.25 an acre, the statutory price. So if these Indians who participated in the outbreak were guilty of an act of disloyalty, then why should not their annuities be restored, as in the case of the Five Civilized Tribes? Besides, these Indians are to-day citizens, so it would seem that the spirit of the Constitution, if not the letter thereof (Art. III, sec. 2), should protect them against the act of forfeiture beyond the lives of persons 'attainted.' That forfeitures are not favored is fundamental. This Government was carrying out this basic governmental policy when it paid the heirs of Gen. Robert E. Lee for the Arlington estate.

"If these Indians who participated in the outbreak were not guilty of disloyalty or treason, then they were guilty as individuals of murder. For this crime the guilty individuals who were not killed by Gen. Sibley's troops in quelling the outbreak were arrested and tried for their crime and convicted, and part of them hanged and the remainder imprisoned. The guilty Indians have nearly all paid the penalty of their crimes. If there are any still living, the Government has established or can establish their guilt. At any rate, the burden should be on the Government to show who are guilty and still living, if there be any.

"The bill provides that the Department of the Interior shall make up a roll of those who are now living and residing in the United States who are entitled to share in these annuities, leaving off the names of any Indians who took part in the outbreak.

"The sweeping act of forfeiture passed by Congress soon after the outbreak has deprived not only the friendly Indians who survived the difficulties of that period of the moneys due for their land during the remainder of their lives, but has visited the sins of the few hostile Indians upon helpless women and upon unborn children. If the Government should adhere to this act of confiscation, it would be the only instance of the kind in our history. Therefore, it seems to your committee that the ends of justice would be accomplished by the passage of the proposed bill.

"The bill provides that payment of the amount found to be due by the court shall be made per capita to those Indians now living, except those whose guilt can be shown.

"The Department of the Interior has, however, always contended that these Indians have forfeited their rights to the restoration of these annuities by becoming parties to the treaty of April 29, 1868, and further contends that if they did not surrender and forfeit their claims or rights by the terms of such agreement, that then they should be charged up with all payments in money or clothing, provisions, etc., made under that treaty.

"Your committee, after a careful investigation of this treaty and the conditions under which and the purpose for which it was made, can not concur in the view taken by the department. The department cites article 10 of said treaty, which reads as follows:

"'In lieu of all sums of money or other annuities provided to be paid to the Indians herein named, under any treaty or treaties heretofore made, the United States agrees to deliver, etc.; naming the clothing, money, supplies, and provisions which the Government agreed to furnish the Indians.

"The department also points to article 17, which reads as follows:

"'It is hereby expressly understood and agreed by and between the respective parties to this treaty that the execution of this treaty and its ratification by the United States Senate shall have the effect and shall be construed as abrogating and annulling all treaties and agreements heretofore entered into between the respective parties hereto so far as such treaties and agreements obligate the United States to furnish and provide money, clothing, or other articles of property to such Indians and bands of Indians as become parties to this treaty, but no further.'

"Your committee can not understand how the provisions of these two articles can be held to be an abrogation of the rights of the Indians to annuities which were at that time forfeited, and therefore can not have been in the minds of the parties. Besides, a reading of the whole treaty shows that the Government sought the Indians to make this treaty for a governmental purpose. The things that the Indians were to do are expressly stated, and stated to be done in consideration for payments to be annually made.

"The facts about that treaty are briefly as follows:

"The Indians occupying the territory north of the proposed line of the Union Pacific Railway and on the western frontier had been rounded up by the Army and at Fort Laramie; these bands being the Brule, Ogallala, Minicongou, Yanktonai, Unkpapa, Blackfeet, Cutthead, Two Kettles' Band, Sioux, and the Arapahos, were gathered in to meet Lieut. Gen. William T. Sherman, Gen. William S. Harney, Gen. Alfred H. Terry, Gen. C. C. Augur, of the United States Army, and four civilian commissioners appointed by the President. The council was dominated by the Army.

"Nearly all of these various bands, parties to the treaty, except the Santee Sioux of Nebraska, were more or less hostile. The seven Santees who signed the treaty were a part of the small band of Santee Sioux Indians which had been gathered up and moved by the Government to Niobrara, Nebr., after the release of the remnant of the Indians that had been confined at Davenport, Iowa.

"These Indians were wholly indigent, broken spirited, and without hope in the world. They were completely subjugated and were wholly under the care and the influence of the United States at Niobrara. If they had signed this treaty in the understanding that they were surrendering their rights to the restoration to their children of the forfeited annuities, they would have so signed without the shadow of authority. They did not represent the great mass of Santee Sioux Indians who still remained in Minnesota and Dakota. They were in that deplorable condition in which individuals, and sometimes weak nations, execute any agreement that is presented to them by the power holding them under subjugation. They were perfectly willing, unquestionably, to accede to the terms of peace proposed by the United States, and doubtless they extended whatever influence they possessed, as heartily as was in their power, to bring to a peaceful disposition the more hostile part of the Sioux Indians, such as Two Kettles' Band, the Unkpapas, and others of a hostile disposition who had been depredating upon the line of the proposed Union Pacific Railway and upon the line of travel over the 'California trail' up the La Platte River.

"Affidavits have been made by two of those who claim that they signed the treaty to the effect that no council of their band was held to authorize them or anyone else to enter into a treaty with the United States.

"In the first paragraph of the indicated treaty of 1868 the parties agreed that war should forever cease, and recites as follows: 'The Government of the United States desires peace, and its honor is hereby pledged to keep it'; 'the Indians desire peace, and they now pledge their honor to maintain it'; so that peace was the object of the signatory parties.

"Article 11 of that treaty sets out seven specific services which the Indians were required to render the Government continuously. Briefly stated, they were that the Indians should withdraw 'all opposition to the construction of the railroads now being built on the plains'; that they not only would not attack any white persons or wagon trains or coaches, or capture any cattle or mules belonging to the United States or to white people, but that they should protect the white people and their property and the property of the United States in every way within their power; they also agreed to withdraw all opposition to the military posts or roads established and to be established by the Government in the Northwest, and further specifically agreed to help the Government to capture and punish any Indians who attacked white people or Government agents or committed depredations on their property, and to police the frontier.

"In short, the Government sought these Indians on the frontier to enter into a treaty for a specific governmental purpose; that is, peace and the protection of the frontier. The Indians agreed to perform this service and the Government agreed to pay them annually certain sums of money, food, clothing, etc., in consideration for their services. Any time that the Indians stopped performing these services payments to them would stop. Therefore the payment made to these 10 bands of Indians was the annual recognition of the fact that the Indians had carried out their part of the agreement in good faith.

"It is evident, therefore, that the agreement of 1868 was sought by the Government in the interest of civilization and for purposes of the Government, and that the Indians performed the services required, and that the payments made to them were the consideration for such services as stated in the treaty.

"This shows clearly that the provisions of articles 10 and 17 of that treaty, which provided that the payments to be made under it should be in lieu of all payments heretofore granted to these Indians under treaty stipulation, can not and should not be a bar to the recovery by these Indians of their annuities which were forfeited in 1863. It is clear that the contracting parties, if the treaty as between the Government and this band of Sioux Indians can be called a contract, did not have in mind at the time the forfeited annuities of the Sioux, the same having been abrogated by act of Congress in 1863.

"In this connection it should be noted that the Government, in making certain payments to the small band of Santee Sioux at Niobrara, Nebr., under the terms of the agreement of 1868, did not make any payments to the larger part of these Santee Sioux who were in Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Montana, and were not upon the reservation at Niobrara.

"The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has given this matter thorough consideration and has always taken the same position that we take.

"Attention is invited to Senate Report No. 5689 (59th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 76–79), setting forth the reasons of the Senate committee why no payment made under the treaty of 1868 should be charged against the forfeited annuities which it is now proposed to restore.

"Attention is also called to Senate Report No. 2561 (59th Cong., 1st sess., p. 80), in which the Senate committee states why the unpaid annuities of all of the Sioux Indians should be restored.

"A similar bill to the one we now recommend has passed the other branch of Congress four or five times."

FEBRUARY 2, 1912.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 15, 1912, inclosing, with request for report thereon, a copy of House bill 17600 (practically the same as H. R. 21887), for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The purpose of this bill is to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the matter of the claim of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Sioux Indians for annuities due them under treaty stipulations, which were forfeited by act of Congress approved February 16, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 652), and the bill is, in substance, similar to House bill 17859, Sixty-first Congress, second session, on which the department made report to the Congress under date of February 28, 1910.

In its said report the department suggested certain amendments to House bill 17859, and as the bill now under consideration appears to have been prepared in accordance with said suggestions, the department sees no objection to its passage.

For the information of your committee there is inclosed herewith a copy of departmental report of February 23, 1910, above mentioned. The bill (H. R. 17600) is returned herewith.

Respectfully,
SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 29, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 3, 1914, transmitting for a report thereon House bill 11246, for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The bill in effect is to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the matter of the claims of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Indians for annuities due them under the treaty stipulations which were forfeited by the act of Congress of February 16, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 652), and the bill is in substance similar to House bill 17600, Sixty-second Congress, second session, on which a favorable report was made to you February 2, 1912.

The bill provides, on page 3 thereof:

"Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore employed by said bands of Indians to prosecute their claims under this act under a contract which has been approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law * * *."

The records of the department show that contracts approved by the department were entered into by certain attorneys with these Indians—all of which have expired. It therefore seems that new contracts should be obtained by such attorneys as are to prosecute these claims, such contracts to be in accordance with existing law, which requires the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. It is accordingly recommended that the bill be amended as follows:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the words "one of the attorneys who have been heretofore" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the attorney or attorneys."

In line 13 strike out "which has been" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be."

Line 17, strike out after the word "necessary" all to the end of bill and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That the fees to be paid the attorney or attorneys so employed by the said band of Indians shall be paid out of the balance found to be due said bands of Indians when an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress: Provided further, That in no event shall the aggregate amount of the fees exceed $25,000."

Should the proposed amendments be made to the present bill, I believe that it would be only justice to these Indian claimants to be allowed to take their case to the Court of Claims, as proposed therein. I therefore see no objection to the bill, if amended as indicated, being enacted into law.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who has been called away, I desire to offer an amendment to follow the items under the Five Civilized Tribes.

Some years ago we passed a law allowing the sale, on the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, of Quapaw lands, reserving in each case 40 acres. This amendment extends that to the Modoc lands, and I will say that it removes the restriction of the 40 acres. It is upon the approval of the Department of the Interior. The Senator from South Dakota was unable to remain here, and at his request I offer this amendment for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota, in behalf of the junior Senator from South Dakota, offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 74 it is proposed to insert:

That section 1 of an act approved March 3, 1909, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other lands on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes," be amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized to, remove the restrictions as to sale, encumbrance, or taxation from all of the allotted lands of any adult allottee of any of the tribes of Indians, including the Modocs, belonging to the Quapaw Indian Agency, in the State of Oklahoma, whenever he shall be satisfied that any Indian allottee is competent to manage his or her affairs, but said lands from which the restrictions have been removed shall not be liable for the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the removal of said restrictions by the Secretary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I do not know that it is necessary under the rules, but I desire to give notice that I shall make the point of order in the Senate respecting the amendment just adopted, offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment on page 74, after line 11, to insert the following words:

No future allotments shall be made in the Creek Nation except as may be hereafter authorized by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma at what place in the Oklahoma provisions there is an amendment proposed—it may have come over in the House provisions—making an appropriation of quite a large sum of money to pay for Federal attorneys in connection with probate work in that State?

Mr. OWEN. That was a House provision. It was on page 68, I suppose, lines 7 to 11.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Supreme Court has recently rendered a decision which forecloses Federal attorneys from appearing in the probate court cases for which this makes provision?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know that it has done so. Does the Senator know of a case of that kind?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not had time to make the investigation myself, but the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], before he left the Chamber, brought to me some data upon the subject, and said it was a matter that he intended to present to the Senate, striking out this provision, because the supreme court of the State had recently handed down, within the last three or four days, a decision which would make it impossible for the attorneys for whom this considerable appropriation is made to appear.

Mr. OWEN. I can not conceive how such a thing is possible, because these attorneys go in representing private litigants and private persons in the courts. They have a right to do it—a constitutional right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not know but that the Senator was acquainted with that fact.

Mr. OWEN. I do not believe that could possibly be true, because these judges met together in convention with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and they agreed upon methods by means of which this work could be done with a view to protecting the minors of that State.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I regret that I am not sufficiently familiar with the matter to present it.

Mr. OWEN. I can not conceive how such a thing could come before the supreme court, much less how it could be decided by the supreme court, that an individual did not have a right to have his attorney appear in court for him.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, on page 14 I move, on line 7——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment. Let us act upon the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLAPP. I was going to offer this as an amendment in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the first thing to do is to concur in the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and then the Senator can offer his amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Has the bill passed into the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order of which I gave notice a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma mean that he desires to have a separate vote upon or separate consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GORE. I desire to make a point of order against that particular amendment on the ground that it is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had better reserve the amendment, then.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that exception, without objection, the other amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in by the Senate.

Now, the Senator from Oklahoma desires to make a point of order, which he will state.

Mr. GORE. I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on the ground that it is general legislation. These rolls were closed by an act of Congress some seven or eight years ago, and the effect of this amendment would be to reopen the rolls and repeal that act.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if I may be heard a moment——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order is not debatable. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CLAPP. A point of order is debatable if the Chair cares to hear from Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear from the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Chair cares to hear, either from Senators or from books, that can be done. This is to carry out the provisions of treaties that have heretofore been made. It is not general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is satisfied that the amendment is not subject to the point of order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, while it may not be of the utmost importance, it appears that on page 14 language was put in that was taken from a separate bill. Therefore I move that the numerals "SEC. 2," in line 7, and "SEC. 5," in line 20, be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "SEC. 2" and in line 20 to strike out the words "SEC. 5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House, the Chair to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP as the managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 20189.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida as amended in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order at this time.

Mr. OLIVER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, following line 6, it is proposed to insert:

Ohio River: Upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and the approval of the Secretary of War, the project of improving the Ohio River may be so modified as to permit of the construction of one lock and fixed dam to replace Locks and Dams Nos. 1 and 2 should such modification be deemed desirable and advantageous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I object to that amendment. In the first place, it proposes a new project, and we have excluded all new projects from the bill. In the next place, it opens wide the possible expenditure of a million or more dollars. We can not tell where we will wind up on it, and I ask the Senator not to insist upon that amendment. I hope we can agree upon this measure here so that it can be accepted in the House without having to go to conference; but I know that this proposition will meet with serious objection there, and it is out of harmony with this whole measure as it is now presented.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the amendment that I offer was offered in the river and harbor bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce. It is a matter of vital interest to the people of my section. Lock No. 1 on the Ohio River was the initial lock and dam built upon that river. It was largely experimental. It was built more than 35 years ago. It is the only protection there is for the harbor of Pittsburgh. It is in such a condition that it is represented to me if the dam is let down at the time of the next flood it is a grave question whether it can ever be raised again.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask for order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I intend to have order and I intend to have Senators present understand this amendment before they vote it down. The dam at Lock No. 1 on the Ohio River, as I said, is in such a condition that it is liable to break down at any time.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that this amendment is merely permissive. It does not direct that anything shall be done. The condition of affairs at this point is this: If this dam broke down, as it is liable to do at any time, the whole Pittsburgh manufacturing district will be deprived of a harbor.

Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senator in charge of the bill—the Senator who is nominally in charge of the bill—and to the other Senator on the floor who is the real custodian in behalf of this great manufacturing section to allow this amendment to go in. It simply provides that the Board of Engineers may, with the approval of the Secretary of War, instead of rebuilding Dam No. 1, which must be rebuilt or something substituted for it, construct, 20 miles farther down the river, another dam to take the place of Dam No. 1 and Dam No. 2. The engineers have reported that the cost of this will be no greater than will be necessary in rebuilding Lock and Dam No. 1.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. OLIVER. I will.

Mr. RANSDELL. Can you tell us where this proposed new dam is to be constructed?

Mr. OLIVER. It is to be constructed about midway between the present No. 1 and No. 2.

Mr. RANSDELL. Can you tell us where you got that information?

Mr. OLIVER. I get it from the engineers.

Mr. RANSDELL. In a written report?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the written report, but the Senator from Louisiana well knows that the representative of the Board of Engineers appeared before the Committee on Commerce and recommended this proposition, and that it was at the suggestion of the Board of Engineers that the amendment was inserted in the rivers and harbors bill, which the Senator from Louisiana has abandoned at the behest of the Senator from Ohio. Now, has the Senator any further question to ask me?

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to ask another question. Do you know what that project will cost?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the figures, but I have the assurance that the project will not cost more than the rebuilding of the present dam.

Mr. RANSDELL. Do you know of any projects we ever appropriated for, may I ask the Senator, unless they have been surveyed and estimated for? Do we know whether this will cost $1,000,000 or $10,000,000?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, this I know. I know it will not cost $1,000,000. I further know that this is simply something that can not be undertaken under the provisions of this amendment except by the Board of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, and I feel certain they would not recommend it or approve it unless it were the best and most economical move that could be made.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask the Senator if we are in the habit of giving discretion to the Engineer Department to make improvements of this kind until after they have first examined and reported upon them, so that Congress itself will have the right to act upon them?

Mr. OLIVER. I will answer that. As an instance I will give this very point, where the Senator from Louisiana, sitting upon the Committee on Commerce, recommended this in the bill which is before the Senate now, which it is proposed to wipe out by this compromise measure.

Mr. RANSDELL. That has not become a law, may I say to the Senator.

Mr. OLIVER. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he recommended it as a member of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was recommended, but it has not become a law. I will say to the Senator that I was in favor of it before understanding it, but as soon as I understood it, as soon as it was called to my attention by the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, and not by the Senator from Ohio, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has intimated, I came to the conclusion that I was absolutely wrong and that it would be violating every rule we have ever worked under here if we attempted to do this. Here is an item which will cost over a million dollars, when we have not had a scintilla of evidence upon it and know nothing more about it than the man in the moon.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps if the Senator from Louisiana had voiced his opposition to it in the same vigorous way when I talked to him yesterday I might not have pressed this proposition, but at least I absorbed the impression from my conversation at that time that he rather favored it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I state in reply that it had not been called to my attention by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House. When it was called to my attention I saw he was absolutely right and that my prior construction of it was wrong. We can not appropriate for any project until we first have it surveyed and until we know what we are doing. The proposition here is to construct a permanent lock and dam instead of movable locks and dams that have been in existence heretofore, and we can not appropriate for one until we know something about it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Myers	Shields
Bankhead	Hughes	Newlands	Simmons
Bryan	James	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Burton	Johnson	Owen	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Jones	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Chilton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Smoot
Clapp	Kern	Ransdell	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Reed	Thompson
Fall	Lane	Robinson	Vardaman
Fletcher	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Gore	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	White
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is it in order to make a motion to direct the Sergeant at Arms to compel the attendance of absent Senators?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

At 5 o'clock and 4 minutes a. m., Wednesday, March 3, 1915, Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

At 5 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m. Mr. PAGE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I realize that this amendment of mine will, in all probability, be voted down, owing to the fact that the Senator in charge of the bill will not accept it for reasons best known to himself; and I will not detain the Senate longer, but will allow a vote to be taken on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER. I move to amend the bill by striking out, on page 13, from line 12 to line 19, inclusive, and inserting in the proper place "for a resurvey of the Youghiogheny River, Pa., up to West Newton." I have not the exact place in the bill now.

Mr. BURTON. It would be page 14, after line 23.

Mr. OLIVER. Page 14, after line 23.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator proposes to strike out line 12 to line 19, inclusive, on page 13, and insert the same between lines 23 and 24, on page 14?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; the intention being, Mr. President, instead of absolutely repealing the appropriation made some years ago for the improvement of the Youghiogheny River, to order a resurvey of the Youghiogheny River provision and abide by the result of a resurvey. I will not debate it.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, if it were not for the lateness of the hour and the earnest desire, I think, of everyone to dispose of this bill, I should most strenuously oppose that amendment. The survey that was made in 1907 on this river made it appear ridiculous. The coal operators in the neighborhood did not ask for it. There was no probability of any considerable traffic. But an estimate was made that 950 acres of land would be made available for factory sites. Afterwards there was an estimate that the number of acres would be 1,105, and the Board of Engineers, without exception, recommended against it. But afterwards, in some way that I can not understand, as a result of a new set of arguments, the Board of Engineers voted in favor of a part of it, for three locks and dams, each to cost $350,000. Then the very ridiculous thing was done of appropriating $100,000, not enough to construct a lock or a dam. That money has virtually remained in the Treasury ever since. There is no merit in the project. If there were time I would insist on a thorough discussion, but, in view of the circumstances, I know everyone is weary, and we want to finish the bill. I am willing to consent to a vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator's motion is to strike out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, beginning with section 12, strike out lines 7 to 19, both inclusive.

Mr. FLETCHER. That means section 12.

Mr. BURTON. To strike out the whole of section 12.

Mr. OLIVER. That is right; I would strike out the whole of the section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 7 to 19, both inclusive.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct.

The SECRETARY. And insert on page 15, after line 23, the words—

Youghiogheny River up to West Newton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I have another amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I want to make a suggestion that the sections will have to be renumbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks will do that.

Mr. OLIVER. I have another short amendment, which I think will not meet with any objection. On page 21, line 3, after the word "included," I move to insert the words "flood prevention and."

I will state that the work, which is being done by the State of Pennsylvania in cooperation with the War Department, includes surveys for flood prevention, and that the work may be coordinated it is necessary to insert the words "flood prevention" here. It is recommended by the Secretary of War in his last report. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. On page 15 I move to strike out all of line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out on page 15, line 9, the following words:

Missouri River, Mo., mouth to Kansas City.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the opponents of this bill have made all the concession they can make, and if that line is to go out we propose to obstruct the bill indefinitely. That might just as well be understood now.

In the bill of 1914 there were objectionable new projects and objectionable old ones. In this bill there are objectionable old projects, and in order to be sure that in the improvements which are being made the appropriations from the Public Treasury shall be for commendable projects, it is insisted that these items shall be included.

What is the objection to another survey. Are you afraid that on a reexamination it will be found to be unworthy? There are here in this list 10 of the most objectionable projects. Why should the Missouri River be stricken out from the list?

Mr. STONE. Why not put in the Ohio River?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. REED. Does my colleague desire to answer?

Mr. STONE. No.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I will in answer to the question that has just been asked by the Senator from Ohio, and at the same time briefly discuss the motion I have made.

For many years the question of the improvement of the Missouri River was under debate. During all of that time the river was under examination. There have been, at least, three separate examinations of that river and three separate reports. After all of those examinations, and after all of those reports, after the improvement had been approved by the War Department and confirmed by Congress, the work of the permanent improvement of the river was begun. Money has twice been appropriated in pursuance of that fixed plan. My motion is limited to the Missouri River because I am familiar with it.

It may be that the other projects named in the same section of the bill have not been examined but once, and there may be peculiar circumstances applying to each case. Therefore, I have not undertaken to include them in this motion, but the Missouri River has been examined three times.

Will the Senator from Ohio ever be satisfied with the examinations? How many does he want? Why does he not include his Ohio River in the list that is to be reexamined?

I have noticed that the reforms and the economies of the Senator from Ohio never quite reach the Ohio River; they never quite touch any of the streams of his State. They are never broad enough to embrace the harbors of his State. Whatever there is in the nature of benefaction or assistance or improvement for Ohio is wrapped about with a garb of sanctity so dense it can not be penetrated by the economic eye of the Senator from Ohio. His economic patriotism begins to operate just outside the borders of that State; his desire to save public money is limited to territory he does not specially represent; his inclination to filibuster is only aroused when a territory represented by somebody besides himself is getting a public improvement.

The Senator in the remarkable statement he has just made in effect tells the Senate that if it dares to amend this bill in any manner not in accordance with his wishes, if it thus offends against the dignity and majesty of his opinion, he will enter upon a filibuster and defeat the passage of the entire bill. He thus, in effect, asserts that he is willing to tie up all of the public improvements now in progress in the rivers and harbors of the country; that he is willing to paralyze all this great public work if his will is not obeyed. He is perhaps able to carry out this threat, because we are now within 36 hours of the time fixed by law for the adjournment of Congress and because, under the rules of the Senate, there is no limit to debate. We have already abundant evidence that there is no limit upon the talking capacity of the Senator from Ohio.

I do not think that a very patriotic position; I do not think it a very fair position. I might as well say to the Senator that unless the Ohio River is included as one of the streams that are to be resurveyed I will proceed to talk here until the rapidly approaching closing hour of this session of Congress. How would the Senator from Ohio enjoy that kind of performance? Does not his attitude amount merely to the exercise of an arbitrary power without regard to the public interest? Can any man justly arrogate to himself the right to do all the thinking for the Senate of the United States? Can he afford to say that unless he has his way the public business shall stop? Can any man afford to stand in the Senate and say, "Unless I have my individual way for the next 36 hours I will halt all these great projects of internal improvement? I will permit them to remain in their present uncompleted state, so that the first flood waters that sweep along those streams will destroy public works of the value of scores of millions of dollars"?

It seems to me that a man possesses a very bad case—and I had almost said a very bad disposition, but I do not want to ascribe that to the Senator from Ohio—who tells a legislative body, selected from the country at large, that unless it does as he says, unless it follows his plan, unless it accepts his dictum it shall be penalized and the country shall be penalized by the destruction of the great pubic works already half completed, and that these immense projects, in which the Government has spent millions of dollars, shall go to waste. Yet such is the threat of the Senator.

He is about to close an illustrious career—temporarily, at least, and of his own volition—in the Congress of the United States. I do not think he ought to end it in that way. I do not think that it is in accordance with his usual high course of public duty. I think no man has the right to deny the Senate the opportunity of a vote. If that vote is had and it is against this motion, I shall not filibuster against the bill; I shall not then try to keep the bill from passing because I do not have my sweet will. The Senator from Ohio can no more afford to assume the position he is taking than I could to engage in a filibuster if my amendment is rejected. Adopt the policy of the Senator from Ohio and two able-bodied orators arrayed on opposite sides could arrest all public business.

Mr. President, we have been sitting here all night. Let the Senator from Ohio state his objections—as he has a right to state them—and let some Senator on the other side present whatever views he may have, as he has a right to do, and let the Senate vote on this bill. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I sincerely trust and believe that the Senator from Missouri does not have the same standards for his own conduct that he ascribes to others. I think a few statements of fact will show him the mistake he makes. He must admit that he is grossly in error in stating that my interest is such that I give preference to the State of Ohio and its projects. If there is any one thing that I did when chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House or that I have done here in the Senate—and my colleagues will bear me out in the statement—it is that I have leaned over backward whenever any Ohio proposition was under consideration.

Some years ago the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Cleveland, accompanied by a very influential delegation, including a man who was afterwards a Cabinet officer, came here and called on the other 16 members of the committee of which I was chairman, and then came to me with a statement that all of the 16 were willing to add $2,000,000 to the appropriation for Cleveland, if I would acquiesce. I immediately turned them down. I told them that it would be unfair, that it would be taking advantage of my position. Indeed, the motion was made in the House of Representatives to add that $2,000,000, but I rose in my place and requested that it be voted down. It would have passed except for that action.

In the face of such a record as that, I am not willing to allow such a statement as has just been made to go without contradiction. There is no member of the Committee on Commerce who has made so few propositions for additions or concessions in his own locality as I have made. I am willing to go out on the 4th of March confident that the record of my acts will show that in the matter of river and harbor improvements I have stood for the country and for the whole country, and that I have never given an undue preference to the rivers and harbors of my own State.

As regards this bill, you may talk as you will about the injury by floods. There are some $30,000,000 in the Treasury now available for these projects; and I say here that it would be better for this bill to fail—to fail utterly—than to go on in the course that we have been pursuing.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURTON. It was better for the bill to fail last autumn, or to be remodeled, than for it to go through as it originally was.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Is there not a survey provided for in the bill for the Ohio River and its tributaries in respect to floods?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Was there not a board appointed to investigate floods in that river and its tributaries some years ago, and did they not make a report and state that nothing in the shape of reservoirs could well be built on the Ohio River and its tributaries for lack of holding ground? And yet the Senator wants a resurvey.

Mr. BURTON. The provision for the survey is verbatim et literatim, with the exception of the last three words, the recommendation sent down by the Secretary of War, after a loss of, I think I may say, hundreds of millions of dollars in property in the Ohio Valley and the loss of hundreds of lives. I think we in the Ohio Valley, which does not pertain alone to the State of Ohio, but pertains as well to the States of Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Indiana, and West Virginia, are about as much entitled to a survey as any other State where the damage from floods has been infinitely less than it has in Ohio. I can not consistently be here as a representative of that State without paying some degree of attention to its rights and its interests, and, as the Secretary of War sent in the recommendation that this survey be made, I was justified in asking that it be done.

Now, as regards the Missouri. In comparison with the Ohio, the traffic statistics year by year show the traffic of the Ohio to be forty times greater than that of the Missouri and its prospects forty times as great. Practically all the traffic in the lower Mississippi, and the larger share of that in the Mississippi between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri, comes out of the Ohio River, which has a traffic of $10,000,000 as against $250,000 on the Missouri. It is the most promising stream in the United States as regards improvements.

Again, I have repeatedly said here that I do not claim any credit for these appropriations for the Ohio. I looked with a good deal of opposition on the earlier projects; indeed, it was made a political issue against me, and in the southern part of the State has been, in a measure, to this day.

If the Senate wishes to vote here that there shall be a resurvey of the Ohio River, let them vote to that effect; but to vote to put it on the same plane with the Missouri River is utterly ridiculous. They are not in the same class. There is no comparison between the two in point of present or prospective traffic. As I explained this evening—and if the Senator from Missouri had been here he would have heard me—the first project on the Missouri, as advocated and recommended by a former Senator from Missouri living in Kansas City—I refer to Senator Warner—was only for $3,500,000.

Now, I cherish no ill will against the Senator from Missouri; but I think his attack upon me was entirely unjustified. I have not stood for Ohio; I have not stood for the Ohio River, except as it had merit. I have often subordinated the claims of Ohio and of the Ohio River to the claims of other States. I endeavored, as chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House and have endeavored as a member of the Committee on Commerce, to do my duty, and I feel that I should be doing my duty in opposing this bill unless there were some provisions in it which look at least to reexamination and reform, to doing away with the waste, with the injudicious improvements, and with the absurdity that is apparent in many of the projects in this and other bills.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not mean to reflect in any way on the Senator from Ohio or his integrity or his honor, but I am inclined to think the Senator from Ohio is just a little like the rest of us, and that, being a mortal, he sees the interests of his own State and his own community naturally through eyes that are somewhat prejudiced in favor of his own State.

Mr. President, the Senator speaks of this improvement of the Missouri River and of other projects—he included them all together—as being fantastic and ridiculous. That is not his exact language, but that, I think, is a fair paraphrase of his utterance. The remedy proposed in the bill for which he so stoutly contends is another survey.

I do not know how many surveys there have been of the other streams included in the resurvey provision, but there have been at least three critical, exhaustive examinations of the Missouri River. How many does the Senator want? If a board of Government engineers have three times surveyed a stream, and three times arrived at a conclusion sufficiently definite to warrant the action of Congress thereon, what will be gained by a fourth examination? If we have failed three times, and propose to have another examination by the same boards that made the previous examination, we will gain nothing. All that we could do would be to spend some more Government money; and if we got a report adverse to the river, balanced against that would be the three favorable reports. So we might have another examination, and still another, and decide the question ultimately by what? By some one survey.

The Senator states that there is over 40 times the traffic on the Ohio River there is on the Missouri. I think I am within the facts when I say that I think there has been over 40 times the money spent on it by the Government.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. How many millions of dollars have been spent on the Ohio River? The Senator undoubtedly knows.

Mr. BURTON. About $30,000,000. I do not know the exact figures.

Mr. REED. How much has been spent on the Missouri?

Mr. BURTON. About $10,000,000.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; not $10,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 before this project of 1910 was adopted, and about $3,000,000 since then.

Mr. REED. Even if that be correct—and of course the Senator believes it to be correct, and he is generally pretty accurate about these things—it does not follow that the Ohio River is the superior stream. You can not run boats upon a river that is obstructed by sand bars; and if you had expended $7,000,000 and had removed all the bars except one or two, still the through traffic would be nevertheless as completely obstructed as it would be if you had never removed a bar. You do not get the benefit of work upon rivers until you have completed a channel. That never has been permitted to be done upon the Missouri River; it has been done for many years upon the Ohio River.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Missouri will yield to me, that is hardly correct. There has been a channel 3 to 4 feet in depth on the Missouri River for very many years. Indeed, there is a channel of 5 feet for at least two months of the year, and the channels on the Ohio have not been reliably 6 feet for any full year, or even for half a year. Indeed, when you consider the steep descent from Pittsburgh, or just below Pittsburgh, and the shallows in many places, until this recent improvement was commenced the depth in the Ohio was not more than a foot more than in the Missouri, and the Missouri had a channel which was less impeded by rapids than the Ohio.

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, we have been making these appropriations for the Ohio for a great many years. It has been one of the fixed projects of the country for a great many years, and it had sufficient water to carry a great deal of freight for many years. On the other hand, the Missouri River, which in the old steamboat days afforded a means of travel and a highway of commerce almost to the Rocky Mountains, was abandoned during the period when railroad competition was fierce. Then the effort was made to restore competition; whereupon it was found that the stream was obstructed by numerous bars, so that boats large enough to engage in the business could not pass over those bars. So we have been asking for a total of $20,000,000, which engineers have said will give us a 6-foot channel from Kansas City to the mouth of the river. With that 6-foot channel, business can be carried on, and carried on profitably. That is the estimate not only of the Government engineers, but of eminent engineers who are not in the Government service. But, of course, until we arrive at approximately a completed condition, there must be a great many obstacles in the way of successful commerce.

The Ohio River has had a channel all these years. I do not care to argue about its particular depth, but shippers have been able to move great quantities of freight over it, and the improvement money has come generously to that river.

Now, Mr. President, it is no argument at all to say that there is more traffic on the Ohio now than there is on the Missouri, 40 times greater or 100 times greater, because you can not move the freight until there is a completed channel. To illustrate: If there were a single bar in the river that would not let a boat over at all, there could be no through traffic. In such a case the Senator could truthfully say that the river carried no traffic. Nevertheless, the mere digging through that one bar might permit an enormous traffic.

The whole question as to the value of the Missouri River has been examined, and then reexamined, and then examined over again. To ask for another examination at this time is unreasonable.

I do not care to ask to have a reexamination of the Ohio. I should put myself in what I should consider an indefensible attitude if I did so. Why? Because it has been examined, it has been improved, and the traffic is there; and it will be on the Missouri River, when the opportunity is given, through proper improvement. The Missouri River carries an immense flow of water.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator familiar with the Ohio canalization project under which the Government is expected to expend $63,000,000? Does the Senator believe in that project? I think it is one of the worst projects the Government has undertaken.

Mr. REED. I am not familiar with that. I am speaking of the conditions as they are now, and I can not speak with accuracy regarding the Ohio River's future proposed improvement.

I want to say that with such improvement as we have already had on the Missouri River the shippers have been able to put upon that river a line of boats; they are constantly increasing the number of boats. The tonnage that is carried is likewise increasing. The present limited use of the river has had the effect of regulating, at least to some extent, railroad charges. When the river improvement is completed, according to the estimates of all the experts, an enormous tonnage can be carried. Now, I am as much of an economist as any other man in this body when it comes to the question of taking Government money and using it to attempt to improve streams that are incapable of improvement; but there is no policy so short-sighted and indefensible as that of refusing to improve streams that are capable of being made navigable.

In the first place, in times of unusual activity the railroads are incapable of promptly handling all of the freight. Time and again it has been impossible to promptly secure cars to transport our wheat and our corn and our cattle and other products. That has been often true in all that vast territory which is tributary to the Missouri River. It affects the State of Iowa, and if this improvement is carried on to Kansas City it will be pushed, I have not the slightest doubt, until it reaches the great States that lie west of the Missouri along the line of that stream.

Mr. President, there is a waste of money, of course, that all men want to avoid; but the mere expenditure of money does not mean a loss of money. It may be a magnificent investment which will return a hundredfold. If there is anything that our land needs it is cheap transportation.

I want to give an illustration. A cargo was loaded at San Francisco, and it was carried to Panama, unloaded, placed upon the cars at Panama, and carried to the Atlantic side. It was then placed in a ship and was carried to the mouth of the Mississippi River. It was then loaded upon steamboats and carried to St. Louis, Mo.; and it was carried at a price so much less than the freight rates on the railroads that it startled all the business men of that community.

We have expended $400,000,000 in constructing the Panama Canal. That great project ought to be utilized in every possible way. I say to the Senator from Ohio that I believe his conservatism is most unfortunate and most mistaken at this time. Instead of undertaking to pinch and choke these great arteries that God Almighty has placed in the body of our country, we ought to pursue an exactly opposite policy. We should utilize them in every possible way. We should restore them to commerce. We should make them the great arteries that lead down into the Gulf, and we should employ them as aids to the Panama Canal project, so that out of the entire system we would have the full blessings of that great work.

I make the prediction now to the Senator from Ohio that when the war in Europe is over, when the country has reached its normal condition, a vast system of internal improvements will be projected in this country that will convince the people of the country that the Government of the United States is a great, beneficent power that is carrying on mighty projects for the benefit of the general public. I venture the prediction that the products of the Pacific coast will be carried through the canal up into the Gulf, and that there in vast quantities they will be loaded upon steamboats that will throng the Mississippi River, the Ohio River, the Missouri River, and many of the lesser streams that lead off into the rich Southland. When that time comes the world will look with astonishment upon the conduct of those who now seek to hinder the progress of improvement or to arrest the development of the great interior portions of our land.

I have no quarrel with the Senator from Ohio because of his opinion. He has a perfect right to it; but I say that he should not filibuster away the last 36 hours of this session. He should not by such means prevent the Senate from expressing its opinion by a vote. He ought not to hold over the Senate the threat: "If you do not obey my dictation, follow my will, walk at my command, do as I say, you shall do nothing." That is not the position of a patriot, and I know that the Senator from Ohio is a patriot.

I ask if we can not have a vote upon this matter and not a filibuster.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, strike out line 9, which reads:

Missouri River, Mo., mouth to Kansas City.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. On behalf of the delegation from Idaho as well as our own, I wish to offer an amendment, on page 33, after line 20. I think this provision for a survey of Snake River was in the last river and harbor bill that failed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 20, insert the following:

Snake River, Wash. and Idaho, from the mouth to Asotin.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator when the last survey was made, if he knows?

Mr. JONES. I can not state, but my recollection is that it has been at least five, six, or seven years.

Mr. FLETCHER. As far as I can see, I think there is no objection to the amendment. I shall not oppose it.

Mr. JONES. I want to say that we have the Columbia River open about its mouth. This year the Celilo Canal will be completed.

Mr. BURTON. The amendment, I think, may be required.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. On page 15, line 17, after the word "thereof," I think there should be inserted the words "as well as those included in section 15." Otherwise, in section 15 there might not be any money provided for the work. I move that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 17, after the word "thereof," insert the words "as well as those included in section 15."

Mr. RANSDELL. I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BURTON. It seems to me there is something wrong in the numbering of these sections. Section 17 follows section 15.

The SECRETARY. Section 17 will be section 15, section 15 will be section 14, and section 14 will be section 13.

Mr. BURTON. Then the language of the amendment should be "as well as those included in section 14."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 17, after the word "thereof," insert "as well as those included in section 14."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. I now present an amendment which I have prepared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 14, insert:

Inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to secure the condemnation of a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co. for said inland waterway where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks, and any funds appropriated or allotted for improving said waterway are hereby made available for paying the award that may be made in said proceedings.

Mr. RANSDELL. I beg to state merely that this amendment is agreeable to the chairman of the committee and we believe it ought to be passed.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think there can be any serious objection to it. Has there not been a dispute, however, whether that right of way ought not to be acquired by the locality and whether the appropriation of the prior bill in 1912 or 1913 did not make that a condition of the improvement?

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not so understand.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Delaware perhaps can state.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from Delaware is perhaps better posted than I am, but my understanding is that the two ends of the canal have been completed up to the railroad and this right of way simply has to be condemned. Am I not right?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Louisiana is quite correct, Mr. President. The State of Delaware furnished all the right of way for this waterway wherever it was needed. They have been working at it for some 10 or 12 years and they are stopped by only 200 feet, where the railroad crosses the right of way. The right of way to build the canal is owned by the Government, ceded by the State, and paid for by the State. The simple question is getting through the railroad tracks. If this way is built through the railroad tracks there will be several hundred miles of water transportation. We have a long system of bays and rivers flowing in there, and the object is merely to get a way between the tracks. The condemnation money is practically the cost of the bridge.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state, furthermore, this item was included in the bill last year and again in the bill as originally reported this year.

Mr. BURTON. The only question I have in regard to that is raised by a paragraph on page 370 of the reports.

The wording of the act—

That is, the act for this improvement—

raises the question as to whether it was the intention of Congress to include the railroad right of way in the land or easement therein to be furnished free of cost or to make it the subject of condemnation on payment of an award from the appropriations made for the improvement.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The only answer I can make to the Senator from Ohio regarding that is that the War Department construes that the State of Delaware in furnishing the right of way has done everything that it agreed to do. As I understand it, the only thing that is necessary is that the easement for a railroad track at that point has to be secured to the railway before their tracks can be broken, and they have enjoined the contractors. I myself was counsel in one of the cases. That was before 1900. The work has been delayed tremendously on that account. It has been delayed two years quite recently when the inland waterway had been dug right up to the opposite sides of the railroad.

Mr. BURTON. Even though there is some ambiguity about it, I think there is no impropriety in our solving the doubt in favor of the acquisition by the Government of that right of way permanently.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment a very proper one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the committee to a matter which, on account of circumstances over which I had no control, made it impossible for me to appear before the committee to present. I should like to have Senators present give attention to the condition that exists. The engineers and the War Department have made surveys from time to time between the naval stations and dry docks and the Charleston Harbor, where the Government has spent some $7,000,000 in the construction of jetties for the removal of the bar. They are about 6 miles apart—the naval station on Cooper River, which is an extension of Charleston Harbor, the jetties, or this jetty, the navy yard—and the expenditure of the Government in appurtenances around that has cost something over $4,000,000.

In this stretch of the river, in which there is ample water, and in which there is also a sand bar, which makes it impossible for the full utilization of the naval station and dry dock and the channel, which now accommodates large vessels.

Therefore the engineers recommended this project, the cleaning out of the sand bar and the straightening of a bend; and, according to the estimates supplied in three or four different reports, $175,000 would put it into full use. There has already been expended an amount of approximately $9,000,000 on the part of the Government. We have ample water now up across the bar. We have a magnificent harbor; we have a splendid dry dock and as fine a naval station as there is on the South Atlantic. Because of this hiatus—on account of the sand bar that exists between the harbor proper and the naval station—$175,000, according to them, would be required to put it into perfect use for the Navy of this country and for the large vessels which would come in and dry-dock at the naval station. They are now prohibited from doing so by virtue of this slight obstruction.

I had intended to go before the committee and plead that this was hardly a new project, in that it was putting into use those things for the utilization of which the Government had already expended $9,000,000. I was solicited, and I was in hopes that the Senator from Ohio, whose splendid efforts along the line of the practical use of the moneys expended—I should like to have his attention just at this point——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, this is a matter the decision of which does not rest with me.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the point I wanted to make is that the Senator from Ohio has practically forced the present status of this bill. No new project has been allowed. It has been restricted to those which are already under construction and which by abandonment would absolutely lose the money already expended. This station at Charleston is precisely along the line of the spirit of this bill. I had hoped that those who insisted that there should be no further waste of money and had put this bill in this shape would grant this amendment, which I should like to offer, but I see there has been a spirit here that these amendments if offered might open up a floodgate. I certainly hope that in a case such as is presented here in the report from the engineers and from the department, the need of which anyone at all familiar with it knows—and I am sure the Senator from Ohio should be familiar with it—with $4,000,000 spent at the naval station, from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 spent at the jetties, is not complete, is not equipped, for the lack of $175,000 to remove that sand bar at the bend of the river, which has made them practically of no use except——

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina is this in the Ashley or the Cooper?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Cooper. I submitted it to you to-day, but you did not have the opportunity or the time to examine the report of the engineers.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Louisiana——

Mr. RANSDELL. I want to say just one word, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me. I think the Senator from South Carolina is laboring under a misapprehension, as far as the Senator from Ohio is concerned. As I understand this project, it was not placed in the bill when the bill was under consideration because the committee considered it a new project, and the policy adopted both by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Senate Committee on Commerce was not to take on any new projects. I think the merit of the project was fully recognized, and probably this, beyond question, would have been placed on the bill if new projects had been taken on. But we decided not to take on any new projects. I do not think the Senator from Ohio is any more responsible for it than the other members of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am sure the Senator from Ohio was not responsible, and I am also equally persuaded to believe that the Senator from Ohio, as well as other members of the committee, had I not had the misfortune to be forced away, would have taken the view that this could not in the real sense of the word be called a new project. It was not at the time supposed, as the report here shows, that the commerce was amply provided for by the present condition. Since that time there has been the construction of the naval station, and above the naval station, according to the report submitted, $4,000,000 worth of commerce has been added since 1910, which has to be floated down in barges beyond this slight obstruction and then loaded on board the vessels, whereas the expenditure of $175,000 would afford access to the dry dock; the steamers that may come in could go right up to the docks and load without that expense.

So there was a dual inducement for this appropriation of $175,000; that is, the facilities for commerce and the use of the $4,000,000 dockyard, and every day it is waiting is a loss. It seems to me the committee might if they saw fit put in this appropriation recommended in House Document 479, recommended in 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, and I believe in 1915 that $175,000 be appropriated for the purpose of removing that obstruction and bringing together these two projects which in the aggregate cost about $9,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me say to the Senator from South Carolina that we can not possibly consent to an amendment of this kind going upon the bill as it now stands. The project which he mentions is entirely meritorious; I have not any doubt but that the improvement ought to be made and the Government ought to take care of the conditions there. In the next river and harbor bill, the one that we hope to have some of these days, I shall most cordially favor making the improvement in accordance with the recommendation of the engineers.

There are numerous projects recommended by the engineers; there are many projects that ought to go in this bill. The bill as it came from the House and the bill as it was reported from the Commerce Committee, in my judgment, was a good bill and ought to have been passed as it stood; but the conditions have been such that it is impossible to do that. We have made a lump-sum appropriation instead of taking up items and we can not now afford to enter upon this field, admitting items in the bill.

I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not press the amendment, but in the future when the time comes to provide a proper and decent river and harbor bill and when we will take care of these great public works I shall be very glad to cooperate with him in taking care of this item.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In view of what the Senator from Florida says, I do not care to prejudice the future prospect of this appropriation by putting it to a vote, but I wish to state as to the first paragraph of the bill providing $25,000,000, if any construction can be placed on that by the engineers by which this work can be done between now and the reconvening of the next Congress I shall endeavor to do that, and when the next bill is passed I propose to hold the Senator from Florida and the members of the committee to the promise made and have this project carried through.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if there is not a mistake in section 17:

> The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the following-named localities, and a sufficient sum to pay the cost thereof may be allotted from the amount provided in this section.

That is as it stands in the print I have; and there is no sum provided in the section.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state to the Senator that when I brought up the bill on a former occasion I asked to have the word "section" changed to "act."

Mr. KENYON. All right; I was not familiar with that.

Mr. FLETCHER. So that is now changed.

Mr. KENYON. My prints did not show it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was printed "section," but it has been amended by striking out "section" and inserting the word "act."

Mr. BURTON. There is one comparatively trivial emendation that should be made on page 21, line 21. In the name, after Newport News, the letter "i" should be inserted between "V" and "r" to make the correct spelling of the name Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a typographical error and will be corrected.

Mr. FLETCHER. And I think, also, if it has not already been done, that section 17 ought to be changed to section 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been done.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the next section preceding should be numbered 14 and the next preceding 13. That completes the numbering of the sections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is always done by the Secretary.

The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is on concurring in the amendment as amended in the Senate.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. NELSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

AUGUSTUS DUDLEY HUBBELL.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13756) for the relief of Augustus Dudley Hubbell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1067) thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 21121) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER "MINNESOTA."

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is another bill I desire to report from the Committee on Commerce, being Senate bill 7632 (S. Rept. 1064), and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the consideration of bills, but, as I understand the Senator, the bill to which he refers is on the calendar.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it is a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is very much interested in getting it through.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any question that the bill will pass; but I think, perhaps, if the Senator will wait, we shall be able to get up the calendar, and then there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand the bill to which I refer is a Senate bill. However, let it go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

MIXED FLOUR.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Finance, I report Senate bill 7682 (S. Rept. 1062), and by direction of the committee I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator let the bill go to the calendar?

Mr. STONE. It never will be reached if it goes to the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; it will.

Mr. STONE. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to its consideration now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the bill reported from the Committee on Finance by the Senator from Missouri, for which he asks present consideration.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7682) to repeal sections 35 to 49, inclusive, of the act of June 13, 1898, concerning mixed flour as amended by the act of April 12, 1902.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal sections 35 to 49, inclusive, of the act of June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," as amended by act of April 12, 1902.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT CALDWELL CULBERTSON.

Mr. RANSDELL. From the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 20702) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Robert Caldwell Culbertson from Woodlawn Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Rocky Spring Cemetery, Chambersburg, Pa. (S. Rept. 1066). I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes to the calendar.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to make a short statement with reference to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19906). I shall occupy but a moment.

Mr. President, when the Post Office bill came over from the House to the Senate it included a great number of items of new legislation, some of them being very important. The Post Office Committee carefully considered the question and decided, under the circumstances and the press of time, that they would strike from the bill all items of new legislation and report to the Senate purely an appropriation bill.

The Senate passed the bill as reported by the committee after quite a good deal of delay and discussion. I said to Senators, both on this and the other side of the Chamber, that if they would permit the bill to be promptly passed as an appropriation bill and let it go to conference, the conferees would not report an agreement upon certain items in the bill without bringing it back to the Senate for an expression of their opinion upon them.

The conferees have had three or four meetings. We have made an earnest effort to get an agreement; and we have agreed upon all the items of the bill except one. The new legislation that we consented to on the part of the Senate is not very important. The item regulating railroad mail pay is a very important one, and it was as to that item particularly that I promised Senators on both sides that the conferees on the part of the Senate would not agree without giving them an opportunity to consider it.

The conferees on the part of the House have absolutely refused to permit a report of a partial agreement, or an agreement, in other words, to all the items in the bill except the one to which I have referred. They tell us that we must consent to a complete report; that we can not be permitted to bring that question back to the Senate for consideration, but we must take the bill as they have offered it to us, or we can have no bill at all.

That is the situation in which the Post Office bill is. We are to have another conference this morning. I do not know what the result will be, but I feel that I am in honor bound, in view of the promises I have made to Senators on both sides of the Chamber, to bring that item back and let them pass upon it. I promised to do it, and if I live long enough, I will do it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, as I understand, the only question at issue is as to the railway mail pay?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think that question is understood by the Senate, and we might have an expression upon it at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say that the conferees on the part of the Senate have almost humiliated themselves by saying to the conferees of the other House, "write the bill, except as to the items which we are in honor bound to carry back to the Senate." We can get no agreement to do anything; but we are told, "Take this bill as we bring it to you, or you will get nothing." It would be unfortunate to let the bill fail. It ought to pass. It is an important bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what special difference would it make if the House amendment were agreed to? I think in conversation with the Senator he told me that acceptance of the House provision as to railway mail pay would not make any material difference for the next year. Is not that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The conferees on the part of the House say that their proposition will cost the Government $500,000 more than the present law. Then, I say, "If that is true, why insist upon it, if you want to economize?"

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator whether he really believes that the House would approve of any such position as that taken by the conferees on the part of the House?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I can not answer that question.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the question in this way: Have the conferees of the House reported the disagreement to the House, and has the House acted upon it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have not reported, and absolutely refuse to report. They say, "We will not report anything until we get a full agreement on this bill," although it was the understanding that we were to have a full and free conference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. As I understand, he made a promise to the Senate that before any action was taken on the railway-mail pay item he would bring it back to the Senate for discussion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Would it not relieve the situation, so far as the Senate conferees are concerned, if the Senator were to get an expression now of those Senators present as to what is the attitude of the Senate in regard to the item, so as to instruct the Senate conferees and enable them to act without bringing the matter back for further discussion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would be an unusual proceeding.

Mr. SMOOT. The only way we could do that would be to have the conference report before us. We could not do that without having the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the suggestion which the Senator from Alabama makes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not make any. I want the Senate simply to understand the situation and to know the difficulties we are having in reference to this conference.

I want to say, Mr. President, that in my experience in Congress I have never known conferees to refuse to report a disagreement where a disagreement was reached on any item, and then let it go back to the respective Houses for instruction or for a vote, or some disposition of it; but we are simply tied up.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has given very careful and serious thought to this question, and I think the Senate will be very glad to hear his views as to what it would be best to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the best thing to be done and the thing that is usually done would be for the conferees to report, so far as they have agreed, and let the Senate adopt that partial report, and then let the two Houses of Congress pass upon the item in disagreement. It has got to go to the other House first. They hold the papers. But they will not agree to make a report.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand that they will not agree to that; but we have gotten into the habit of meeting emergencies. And what is the Senator's view as to what should be done in this particular emergency?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I have just said, my view is that the committe ought to report a disagreement and let the Senate settle it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are 29 or 30 more hours before the close of the Congress, and I think the first thing that the conferees ought to do is to meet again and allow the conferees on the part of the House, after a night's rest, to reconsider the attitude which they have taken.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We will have that meeting, necessarily, Mr. President.

I want to say further than the conferees on the part of the Senate have not insisted at all upon any proposition of their own. We have not asked the House conferees to adopt any suggestion of ours with reference to the amendment, but we have simply said, "We can not agree to report this measure back as the report of the conferees without first submitting it to the Senate, as we have promised to do."

I make this statement because I want the Senate to understand what our difficulties are, and that whatever happens it is not the fault of the Senate conferees.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, in a discussion of this kind there is always danger of something being said or done that would give offense to the other branch of Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and that is always to be avoided.

Mr. STONE. That, of course, would increase the difficulty. Because of that situation we have a rule about referring to Members of the other House or to the other House itself. We are very careful about that. Now, it seems to me that the best thing we can do is to do nothing more, and leave the matter in the hands of the conferees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator is quite right. I want to say further, Mr. President, that it has been a most delightful conference; there has been no friction between the conferees at all. We have just been unable to agree, that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume that if it comes to that, if the Senate conferees so recommended the Senate would have the power to recede from its amendment to the bill and relieve the conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not do that without the conference report being presented.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senate can not do anything until they get the papers back.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how the Senate now can relieve the conferees. I did not want any dispute about the matter, but I merely wanted the Senate to understand the situation, that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the House has the power to discharge the conferees and to recede from its disagreement, and I do not see why the Senate can not do likewise.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock this forenoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 27 minutes a. m., Wednesday, March 3, 1915) the Senate took a recess until 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 2, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise and magnify Thy holy name, our Father in Heaven, for the wonderful progress made in the material realm, but we pray for a greater spiritual awakening in the hearts of men which will bring them into closer relationship with Thee, that faith may be vitalized, hope intensified, love deepened and made stronger; that all the world may worship Thee in the beauty of holiness and make sacred the bonds of brotherhood; that evil may die and good live; that wars may cease and peace reign and make the old world vocal with anthems of praise in which the angels of heaven may join. In the name and spirit of the Lord Christ. Amen.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 97.]

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Alaskan fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Tioga Road.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on tariffs and panics in this country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of tariffs and panics. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. SABATH. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the examination and investigation of naturalization matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of naturalization. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on personal rural credits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on personal rural credits. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Military Academy appropriation bill and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the Military Academy bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The statement was read.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1475).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 15, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, and 20, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Lieut. Col. J. M. Carson, jr., Deputy Quartermaster General United States Army (now colonel, Quartermaster Corps), the sum of $1,975 disallowed on vouchers 7A and 8A of his money accounts for the month of May, 1909, and now standing against him on the books of the Treasury; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For repairs of the docks and wharves at West Point, N. Y., including all necessary labor and material therefor, $8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
HENRY A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 1698, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma calls up a conference report and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. The papers ought to be at the desk.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is the practice, and the correct method, too. The Clerk informs the Chair that the papers have not come back from the Printing Office.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA (SANTEE) SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 11246 from the Speaker's table, and ask for a conference on the same.

The SPEAKER. While the clerks are hunting for that the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] to suspend the rules and pass a small bill he has.

OLD POST-OFFICE BUILDING, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 21383, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the building heretofore known as the post office, situated at the corner of Third Street and Marquette Avenue, in the city of Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minn., be known and hereafter officially designated as the Federal office building and customhouse.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules and pass H. R. 21383, changing the name of a post office, with a committee amendment. Is a second demanded? If not, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA (SANTEE) SIOUX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 11246) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks to take this bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 1698, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1698) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1474).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1698) having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the said bill, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act and of the first five sections of said act of February 19, 1909, and acts amendatory thereof, excepting the act of June 17, 1910, entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead' in the State of Idaho, shall extend to and include the State of South Dakota."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1698) amending an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee.

The Senate amended the bill by adding thereto an additional section—section 2—which provided: First, the extension of the enlarged homestead law and amendments thereto to the State of South Dakota; second, the extension of section 6 of the enlarged homestead law, referred to as the act of February 19, 1909, to all the States named in the first section of said act.

The conference committee were willing to extend the provisions of the enlarged homestead law, and amendments thereto, to the State of South Dakota, with the exception of such provisions as granted to homesteaders the right to acquire homesteads without residence thereon. Also, the conference committee were unwilling to extend the provisions of section 6 of said act, which provided for nonresidence homesteads to all of the States named in the first section of the act, as was contemplated by the Senate amendment. To meet the foregoing the Senate and House conferees have agreed upon a new section to be known as section 2, which will take the place of the Senate amendment section 2, and which will extend the provisions of the enlarged homestead law and amendments thereto to the State of South Dakota, save and excepting the provisions of the law and amendments which provide for nonresidence homesteads.

There was at no time a difference of opinion as to the advisability of extending the enlarged homestead law, with the exceptions indicated, to the State of South Dakota, and the House conferees were quite willing to agree to this section upon the agreement of the Senate conferees to recede from the original section and to accept the proposed section in lieu thereof.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it was not possible from what hearing I could get, which was not very much, of the reading of the conference report to know just what this does. I wish the gentleman would explain the bill and the changes which have been made in it by these amendments.

Mr. FERRIS. I think I can in a word. The original bill was the bill of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], and it extended the 320-acre homestead law, the enlarged-homestead law, so called, to the State of Idaho. The bill passed the House last August and went over to the Senate. The Senate added an amendment making it applicable to the State of South Dakota, and they did considerably more. They also added an amendment providing that not only Idaho and South Dakota but all the other States that had this enlarged-homestead law should have section 6 of that law, which provides that they may acquire title to land without any residence thereon. I have always been opposed to that proposition. I opposed it when it was made applicable to Utah, and I have opposed it ever since then, my thought being that if we were to have a homestead at all certainly the part that the homesteader should play would be to get on the land and live there and help by taking his part in the community. I opposed it in conference, and it has been in conference five or six months. Finally the Senate receded from that section 6 proposition and agreed to the conference, so that section 6 was eliminated both for South Dakota and all the rest of the States. All we do now is to make the enlarged-homestead law of 320 acres each applicable to Idaho and South Dakota.

Mr. MANN. And the homesteaders have to go on the land?

Mr. FERRIS. Absolutely. We have cut the nonresident features out, and I think there can be no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, the amendment agreed to by the conferees simply extends the enlarged homestead to the State of South Dakota without extending section 6——

Mr. FERRIS. That is right.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). To South Dakota or any other State.

Mr. FERRIS. That is right; and I understand that both the Senators and Members of the House desire that.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. NORTON. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the bill as amended by the conference committee extends the provisions of the enlarged-homestead act to South Dakota but without extending the provisions of section 6 of the enlarged-homestead act?

Mr. FERRIS. That is correct.

Mr. NORTON. As I read the amendment agreed to, it extends the privilege of section 6 to something over 300,000 acres in South Dakota.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is in error about that. None of the conferees so understood it.

Mr. NORTON. Has the gentleman a copy of the report there?

Mr. FERRIS. I have the report in the RECORD; yes, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the Member from Idaho and others tried to prohibit that section from applying. If we did not do so, we do not know how to find language strong enough, because that was their intention.

Mr. NORTON. That was the provision extending the privilege of section 6 to 300,000 acres in South Dakota. That was in the Senate bill. Was that not agreed to?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That was the part we had trouble about over a year ago.

Mr. FERRIS. It was in conference almost a year, and that was receded from and the bill was passed. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION PORT AT VAN BUREN, ME.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21009) making an immediate transportation port of Van Buren, Me.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

Mr. MANN. We have not heard the bill yet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state it is a bill reported from the Ways and Means Committee extending immediate shipment to this port in Maine. There is no charge on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Van Buren, in the district of Portland, State of Maine.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me, I will state to the House that this is a unanimous report from the Ways and Means Committee. The bill was referred to the Treasury Department, and they advise there will be no charge on the Treasury by reason of the passage of it. It is a mere matter of convenience to those people. Is the bill on the Union Calendar?

Mr. GUERNSEY. It is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is not on any calendar. The Chair thinks that is the truth about the thing.

Mr. GUERNSEY. It is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. The bill is House Calendar 258.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 7566, and insist upon the House amendment, and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 7566. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. RUSSELL. And I make the same request as to Senate bill 7598.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 7598. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. RUSSELL. I insist upon the House amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to insist on the House amendments on the two bills referred to—and to agree to a conference?

Mr. RUSSELL. Agree to a conference. The Senate has already appointed conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees:

Mr. ADAIR, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. KINKAID.

CONSIDERATION OF BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, various gentlemen have bridge bills that are reported and uncontested, and if we could have unanimous consent I think we could get all of them considered.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think any of them are contested. I think all could be passed in 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to consume as much as 15 minutes, if necessary, in passing certain bridge bills that are not contested. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia, who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whether there is any prospect of having reported two resolutions, one to obtain information from the Treasury Department in regard to the sinking of the steamship Evelyn, and the other seeking to obtain general information on the subject of the War Risk Bureau.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the request is merely to have these bills considered, subject to objection when presented?

The SPEAKER. No. If you are going to object, now is the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to their being reported.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no objection to their being read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to get the time straightened out, because the Chair has before him a lot of applications for one thing and another. Is there objection to consuming as much as 15 minutes on these bridge bills, with the privilege of objecting to them when called?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I am to answer the question of my friend from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE], I hope it will not be taken out of this time. It is not relevant to the question of these bridges.

Mr. MOORE. It will take only a minute or two.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SUWANEE RIVER, FLA.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that bridge bill S. 7555 be reported. It is to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Suwanee River in the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the construction of a bridge across the Suwanee River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Fowlers Bluff, in the county of Levy, State of Florida, by the W. W. Cummer Sons Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of that State, the said bridge to be built and maintained in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, that bill is not exactly in due form, and if objection is to be made to the form of it I will move that it be amended. But it will take time and involve the risk of not being passed in the Senate if it is amended. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I notice, is not present at this moment; but after announcing the fact I am willing to let it go as it is.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is present and quite active just now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, ARK. AND TEX.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the next bill is Senate bill 7723, authorizing the Texarkana Board of Trade to construct a bridge across the Red River between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Texarkana Board of Trade, of Texarkana, Ark.-Tex., be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto over the Red River between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex., for railroad and other traffic at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and also the act of December 17, 1872, as amended by the act of February 14, 1883.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there are also some irregularities in the form of that bill; but for fear it will not be concurred in by the Senate, I refrain from recommending a change.

The SPEAKER. Where is the engrossed copy of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. The engrossed copy, Mr. Speaker, I think is upon the Speaker's desk.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is my understanding. It was held on the Speaker's desk.

Mr. WINGO. It is here. It was held on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. While the clerks are finding the papers the Chair suggests to the gentleman from Georgia to take up the next one.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT OR NEAR BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 21359.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Citizens' Bridge Co. and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Burlington, Iowa, in the county of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I recall when this bill passed through the House there was some criticism as to granting a franchise to a corporation that did not contemplate building this bridge for five years. I want to ask the gentleman what amendment has been made to this bill since it passed the House?

Mr. BARTLETT. This is a House bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think this is a new proposition, is it not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. This is a House bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. This is the bill of Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. He says those people are all right and are ready to go ahead with the work.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that we passed a similar bill the other day.

Mr. ADAMSON. No. That was at Muscatine and Keokuk.

Mr. MANN. I thought we passed the Kennedy bill the other day.

Mr. ADAMSON. That was the Keokuk bill. This is Burlington.

Mr. STAFFORD. When is this to be begun?

Mr. ADAMSON. The general act regulates that. It provides for one year in which to begin and three years in which to build.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House whether there is any real company at the present time back of this venture?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have consulted with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY], and he has some correspondence in regard to it. He says they are ready.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER, ARK. AND TEX.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I now have the engrossed copy of Senate bill 7723.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER, W. VA. AND OHIO.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 7949.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and it and they are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto over the Ohio River between the city of Parkersburg, in the State of West Virginia, and the town of Belpre, in the State of Ohio, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and also the act of December 17, 1872, as amended by the act of February 14, 1883.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a Senate bill identical with that on the Speaker's table. I prefer to pass the Senate bill. The House bill has been read, but the two bills are identical.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia know what is the number of that Senate bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. So many bills have come over in the last 24 hours that it is hard to keep track of them. Does the gentleman know the number of that Senate bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will give it to the Chair in a moment. I do not see the author of the bill here. Please let me withdraw that for a moment, and we will take up another one.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY, MO.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I send up the bill H. R. 21121, and ask that it be read as reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill as reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1914, to be built across the Missouri River near Kansas City, is hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from the 17th day of June, 1915.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this is an extension of the original bill granting the franchise, and it is in accordance with the general bridge bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider all of these bridge bills that have passed, and that the motion lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there are two other bills which I will call up later.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bills S. 6981, S. 7212, S. 7509, S. 7597, pension bills, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the pension bills S. 6981, S. 7212, S. 7509, S. 7597, insist on the House amendments, and agree to a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. SELLS.

EXPERIMENT AND MINE SAFETY STATIONS, ETC.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 15869, with Senate amendments, and ask that the same be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15869. An act to provide for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine safety stations for making investigations and disseminating information among employees in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the amendment—why it was reduced from 15 to 7?

Mr. FOSTER. The language was not quite clear. There was an impression that they might establish more than this number, and what we wanted to do was to bring the number up to 15. This clears up the language.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House the bill (H. R. 15038) amending the Federal reserve act with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15038. An act proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act relative to acceptances, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What is the effect of the Senate amendment providing that it shall not exceed the capital stock and surplus of such banks?

Mr. GLASS. The original bill put a limitation of one-half of the capital stock of the bank, and the House put on an amendment making the limitation within the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board. The Senate modified it so as to limit it to the entire capital stock and surplus of the bank.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the original bill provided for one-half of the capital stock; that is not the way it was presented to the House.

Mr. GLASS. No; but the House modified the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means the original law or the bill that we passed?

Mr. GLASS. The original law—the statute itself—put a limitation on the amount of acceptances that the bank might make should not exceed one-half of the capital stock of the bank.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is better than the original law, but I understand when the bill was brought before the House it was to permit certain banks that might engage in international acceptances to do that business which they probably would not be able to do if the acceptances were limited to one-half of the capital stock and surplus, and I suppose would still be unable to do it if the limit was raised to the entire amount of the capital stock and surplus.

Mr. GLASS. I think that is entirely true. I concur with the views of the gentleman from Illinois, and if I could hope to get a conference and get the bill back and pass it I would move to nonconcur.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman that he is making the proper motion. I simply wished to know what the effect was.

Mr. GLASS. I think it has a bad effect, but I think it is the best we can do under the circumstances, and I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REMOVAL OF SUITS FROM STATE TO FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the bill H. R. 6200, and consider it at this time.

Mr. CARLIN. What does it relate to?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It relates to the removal of cases from the State to the Federal courts on the ground of diversified citizenship.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 28 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 28. That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, of which the district courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by this title, which may now be pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the district court of the United States for the proper district. Any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the district courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by this title, and which are now pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed into the district court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being nonresidents of that State. And when, in any suit mentioned in this section, there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the district court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any State court in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State, any defendant being such citizen of another State may remove such suit into the district court of the United States for the proper district at any time before the trial thereof when it shall be made to appear to said district court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, or in any other State court to which the said defendant may, under the laws of the State, have the right, on account of such prejudice or local influence, to remove said cause: Provided, That if it further appear that said suit can be fully and justly determined as to the other defendants in the State court without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party to the suit will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties, said district court may direct the suit to be remanded, so far as relates to such other defendants, to the State court to be proceeded with therein. At any time before the trial of any suit which is now pending in any district court, or may hereafter be entered therein, and which has been removed to said court from a State court on the affidavit of any party plaintiff that he had reason to believe and did believe that from prejudice or local influence he was unable to obtain justice in said State court, the district court shall, on application of the other party, examine into the truth of said affidavit and the grounds thereof and, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said court that said party will not be able to obtain justice in said State court, it shall cause the same to be remanded thereto. Whenever any cause shall be removed from any State court into any district court of the United States and the district court shall decide that the cause was improperly removed and order the same to be remanded to the State court from whence it came, such remand shall be immediately carried into execution, and no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the district court so remanding such case shall be allowed: Provided further, That no case arising under an act entitled 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases,' approved April 22, 1908, or any amendment thereto, and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States: Provided further, That no suit against a corporation or joint-stock company brought in a State court of the State in which the cause of action arose shall be removed to any court of the United States on the ground that the parties are citizens of different States if the suit is brought in the county where the cause of action arose or within the county where the defendant is served with process and the plaintiff resides."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold his objection, in order that a statement may be made as to what the bill is?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the only change in existing law that this bill makes is in the proviso. This is a bill that has passed the House of Representatives in the last two Congresses.

My recollection is that in the Sixty-first Congress it was placed as an amendment upon the revision of the judiciary title. In the last Congress it was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously and passed the House unanimously. What it accomplishes is this: It prevents the removal of causes brought in State courts against State corporations simply on the ground of diversity of citizenship. A corporation organized within a State, say, for instance, in the State of Wisconsin, but which does business in the State of Michigan, can be sued in the courts of the State of Michigan and can not remove the suit simply on the ground of the diversity of citizenship, if this bill prevails. It has twice passed the House of Representatives. I very much hope that the gentleman from Arkansas can see his way clear to withdraw his objection. I am sure that upon having his attention called to it the gentleman will recall the bill perfectly.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I desire to state that when the bill was first called up, a moment ago, I ascertained that it was a bill which had been referred to my subcommittee, which had never been brought to my attention by the author of the bill or anyone else interested in its passage during the present session. There are several hundred bills in that condition, and if the Judiciary Committee should permit them to be brought up here now and passed by unanimous consent, some bill might be passed that ought not to be passed; but in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee that this bill has been formally considered, reported, and passed at a former session of Congress, which fact I now recall, and in view of the further fact that, while it is quite a long bill, the only change of existing law proposed in the bill is contained in the proviso, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose after a while.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, PARKERSBURG, W. VA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7646) to authorize Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Ohio River from the city of Parkersburg, State of West Virginia, to the town of Belpre, State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and it and they are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto over the Ohio River between the city of Parkersburg, in the State of West Virginia, and the town of Belpre, in the State of Ohio, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and also the act of December 17, 1872, as amended by the act of February 14, 1883.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, BOGALUSA, LA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21562) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at or near the city of Bogalusa, La.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the parish of St. Tammany, in the State of Louisiana, and the county of Pearl River, State of Mississippi, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Pearl River, near the city of Bogalusa, La., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, after line 2, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMSON. Those are all the bills which I desire to present, and I thank the Speaker and the House.

POST OFFICE, COHOES, N. Y.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21184) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building and site at Cohoes, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. For present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Is this bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. TEN EYCK. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. For the present, I will object.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Will the gentleman withhold his objection to this for a moment, until I explain——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get in a little later, probably.

NORMAN E. IVES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Commitcee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 723 (H. Rept. 1476).

Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, $1,200 to Norman E. Ives, for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the third session of the Sixty-third Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 2, strike out "$1,200" and insert "$800."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual amount that is paid to this expert.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall that during the last session the committee brought in a similar resolution providing for an allowance to this same employee. Can the gentleman inform the committee what was the amount of that?

Mr. LLOYD. Twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was for the very long session preceding, and this is merely for the session beginning December 7 and ending March 4?

Mr. LLOYD. No; that was intended to be for part of the Congress, and this completes it. We have been paying twelve hundred dollars a year for two Congresses. This resolution adds enough to make the payment during this Congress $2,000 instead of twenty-four hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the gentleman says twenty-four hundred dollars for two Congresses, I assume he means two sessions of Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. No; twenty-four hundred dollars for each of two Congresses—twelve hundred dollars a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. So you have reduced that so as to make it $2,000?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY COBB.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 692 (H. Rept. 1480).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to William McKinley Cobb for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the third session of the Sixty-third Congress as assistant clerk to said committee by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 2, strike out "$1,200" and insert "$800."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this provides the same payment for the person detailed to the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

G. D. ELLIS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 560 (H. Rept. No. 1479).

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, $1,200 to G. D. Ellis, for extra and expert services rendered in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-third Congress, as employee detailed from the Government Printing Office.

With the following committee amendment:

Lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "first and second sessions of the."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the amount that was paid in the last Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has the practice been continued of paying extra salaries for these services?

Mr. LLOYD. I think that has been in vogue for four years.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a new allowance, beginning with the Sixty-second Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What work does he perform?

Mr. LLOYD. He is the expert printing man in the office of the Clerk of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. What work has the office to perform that it should require the detail of a special man from the Printing Office?

Mr. LLOYD. He has to do with the work of the Clerk in connection with the bills of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. As they are engrossed and printed?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 751, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 751 (H. Rept. 1482).

Resolved, That after March 4, 1915, those members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, or a subcommittee thereof to be appointed by the present chairman, who are Members elect of the Sixty-fourth Congress, or a majority of them, be, and are hereby, authorized to continue the investigation directed by House resolution 203 of the Sixty-third Congress, and to expend for the purposes and as provided in said resolution, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum not exceeding the balance unexpended under said resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation made of this.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the explanation of this is that there remains some incomplete work to be done, and about $4,500 of the money remains unexpended. This is to continue the work.

Mr. STAFFORD. What work are these men engaged in?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In looking into the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this the work performed by the gentleman named Mayes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When is it expected that the work will be completed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I really do not know, because I do not know anything about accounting work, and I do not know what obstacles are in the way of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there is only $4,500 remaining available?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. About $4,500.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERKS, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 745 (H. Rept. 1481).

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such additional assistant clerks as may be necessary during the remainder of the Sixty-third Congress, the payment for services not to exceed the sum of $250, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the customary resolution for additional work at the end of the session?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSENGER SERVICE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 746 (H. Rept. 1477).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum not to exceed $100 for additional clerical assistance and messenger service in the enrolling room of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NELLIE M. MURDOCK.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 726 (H. Rept. 1478).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Nellie M. Murdock, widow of Samuel A. Murdock, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such messenger, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said Samuel A. Murdock.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTRICAL VOTING DEVICE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also have a privileged resolution (H. Res. 513) in respect to the electrical voting device.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman recognized for that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether that is privileged, but will ask the gentleman now to withhold it.

Mr. LLOYD. Very well.

ELLEN WILSON MEMORIAL HOMES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7743) to incorporate the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George Foster Peabody, Hugh C. Wallace, Arthur Jeffrey Parsons, Walter S. Ufford, Archibald Hopkins, Julia C. Lathrop, Grace V. Bicknell, and Charlotte Everett Hopkins, their associates and successors, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia by the name, title, and style of the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes, and by that name shall have perpetual succession; and it shall be lawful for the said corporation to have a common seal, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have and exercise all the rights, privileges, and immunities for the purposes of the corporation hereby created, which purposes are declared to be to acquire, hold, improve, rent, mortgage, sell, and convey real estate within the District of Columbia for building, in memory of the late Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, one or more blocks of sanitary houses for the working classes, and renting the same at a rental sufficiently low to cause the abandonment of dilapidated and insanitary houses, as an object lesson in the housing of the working classes under good conditions and at reasonable rates: Provided, That the value of any and all property so acquired shall not exceed the sum of $500,000: Provided further, That no land shall be acquired or house built thereon except of the character hereinbefore described.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said corporation shall be $25,000, divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each; and when said amount shall have been subscribed the said corporation shall be fully authorized and empowered to commence business: Provided, That said capital stock may be increased by the sale of additional stock from time to time, but the total issue thereof shall not exceed the sum of $500,000: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for the officers or directors of said corporation to declare any greater dividend to the stockholders than 5 per cent per annum upon the capital stock outstanding at the time of such dividend.

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the corporation shall be managed by a board of directors consisting of 15 persons, who shall for the first year be elected by the incorporators, hereinbefore named, and thereafter said board shall be elected annually in such manner as may be provided by the by-laws of the corporation; and such board of directors shall have power to ordain, establish, and put into execution such rules, regulations, ordinances, and by-laws as they may deem essential for the good government of the corporation, not contrary to the laws and the Constitution of the United States or of this act, and generally to do and perform all acts, matters, and things which a corporation may or can lawfully do.

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in the reading of the bill I did not grasp that part of the first section which refers to some dilapidated quarters or rookeries. I do not know whether there is any provision made for an appropriation for certain alleys——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no appropriation whatever in it. It is just to incorporate this society for the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ENCAMPMENT GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the District of Columbia Committee from and take up for present consideration Senate joint resolution 238, relating to the Grand Army of the Republic.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to discharge the District of Columbia Committee from the further consideration of and to take up and consider the Senate joint resolution. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 238) giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in the months of September and October, 1915, and for other purposes incident to said encampment.

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make such special regulations for the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, which will take place in the District of Columbia from September 27 to October 2, 1915, as they shall deem advisable for the preservation of public order and the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior to said encampment, during said encampment, and one week subsequent thereto. Such special regulations shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers of the District of Columbia, and no penalty prescribed for the violation of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication; and said commissioners are authorized and directed to establish a special schedule of fares, applicable to public conveyances in said District, during the period aforesaid. Any person violating any of the aforesaid regulations or the aforesaid schedule of fares shall, upon conviction thereof in the police court of the said District, be liable for such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, and in default of payment of such fine to imprisonment in the workhouse (or jail) of said District for not longer than 60 days. This resolution shall take effect immediately upon its approval, and the sum of $11,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia, in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this joint resolution, $1,000 of which shall be available for the construction, maintenance, and operation of public-comfort stations and information booths, under the direction of said commissioners.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to stretch suitable conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination within the District of Columbia: Provided, That the said conductors shall not be used for the conveying of electrical currents after October 2, 1915, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said city of Washington on or before October 20, 1915: Provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced; that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public; and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: Provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to the stretching, operation, or removing of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia: And provided further, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illumination purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia that the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the official in charge of said park or reservation.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of street decorations, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of decorating the streets of the city of Washington, D. C., on the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, 1915, such of the United States ensigns, flags (except battle flags), signal numbers, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States, as in their judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment. The loan of the said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., to said chairman shall not take place prior to the 15th day of September and shall be returned by him by the 15th day of October, 1915.

SEC. 4. That for the protection and return of said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., the said chairman, or his successor in office, shall execute and deliver to the President of the United States, or to such officer as he may designate, a satisfactory bond in the penalty of $50,000, to secure just payment for any loss or damage to said ensigns, flags, and signal numbers not necessarily incident to the use specified.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits to the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the use of any reservation or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the forty-ninth national encampment, in the months of September and October, 1915, which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces, or statuary therein; and he Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands and platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said citizens' executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That he Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the chairman of the medical department of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in the months of September and October, 1915, such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture, and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment: Provided, That the said chairman, or his successor in said office, shall indemnify the War Department for any loss to such hospital tents and appliances as aforesaid not necessarily incident to such use.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. Senate 5042, an act legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others in the State of Nevada, was referred to the Private Calendar. It seems to the Chair that it ought to go on the Union Calendar, and consequently it is rereferred to that calendar.

MAJ. JOHN O. SKINNER.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 2789, which is on the Private Calendar. The Clerk has it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says the bill is not here. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take up and consider the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2789) to award the medal of honor to Maj. John O. Skinner, surgeon, United States Army, retired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is this, a Private Calendar bill?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; it is a Private Calendar bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Chair is not going to recognize anybody else for unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. We have a Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That is what we are going to have called, except those Members who have bills on the Speaker's table, which can be taken up.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLIN. When will a Member be recognized to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. As soon as we get through with the Unanimous Consent Calendar we will begin on suspensions, unless conference reports come in or something of that character.

Mr. CARLIN. Just one moment. Will the gentleman waive his objection to this bill?

Mr. MANN. We have a regular order. We have a Unanimous Consent Calendar with a lot of public bills upon it, and I am not willing to take up bills on the Private Calendar until that is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be plenty of time to take up these bills.

Mr. HAY. How as to House bills with Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair will recognize those to get them out of the way.

Mr. HAY. I have one.

Mr. POU. I have four here.

ALONZO D. CADWALLADER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 1090. This is a House bill of Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1090) for the relief of Alonzo D. Cadwallader.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

VICTORIA COFFMAN.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9734, and to concur in the Senate amendment, which reduces the amount from $1,200 to $660.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9734) for the relief of Victoria Coffman.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Virginia any more bills?

Mr. HAY. That is all, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

EL PASO & ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY CO.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 2278, an act granting the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co. a right of way for its pipe lines and reservoir upon the Lincoln National Forest for the carrying and storage of water for railroad purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to get some information, if anyone present is in charge of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] is very anxious to get that bill up. Will the gentleman withhold his request for the present?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be temporarily passed, with the right to return to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE GEORGE WASHINGTON GLICK.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present for immediate consideration the following privileged report from the Committee on Printing, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Report No. 1485.

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) providing for the printing of 16,500 copies of the proceedings in the Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of the late George Washington Glick, accompanied by an engraving of said statue, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $4,022.09.

The unincumbered balance of the allotment for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, is $653,910.

Mr. MANN. We did not catch what this was for.

Mr. TAVENNER. The printing of the proceedings on the Glick statue unveiling in Statuary Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 30.

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound in one volume the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of the late George Washington Glick 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 shall be for use and distribution by the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kansas. The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure a suitable plate of said statue to accompany the proceedings.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

JOURNAL FORTY-NINTH NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

EL PASO & ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY CO.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2278, which was passed over a moment ago temporarily. It is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman desire to do with it?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up and now considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2278) granting the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co. a right of way for its pipe lines and reservoir upon the Lincoln National Forest for the carrying and storage of water for railroad purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a permanent right of way is hereby granted to the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of New Mexico, its successors and assigns, over, through, across, and upon the Lincoln National Forest, in the State of New Mexico, subject to the conditions herein contained, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of its present pipe lines now located thereupon, and such additions and extensions as it may make thereto, for the purpose of enabling it to carry water owned or in the future acquired by it to and along its railroad right of way situated outside of such national forest for use in its locomotive engines, cars, trains, railroad shops, and tanks, and other railroad purposes, together with a right of way over and right to improve, construct, maintain, use, and occupy the present reservoir site now used and occupied by such railroad company for the storage of water for such purposes.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted for such pipe lines shall be so much as may be necessary only for such purposes, not to exceed, however, 25 feet on each side of the present center thereof where the same is already constructed, and an equal width for all extensions thereof, or additions thereto; and maps of the location of any such extensions or additions to such pipe lines shall be prepared by the company and submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, in accordance with his directions with reference thereto, for his approval, and the right of way as to the same shall take effect from his approval thereof only.

SEC. 3. That the company shall conform to all and singular the regulations adopted or prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture governing such national forest, or the use or users thereof, and shall not take, cut, or destroy any timber within the same except such as it may be actually necessary to remove to construct its said pipe lines and the structures pertaining thereto, and it shall pay to the proper officer of the Forest Service the full value of all timber and wood cut, used, or destroyed by it within the said national forest.

SEC. 4. That no private right, title, or interest owned by any person, persons, or corporation in such national forest shall be interfered with or abridged except with the consent of the owner or owners or by due process of law and just compensation to said owner or owners; nor shall the privileges herein granted be construed to interfere with the control of water for any purpose under the laws of the United States or of the State of New Mexico.

SEC. 5. That the enjoyment of the rights hereby granted shall be subject at all times to all laws relating to the national forests and to all rules and regulations authorized and established thereunder. For infraction of such laws, rules, or regulations the owner or user of such right of way shall be subject to all fines and penalties imposed thereby, and shall also be liable in a civil action for all damages that may accrue from such breach, and if such infractions are continuous and willful, or if there is continued failure on the part of such company to pay any amount due the Forest Service from said company, for a period of 60 days after notice of the continuance of such infraction or of the amount so due, the rights herein granted shall be and become forfeitable in accordance with law.

SEC. 6. That the company shall continue to maintain the present watering troughs and supply water as at present for the use of animals lawfully grazing upon such national forest or at such other place along such pipe line, in lieu thereof, as the officer in charge of such national forest shall from time to time direct.

SEC. 7. That all right of way hereunder for such pipe line not constructed and in use within three years from the date hereof shall cease and determine at the expiration of such period.

SEC. 8. That this act shall not be construed as a recognition of any claim of the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co. and for concerning rights in the Hondo River or its tributaries, or of any claim of right to divert water from the watersheds of said streams, or as a waiver of any stipulation heretofore agreed to by the said company for use in the litigation concerning water rights pending in the United States district court for the district of New Mexico in which the United States and the said company are parties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like some information from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] regarding the bill. I would like to ask him, first, why the report does not contain any report from the department, if there has been such?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. We had information both from the Department of Agriculture and Dr. Galloway, before he went out, reviewing this legislation. The matter was submitted to him, and he raised no objection to the bill. There was also a communication from the Department of Justice, which went to the Senate committee that had this bill under consideration. They suggested one amendment to be placed in the original bill, and you will find that amendment incorporated in the bill. I think it is the last thing printed in the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Have there been written reports from the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Simply a communication was sent to those departments when this bill was submitted to them, asking their views as to whether or not the bill should be enacted.

Mr. LENROOT. Were the reports made?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes; written letters.

Mr. LENROOT. Why has not the gentleman included them for the information of the House?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. They were printed in the Senate hearings. We omitted to print them here. I think I furnished the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] with a copy of those letters.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman presented me with a typewritten copy of the statement of the Department of Agriculture. I understood the Department of Justice had strong objection to this bill because there was litigation in the courts involving this very question.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That was met by the amendment that was put in; and after it was put in no further objection was made. I can furnish the gentleman with a copy of that letter.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the same matter, has the gentleman any knowledge of this particular locality? Are there any other waters in this vicinity that might be affected rather than the waters in the Hondo River?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I think not. That is my understanding of it. I will say to the gentleman that I took this matter up personally with the Representative of New Mexico, who has personal knowledge of the whole matter there, and he reviewed it and found no objection to the bill as framed.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I want to ask the gentleman another question. What are the circumstances in this case that make it exceptional? And why should it be taken out of the general rule and general law with reference to revocable permits? I understand this company now has a permit, and that its pipe line is already constructed and in operation.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. There was a confusion between the departments—the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice. The Department of Agriculture had permitted this pipe line to be established there, and it seemed like some controversy was raised by another department, and the railroad had some trouble in disposing of their bonds when they needed to dispose of them, because this is the only good water they can get in that community, and it was a matter simply between those departments. Confusion arose there, and they desired this legislation in order that such confusion might not arise again. I will say that later, however, when this bill came out, the objection from the Department of Justice had been met by this amendment that has been written into the bill, and now that trouble between the two departments is ended.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the purpose of this bill, then, to strengthen the title of this company other than making a permanent tenure?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. It is not. You will find in the bill that it is not a permanent proposition at all; that if they should cease to use this pipe line for a period of 12 months it will revert back.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true of any pipe line. That is as true as can be.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I think that is true as a matter of law, but we, nevertheless, wrote it in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that prompted me to object when the bill was under consideration the last time was the character of the grant in the first section, authorizing this railroad to extend their lines wherever they may see fit. You will notice on the top of page 2 that this company is authorized to extend their pipe lines and make such additions as it may desire for the purpose of enabling it to carry water owned or in the future acquired by it to and along its railroad right of way, situated outside of such national forest, for use in its locomotive engines, cars, trains, railroad shops, tanks, and so forth. Does not the gentleman think it is rather questionable to grant this right to a railroad company without any limitation whatsoever as to where it may extend its lines, 100 feet in width, over this national forest?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I do not think so. It is just simply a matter of getting this clear water down from the top of the mountains to this right of way of the railway company. It is only for the purpose of getting the water down. I do not see where the Government can be injured in any way in the world.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would have no objection to granting a right of way as to their existing lines, but here we grant unlimited privileges as to extensions.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. So far as I know there is no idea on the part of the railroad company to change their line at all. This is the only water that they can get, and they have it now stored there, and they have got a pipe line down to their track.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not a question of changing their railroad. It is a question of making further extensions over the national forests, so as to tap more and more of the water supply as they may see fit.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I do not think there will be anything like that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. There are certain amendments in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The following committee amendments were read, considered, and agreed to:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the word "permanent."

On page 2, line 10, at the end of the line, strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may upon abandonment or nonuse of the same for the purpose for which it is granted for a period not less than one year declare said right of way or any part thereof forfeited and annul the same."

On page 4, line 20, strike out the words "and for" and in lieu thereof insert the words "of or."

On page 4, line 20, between the word "concerning" and the word "rights" insert the word "water."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I think, perhaps, this legislation ought to be passed, yet, in my opinion, it is unfortunate that it did not go to the proper committee. The Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction over a permanent easement in the forest reserves or over anything that permanently attaches as a matter of right of way to lands within the forest reserves. The Committee on Agriculture is evidently unfamiliar with this class of legislation. The Public Lands Committee members are familiar with it, and I think the bill would have come out in better shape if it had gone to the Committee on the Public Lands. It is probably entirely proper that the proviso be adopted; but, if adopted, it will, I fear, have little force or effect. It is just that much more language added to the bill. In my opinion we can not in that way give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to forfeit and annul a right of way unless the intent of it is to give the Secretary of Agriculture the same right that he now has in granting permits, in which event the law is of no benefit. I just call attention to these things as indicating the unwisdom of having legislation presented to committees that are not familiar with the subject matter, because not within their jurisdiction. I think, in the main, there is no special objection to the legislation. In my opinion it might have been in better form. I think it may confer much wider privileges than it seems to on first reading.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN and Mr. YOUNG of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TEMPORARY COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

The SPEAKER. Under the statute the Speaker is required to appoint a temporary Committee on Accounts to serve during the recess of Congress, and the Chair appoints Messrs. LLOYD, ABERCROMBIE, and GRIEST.

WINNEBAGO, OMAHA, ETC., INDIAN RESERVATIONS, NEBR.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9899) to authorize the laying out and opening of public roads on the Winnebago, Omaha, Ponca, and Santee Sioux Indian Reservations in Nebraska, with a Senate amendment, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read by title.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should like to know if there is an amendment to the title of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. No; there has been no amendment to the title.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think the title should be amended?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; the title should be amended by including the words "and Indian reservations in Montana."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

VALIDATING CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3878) to validate certain homestead entries.

The Clerk read the title to the bill, as follows:

S. 3878. To validate certain homestead entries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this gives an additional homestead right to anyone who has heretofore exercised that right, provided it was less than 160 acres of land.

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can you justify granting an additional homestead right to a man when he has exercised it once if it happened to be 159 acres?

Mr. STOUT. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was on the committee when the matter came up, and he is more familiar with this than I am.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman's statement is correct; but the fact is that in most of these cases the entryman had taken only 40 or 80 or 120 acres of land. I had a letter this morning from an entryman in Montana who had taken an 80-acre tract; although he made final proof on a 320-acre homestead he is denied a patent. However, it is true that the department went so far as to hold in some few cases—cases that will be perfected under this law—that if the entryman had formerly taken less than 160 acres, although it might be 155 acres, he could make the 320-acre entry.

I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that these people went on in perfect good faith, made filings, took lands, and held them, and if we now deny them it means that some one else will come along and make an entry on the lands that these people have improved.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can the gentleman claim that they entered upon the lands in good faith when they had formerly exhausted the homestead right and were exercising a second homestead entry to which they had no right?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman misunderstands. The department held beyond question that under the enlarged homestead law these men had a right to make these entries. Many entries were made where men had former entries of less than 160 acres—thousands of them. Finally the department changed the ruling, and these are the people who were caught by the change of ruling. All the cases I know of had made the entries before the department held that they were not qualified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Permit me to ask this question: If a person had previously entered upon a regular-sized homestead of 160 acres, he could not file again on his enlarged homestead?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I can explain this whole situation. The enlarged homestead law provides that any qualified homestead entryman may make an enlarged homestead entry. For 40 years the department had held that a man who had not completely exhausted his homestead right by securing his entire acreage was still a qualified entryman.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what extent?

Mr. MONDELL. Under the old law he would be a qualified entryman to the extent of sufficient acreage to fill out 160 acres, but under the enlarged homestead it says "all qualified entrymen may take 320 acres."

Mr. STAFFORD. Three hundred and twenty additional to the former allotment.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that was so held. If a man was a qualified entrymen he could take 320 acres; that is, in fact, the language of the law. In the majority of cases the old homestead was filed on years ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will not object; these men complied with the law and they entered under the rules of the department.

Mr. STOUT. I am going to suggest that the committee amendment making it 1915 shall be stricken out, and make it 1914, and that would simply take care of all the people who got in in perfect good faith and under the direction or instructions of the department took these additional filings.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me see if I clearly understand the situation. If a person had made a formal entry on a homestead of less than 160 acres, would he, under the provisions of this bill, be entitled to an additional 320 acres?

Mr. STOUT. No; he would be entitled to sufficient to make 320 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman from Wisconsin to have a misunderstanding about this matter. We want the bill passed, but we want it passed with a full understanding on the part of the House of what it is. The enlarged homestead law intended, and its language clearly indicated, that a man—a qualified homestead entryman—might take 320 acres, but it did not say that if I had made an entry of less than 160 acres I could take up enough to make 320. This was our reason, and it was discussed in the House and understood. We said that these lands which we were going to give were lands upon which a man can not make a living under 320 acres, and therefore we would be doing a man no kindness unless we gave him 320 acres. We therefore provided that if he is entitled to anything at all, he is entitled to 320 acres. Instead of saying that a man who had once used his homestead right for less than 160 acres could take enough to make up 320 acres, we said that any qualified entryman could take an enlarged homestead. For 40 years the department had held that a man was a qualified entryman until he had exhausted a 160-acre right. Now, gentlemen will understand that these original entries were made by these men years ago. Most of them probably got little out of them, and they went out there again on the frontier and made these entries. Finally the department changed the ruling, and held that a man was not a qualified entryman under law if he had used his homestead right at all. These men were caught by that change of ruling.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Did not the land officials recognize and accept these filings as regular?

Mr. MONDELL. They did. They entered in good faith under the law, and under the ruling at the time they made their entry, and we are simply perfecting their claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving further the right to object, I would like to inquire how many cases are involved if we limit the time to January 1, 1914?

Mr. STOUT. The best information I have been able to get is about 100 cases in our State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course there are other States where this law will apply?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I know definitely of but one case in Wyoming. No doubt there are more. This practice seems to have been more in vogue in one or two of the Montana districts than elsewhere.

Mr. STOUT. These are all in the Montana districts.

Mr. MONDELL. There were many cases just like these that were not caught by the decision, but I have no personal knowledge in my State where the change of ruling affected many cases.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to January 1, 1914, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who before making such enlarged homestead entry had acquired title to land under the homestead laws and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, be, and the same are hereby, validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "1914" and insert "1915."

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, under agreement with the committee, I will ask that the committee amendment be disagreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STOUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RURAL CREDIT—EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be allowed five calendar days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on rural-credit legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RURAL CREDIT COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 410, to create the national rural credit commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the action taken last night, I shall object.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I think not. I think we ought to get through this calendar.

Mr. BULKLEY. The gentleman is under a misapprehension.

Mr. MANN. I think I know what I am doing.

Mr. BULKLEY. The action last night has nothing to do with this commission.

Mr. MANN. In my opinion it has.

Mr. BULKLEY. The action last night had relation only to land-mortgage credits, and this resolution relates only to personal short-term credit. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. I have to object at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the resolution is stricken from the calendar.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT COHOES, N. Y.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21184) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building and site at Cohoes, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost heretofore authorized by Congress for the purchase of a site and the erection of a post-office building at Cohoes, N. Y., be, and the same is hereby, increased from $100,000 to $150,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$140,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TEN EYCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT JUDGE, ETC., WESTERN DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20894) to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be a district judge for the eastern district of South Carolina and a district judge for the western district of South Carolina, who shall be appointed as district judges are appointed in other judicial districts of the United States. The present district judge, who is a resident of the eastern district of South Carolina, is hereby assigned to said eastern district as the district judge thereof.

SEC. 2. That all causes of a civil nature and motions therein submitted and all causes and proceedings of a civil nature, including proceedings in bankruptcy, now pending in the western district of South Carolina in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part before the present district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, or taken in whole or in part and submitted to and passed upon by the said district judge, shall be retained by said judge and proceeded with and disposed of by said judge, who may for that purpose continue to exercise jurisdiction in the said western district.

SEC. 3. That there shall be a district attorney for the eastern district of South Carolina and a district attorney for the western district of South Carolina, who shall be appointed as district attorneys are appointed in other judicial districts of the United States. The district attorney for the eastern district of South Carolina and the district attorney for the western district of South Carolina shall each receive an annual salary of $4,500. The present district attorney, who is a resident of the eastern district of South Carolina, is hereby assigned to said eastern district as the district attorney thereof.

SEC. 4. That there shall be a marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina and a marshal for the western district of South Carolina, who shall be appointed as marshals are appointed in other judicial districts of the United States. The marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina and the marshal for the western district of South Carolina shall each receive an annual salary of $4,500. The present marshal, who is a resident of the eastern district of South Carolina, is hereby assigned to said eastern district as the marshal thereof.

SEC. 5. That terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Charleston on the first Tuesdays in June and December; at Columbia on the third Tuesday in January, first Tuesday in November; at Florence, first Tuesday in March; and at Aiken on the first Tuesdays in April and October.

Terms of the district court of the western district shall be held at Greenville on the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October; at Rock Hill, the second Tuesdays in March and September; and at Greenwood, the first Tuesdays in February and November.

The office of the clerk of the district court for the western district shall be at Greenville and the office of the clerk of the district court for the eastern district shall be at Charleston.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CULLOP:

After the word "States," page 1, line 6, insert the following: "Provided, That the President, previous to appointing said judge, shall make public all indorsements of the applicants for said position."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two about this amendment. It seems to me that no better way can be adopted to hamper the selection of good men than to adopt this amendment—whether it comes out of a party platform or not. If the President desires to obtain confidential information with reference to a candidate for a judgeship and asks anyone for that information, there is not one of you here who would want to give that information unless he felt assured that it would be regarded as confidential. I think I could almost appeal to the author of the amendment upon that ground. He would not desire to say publicly all he knew or heard or all that might be said against a candidate. The result of the adoption of such an amendment, as was shown the other day in one of these cases, is to make it impossible for the Executive, who can not know about every man, to obtain the very information that ought to be freely given. If one man writes a letter about a candidate for a judgeship, and tells frankly what he knows either for or against the man, because of his knowledge of the conditions in the community—and it may be a matter of mere reputation—that man should have the privilege of being assured in his own mind that what he says will be regarded as confidential, because, in the nature of things, it may be information upon which inquiry may afterwards be made. I can not understand how any such principle as is now proposed was ever adopted by anyone. I have heard it suggested that it is a good thing to let people who propose any such thing be responsible for it, but as a lawyer I can not consent, with my love for getting the best men for judges in the courts, that any such practice should be adopted. Such inquiry as the President may desire to make with reference to a candidate for a judgeship must be carefully made, and the answer in respect to it should be frank and free; and I ask this House to vote down this amendment, as being improper upon such a bill as this.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Cullop amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, we are frequently told on this side that we must vote for this proposition because it is contained in the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore in 1912. That platform, in the part of it devoted to interstate commerce and the regulation of interstate commerce and the regulation of issuance of stocks and bonds by corporations doing interstate-commerce business, had put between those two subjects, matters which were corollary and kindred, this provision:

We commend a Democratic House for extending the doctrine of publicity to the making public of indorsements of appointments as judges, both orally and written.

What action did they commend to the House? Now, I am, and have been, and am yet, an organization platform Democrat. I live in a country the safety of whose government and whose social system were protected and perpetuated by the organized Democracy and by those Democrats who never faltered in going to the polls and standing by the organization and standing by the platform, and if to-day the South has been rejuvenated, has risen from its ashes to command the attention and admiration of the world in so doing, it is due to the fact that the Caucasians of that locality were platform organization Democrats. We were platform organization Democrats because the Democracy, at least in that section, founded their devotion to Democracy on its reverence for and observance of the doctrines and the principles of the Constitution of our Government. But no man in that part of the country believed or contended that any party which put into its platform a doctrine that struck a death-blow at the provisions of the Constitution he was bound to follow it. We were organization platform Democrats because we believed the doctrine of the Democratic Party was from the inception and its birth founded and builded upon the observance of the Constitution. We fought out a great war between the States because we went to war, as we believed and fought it out, that we were endeavoring to have the Constitution observed and enforced. However, I need not refer any further to that. One of the great principles of this Government is that the departments of the Government shall be separate and distinct, and the one shall not——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask for five minutes more, and I shall not consume longer time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. That the President, the Executive, shall not encroach upon the privileges of the legislative or the legislative upon those of the Executive.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. FALCONER. The President of course appoints a judge; does he not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. FALCONER. Then, why is he breaking into the other branches of the Government in having to do that? Publicity is making known to the world the men who recommend a judge, for instance.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; that is not the proposition. The proposition is that you require the President to do something which the Constitution does not require of him, and which the House and the Senate has no right to inquire into, except perhaps the indorsements filed with the Department of Justice. The Senate and not the House under the Constitution is the advisor and confirming body. I happen to have investigated on one occasion this question, which came up during Mr. Cleveland's first administration, when the Senate called for all this information that he had in reference to the appointment of district attorney in Alabama. The President replied, even to the Senate, that was the advisor and confirming body of all appointments made by the President and entitled to the official papers filed in the Department of Justice for the nomination, that the advice given to the President upon those appointments that those were matters over which the Senate had no control and no authority to inquire into; and such great lawyers as Edmunds and Hoar and Vest and George in the Senate agreed to that view.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, would it not have been more or less illuminating had the public had all the correspondence and letters passed at the time Mr. Archbald was appointed judge, for instance?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, one bad case does not make a good law or a bad law.

Mr. FALCONER. And Judge Noyes, of Alaska, for instance.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know anything about these cases, except one was impeached, and probably it was right that he should have been impeached.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The recommendations were probably good.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the recommendations were probably good; and if my friend from Washington were an applicant for a judge—and I should be very glad to indorse him if he were, because I do not doubt he would make a good, honest, and faithful one—but if I were a public character, the president of a corporation, of a railroad corporation, and wanted to destroy the gentleman from Washington, I would have my corporation indorse him, with the idea that that was the way to get rid of a good man and a good judge.

Mr. FALCONER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say you can not do any damage by turning the light on public officials.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is not the point.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would ask, as a practical method of working these recommendations, would it not be a way to kill a very good judge by getting certain people to indorse him?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have just said that. See how the amendment reads. It says, "Shall make public." Are you going to nail it on the Department of Justice, on the White House, or on the Senate, like a notice of a bailiff's sale in a justice's court? How shall it be made public? Would it be published in the newspapers? The whole thing is ridiculous. That is the truth about it. We ought not to further engage in this folly and foolishness.

Mr. HULINGS. I did not object to the consideration of this bill, but I should like to know what necessity there is for providing an additional district judge, an attorney, and a marshal in the western district of South Carolina. And, pending that, I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] if it would not serve all the purposes that he seeks in his amendment if it would require that the names of the recommenders be made public? It would not be necessary that the recommendations should be published, but the public should very properly know who were behind these appointments. I think that would avoid the objections of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], which he so very cogently stated. But if the public could know who are behind and seeking to have these appointments, I think it would be securing everything in the way of publicity that would be desirable.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CULLOP. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House proceeded to divide; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes were 45.

Mr. MANN. Not a single gentleman from South Carolina votes against the amendment, knowing the amendment will kill the bill, and after begging me, too.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noes will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-four gentlemen have voted in the negative. Upon this vote the ayes are 45 and the noes are 34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman who proposes the bill a question. What is the necessity for this additional judge?

Mr. FINLEY. It is the amount of public business.

Mr. HULINGS. I know it is very well to say that in a general way.

Mr. FINLEY. There are two districts there, and there is only one set of court officials for the entire State. In the State of South Carolina there are between 1,800,000 and 1,900,000 people to-day, and the growth and wealth of the upcountry has been such as to make legislation of this sort necessary. Now, I will state to the gentleman I know of a case where I was interested as plaintiff's attorney. I do not know how much the real estate was worth, but it was considerable, and the lawyers for the defense, on appeal, complained that they did not have sufficient time in which to present their side. One judge for the entire State can not well attend to the business.

Mr. HULINGS. How much business is there in the State of South Carolina, and how much is it behind?

Mr. FINLEY. As to how much it is behind I do not know at this time, but the public business has not been dispatched—and can not be by one man—in a satisfactory way. And this is about the fourth time this bill has passed this House, in the event it passes to-day. It passed twice in the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HULINGS. And it appears to the gentleman to be absolutely needed?

Mr. FINLEY. Absolutely.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I think the title ought to be amended. I suppose it can be done.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. AIKEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FEDERAL POST OFFICE, CARLISLE, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18645) for the acquisition of additional site and improvements on Federal post office at Carlisle, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill just reported? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether there is objection to considering the bill. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 for the acquisition of additional land for a site and for the improvement and alteration of the Federal post office at Carlisle, Pa.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing certain improvements on the Federal post office at Carlisle, Pa."

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Lines 6 and 7, strike out "$20,000 for the acquisition of additional land for a site and" and insert "$3,500."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUPLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DELIVERY OF CONDEMNED CANNON, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5495) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

Mr. THOMAS. I move, Mr. Speaker, to amend by inserting:

Two cannon and carriages and cannon balls, for Russellville, Ky., the Confederate monument at that place, and two cannon and carriages and suitable balls for the Federal monument at Morgantown, Ky.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will suggest to the gentleman that I have some amendments to offer, and while I am offering them he can prepare his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 31 as a new paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, insert after line 5, the following: "To the town of Maryville, Tenn., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages, not needed for public purposes, the same to be placed in the public park of the said town of Maryville."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I offer another amendment, Mr. Speaker, to come in after that one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the close of the amendment just adopted insert: "To the city of Bardstown, Ky., to be placed on grounds of the public building in said city, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the close of the amendment just adopted insert: "To the village of Johnstown, in the county of Licking, State of Ohio, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with a carriage and suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the amendment just adopted: "To Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, located at St. Joseph, Mo., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the amendment just adopted:
"To the Grand Army of the Republic Post, Neosho, Mo., two bronze cannon."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I offer the following amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the last amendment:
"To the city of Covington, Ky., two condemned brass or bronze cannon, with carriages, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be mounted in the public park of said city."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted insert:
"To donate to the town of Houston, Halifax County, Va., one condemned bronze or brass cannon, to be used in the public square of said town."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I offer the following amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the last amendment add:
"Two bronze or brass cannon for the use of the Colonel Ezra Griffin Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Scranton, Pa."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the last amendment insert:
"Two condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages, with pyramids of balls, for the courthouse yard at Stanford, Ky., to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted insert:
"To the city of Delafield, in the county of Waukesha, in the State of Wisconsin, two condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls for two pyramids not needed for the service."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have that amendment reported again?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the last amendment again, if there be no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, this is my amendment. I move to strike out the word "city" and insert the word "village."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I suggest to my colleague that he insert the words "Waukesha County Historical Society" in place of the word "village," and also that he increase the number of cannon to four instead of two. The purpose is to decorate the Cushing Memorial Monument, which has been erected through an appropriation by the State of Wisconsin and donations of public-spirited citizens. I suggest a change in the name of the donee, as there is no municipality, and the society has had general supervision of the erection of the monument.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, we can not give you four cannon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman ought to have six. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be plenty more for the other gentlemen who are going to apply.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can send down an amendment to apply for the other two.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, a great many gentlemen have brought me amendments to offer, which are already included in the bill under consideration. Every bill which was introduced by any Member before the date of the report of this bill was added as a House amendment to the Senate bill, and if gentlemen will look at the bill and find out whether their cannon are included in it or not, they will save a lot of time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I hope that if the gentleman from Virginia offers amendments at the suggestion of Members of the House, he will keep a record of those at whose request he offers the amendments. If this bill becomes a law, the time will come when some of the gentlemen who have been so anxious to have these amendments placed in the bill will wish they had never been born. I recall the experience of a former Member of this House on one of these matters. There was a public park in a town in his district, and he secured the passage of a bill——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. DIES. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. Under what rule is the gentleman from New York speaking?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am opposing this amendment.

Mr. DIES. Is the gentleman speaking under the five-minute rule or the one-hour rule?

The SPEAKER. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This gentleman to whom I refer secured the passage of a bill providing for several condemned cannon and sufficient cannon balls to form a pyramid in a park as an ornament. After the bill became a law he was notified by the Secretary of War that the cannon had been assigned, that the cannon balls had been selected, and that the War Department was ready to ship the cannon and cannon balls as soon as arrangements were made to pay the freight. He had secured the passage of this bill at the request of some patriotic citizens in his community. He made some inquiries, and the result was that he directed the Secretary of War to ship the cannon, assuring him that he would be personally responsible for the expense. By the time the cannon and cannon balls reached the park and were properly mounted his expenses amounted to $1,400. I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will keep a careful record of the gentlemen who are offering amendments to have condemned bronze and brass cannon and cannon balls which are now obsolete donated to various parks and places in their districts, so that when the War Department comes to the point where it is prepared to have the cannon and cannon balls shipped to the respective places it will know the gentlemen with whom to communicate in order to arrange for the payment of the expenses incident to the donation. And I hope those gentlemen who are offering the amendments will keep in mind the fact that their constituents will expect the cannon and cannon balls to be put in place without expense to the locality.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to get the exact amount. Was it $1,400?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was about $1,400. It may have been a little more or a little less, but my recollection is that it was in the neighborhood of $1,400.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many Chautauqua lectures would it take to pay for that? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman from New York mean to intimate that it is going to cost each of us $1,400 if we get these amendments passed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this bill becomes a law, when the War Department is ready to ship these guns and cannon it will call upon some one to provide a guaranty that the cost of shipping and erecting will be provided.

Mr. HOWARD. Then I will withdraw my amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am calling attention to the fact that a former Member of this House from the State of Ohio found himself in a predicament where it cost him in the neighborhood of $1,400. That is why I am asking the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to keep a careful record of the gentlemen who are now pressing him to offer amendments, so that the department will have the proper persons in mind to whom to apply for the necessary expenses.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that just now I would like to present the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, so as to get that out of the way, and then we will come back to this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the meantime these gentlemen can reconsider the propositions.

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Members who introduce these amendments are expected to pay the freight? [Laughter.]

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill H. R. 20347, the Army appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up a conference report on the Army bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. KEATING rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. KEATING. I reserve the right to object, and I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he will object to making a motion that the House instruct the conferees to adhere to the amendment in regard to the Taylor system.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not want to make a motion to adhere. I had intended to make a motion that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate on the Taylor system.

Mr. KEATING. I want to show the Senate that the House is back of the conferees.

Mr. HAY. I think the Senate knows that already.

Mr. KEATING. If the House adopts the motion that I have in mind, there will be no question about it.

The SPEAKER. The motion the gentleman has in mind is the motion to insist.

Mr. KEATING. No; to adhere.

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object to a motion of that kind. If we adopted a motion of that kind, there will be no further conference on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the statement be read in lieu of the report?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NOS. 1488 AND 1499).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 58, 70, 112, 114, 115, and 116.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of not more than three Army officers, whose duty it shall be to report upon the advisability of the acquirement by the United States Government of land near the Bay of San Diego, San Diego County, Cal., and elsewhere on the Pacific, Gulf, and Atlantic coasts, for an aviation school and training grounds of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, and said commission shall ascertain and report what would be the probable cost of acquiring such land; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray any expenses incurred by the said commission in the performance of the duties herein imposed upon it"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That chapter 6, Title XIV, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'1. The United States Military Prison, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., shall hereafter be known as the United States Disciplinary Barracks.

"'2. Persons sentenced to confinement upon conviction by courts-martial or other military tribunals of crimes or offenses which, under some statute of the United States or under some law of the State, Territory, District, or other jurisdiction in which the crime or offense may be committed, are punishable by confinement in a penitentiary, including persons sentenced to confinement upon conviction by courts-martial or other military tribunals of two or more acts or omissions, any one of which, under the statute or other law hereinbefore mentioned, constitutes or includes a crime or offense punishable by confinement in a penitentiary, may be confined at hard labor, during the entire period of confinement so adjudged, in any United States, State, Territorial, or District penitentiary, or in any other penitentiary directly or indirectly under the jurisdiction of the United States; and all persons sentenced to confinement upon conviction by courts-martial or other military tribunals who are not confined in a penitentiary may be confined and detained in the United States Disciplinary Barracks.

"'3. The government and control of the United States Disciplinary Barracks and of all offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein shall be vested in The Adjutant General of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall from time to time make such regulations respecting the same as may be deemed necessary, and who shall submit annually to Congress a full statement of the financial and other affairs of said institution for the preceding fiscal year.

"'4. The officers of the United States Disciplinary Barracks shall consist of a commandant and such subordinate officers as may be necessary, who shall be detailed by the Secretary of War from the commissioned officers of the Army at large. In addition to detailing for duty at said disciplinary barracks such number of enlisted men of the staff corps and departments as he may deem necessary, the Secretary of War shall assign a sufficient number of enlisted men of the line of the Army for duty as guards at said disciplinary barracks and as noncommissioned officers of the disciplinary organizations hereinafter authorized. Said guards, and also the enlisted men assigned for duty as noncommissioned officers of disciplinary organizations, shall be detached from the line of the Army, or enlisted for the purpose; and said guards shall be organized as infantry, with noncommissioned officers, musicians, artificers, and cooks of the number and grade allowed by law for Infantry organizations of like strength: Provided, That at least one of said guards shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a battalion sergeant major.

"'5. The commandant of the United States Disciplinary Barracks shall have command thereof and charge and custody of all offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein; shall govern such offenders and cause them to be employed at such labor and in such trades and to perform such duties as may be deemed best for their health and reformation and with a view to their honorable restoration to duty or their reenlistment as hereinafter authorized; shall cause note to be taken and a record to be made of the conduct of such offenders; and may shorten the daily time of hard labor of those who by their obedience, honesty, industry, and general good conduct earn such favors—all under such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe.

"'6. The Secretary of War shall provide for placing under military training those offenders sent to the United States Disciplinary Barracks for confinement and detention therein whose record and conduct are such as to warrant the belief that upon the completion of a course of military training they may be worthy of an honorable restoration to duty or of being permitted to reenlist; may provide for the organization of offenders so placed under military training into disciplinary companies and higher units, organized as Infantry, with noncommissioned officers, except color sergeants, selected or appointed from the enlisted men assigned to duty for that purpose pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 4 hereof; and may provide for uniforming, arming, and equipping such organizations.

"'7. Whenever he shall deem such action merited the Secretary of War may remit the unexecuted portions of the sentences of offenders sent to the United States Disciplinary Barracks for confinement and detention therein, and in addition to such remission may grant those who have not been discharged from the Army an honorable restoration to duty, and may authorize the reenlistment of those who have been discharged or upon their written application to that end order their restoration to the Army to complete their respective terms of enlistment, and such application and order of restoration shall be effective to revive the enlistment contract for a period equal to the one not served under said contract.

"'8. The Secretary of War may, from time to time, designate any building or structure or any part thereof under the control of the Secretary of War and pertaining to the Military Establishment as a branch disciplinary barracks for the confinement and detention of offenders who it is impracticable to send to the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; and all branch disciplinary barracks and all offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein shall be subject to the laws respecting the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendment of the Senate numbered 107 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
H. A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT.

Statement of the managers on the part of the House as to disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916:

Amendment 19 provided for the appropriation of $400,000 for the purchase of an aviation school and training grounds, and the erection of buildings thereon, on or near the Bay of San Diego, Cal. The House receded with an amendment providing for a commission to ascertain the feasibility of purchase and the probable value of land at San Diego and at other places on the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts, and appropriated $1,000 to pay expenses of said commission.

Amendment 58 was an amendment respecting the government and control of the United States military prison; and the Senate receded.

Amendment 70 was an amendment providing for the purchase of a tract of land containing 280 acres adjoining the United States Army post at Missoula; and the Senate receded.

Amendment 112 was an amendment placing upon this bill the articles of war; and the Senate receded.

Amendment 113 was an amendment relating to the control and discipline and change of name of the United States military prison; and the House receded with an amendment.

Amendment 114 was an amendment providing for the detail of officers to the Judge Advocate General's Department; and the Senate receded.

Amendment 115 was an amendment repealing certain laws in conflict with the Articles of War, as set forth in the Senate amendment; and the Senate receded.

Amendment 116 referred to the offenses and penalties set out in amendment 112 of the Senate; and the Senate receded.

Amendment 117 was an amendment referring to the taking effect of the Articles of War and the government of the military prison; and the House receded with an amendment.

Senate amendment 107, respecting the Taylor system, is in disagreement.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to, and that motion lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate 107, and on that motion I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 21.

So the House voted to further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 107.

DELIVERY OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the bill for the delivery of condemned cannon, I ask unanimous consent to offer these amendments that I hold in my hand en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to offer certain amendments en bloc.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the right to offer them as one amendment.

Mr. HAY. I offer them as one amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear the names read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will hear the names read.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will they be read and go in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Of course they will.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman from Virginia asked unanimous consent to offer these en bloc, and I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia modified that and actually offered them as one amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to offer anybody's amendment unless he wishes. If the gentleman from New Jersey wants to offer his own amendment, let him offer it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not any amendment to offer.

The SPEAKER. It is not a matter that the gentleman from New Jersey can object to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Virginia think that we could adopt an amendment which would allow each Member of Congress to get these cannon without offering these amendments?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire some information. I would like to know what the character of the cannon is, whether they have any value or not. Not long ago we began to pass these bills and dispose of cannon of considerable value that might be made over and were made over when the matter was stopped. I want to inquire what we are doing.

Mr. HAY. We are providing for bronze and brass cannon that are of no further use.

Mr. SHERLEY. Bronze and brass are very valuable, and they can be made over, and the House ought to understand what is it doing.

Mr. HAY. Some years ago the Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill providing for the gift of cannon, and put in the bill a provision that thereafter the cannon must be bought as junk and paid for according to the value of the brass and bronze which was in them. Since that time gentlemen have introduced these bills asking for these cannon. A large number of them passed the Senate; and when this omnibus Senate bill came over the House committee thought it was nothing but fair to add to the bill the cannon bills introduced by the Members of the House. Now, whether or not Congress wants to give away these cannon is another question; that is a matter of policy.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is a matter of importance, also.

Mr. HAY. It is my opinion that hardly a third of these cannon will ever be called for, because the bill provides that the party who gets the cannon shall pay the expenses of transporting them from the arsenal where they are to the point of destination.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the bill provide for paying the value of the brass and the bronze that are in the cannon?

Mr. HAY. No; it provides that the town or association or individual to whom these cannon are donated shall pay all the expenses and that the United States shall be at no expense whatever.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman stated that some time ago his committee secured the passage of a law requiring the payment of the value of the brass or bronze in the cannon.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman propose to change that policy?

Mr. HAY. That is the law now. They now come forward and ask us to give them these cannon. It is a matter of policy.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit the House ought to know the value of these cannon before it gives them away.

Mr. HAY. I do not know what the value is.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know that they are worth a good deal, and I know that protest was made to me by the Ordnance Department the last time a wholesale giving away of these cannon was undertaken.

Mr. HAY. I have no doubt of that; but if the gentleman from Kentucky thinks this bill ought not to pass and that these cannon ought not to be donated in this way, I have no objection to the gentleman taking that attitude.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that; but the reason that I am interrogating the gentleman is in order that the House may appreciate what it is doing, that we shall not in our generosity to each other give away the property of the United States that is of value.

Mr. HAY. It is of considerable value.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much is one of these brass or bronze cannon worth after it has reached the point of disuse?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will answer that. It is worth about $80.

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not answer that question, but I should say in many instances it is worth more than $80.

Mr. FIELDS. I would say from eighty to one hundred and fifty dollars each.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is simply a question of whether the House wants to give these cannon away. I am not blaming the gentleman, only I want the House to know what it is doing.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question with respect to the bill. Can the gentleman tell us how many cannon are provided for in the bill with the Senate amendment?

Mr. HAY. As nearly as I could tell, two or three hundred cannon.

Mr. MOORE. There are 30 pages in the House bill with the Senate amendment, and they average about 15 to 20 cannon a page, I should say, and I was wondering whether we had enough cannon to go around.

Mr. HAY. I do not know how many they have.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. There are somewhere near 20 in the Senate bill and 152 in the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not require the Secretary of War to dispose of any cannon. It only authorizes him in his discretion to deliver certain condemned cannon as provided in the bill. I know that the metal in the cannon is worth something to remelt and reuse. I doubt whether there are enough condemned cannon to supply all of the provisions in this bill; but I also doubt very much whether they will all be called for. I really believe that the best use that can be made of these old condemned cannon is to put them up somewhere in a cemetery or around some memorial, or in connection with some public work in a city or a village where their presence will tend to make people patriotic. [Applause.] I believe they should be placed where they will make the Government endeared to the people, and where they will talk of defending the flag and of the national honor. There is nothing, in my judgment, that does more good in the use of cannon than using them this way. God knows it is better to do it in this way than to put them to the use for which they were made. [Applause.]

[Mr. DIES addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to offer an amendment so as to secure for my town a couple of these guns.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not get in right now, because there is an amendment pending. All these pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment, and the Chair will ask gentlemen to listen carefully to see that their requests are all in the bill. The Members will understand this is offered as one amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BAKER: Page 31, line 5, after the word "balls" insert:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion, to deliver to the city of Wildwood, Cape May County, N. J., two bronze or brass cannon with carriages and suitable balls."

Amendment by Mr. ANDERSON:

"To Wabasha, Minn., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. WALSH:

"In the township of Bernards, County of Somerset, Bernardsville, N. J., two condemned brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages with suitable outfit of cannon balls for two pyramids."

Amendment by Mr. EAGAN:

"For the public square in front of the township hall, North Bergen, in the County of Hudson and State of New Jersey, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages with suitable outfit of cannon balls for two pyramids.

"To the Georgia Military Academy, at College Park, Ga., two brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces with a suitable number of cannon balls for pyramid."

Amendment by Mr. BELL of California:

"To the city of Pasadena, Cal., for the use of the Spanish War Veterans of said city of Pasadena, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and carriage together with a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"Two condemned bronze or brass cannon and two pyramids of cannon balls for the soldiers' monument at the city of Vincennes, Ind."

Amendment by Mr. HEFLIN:

"Two bronze or brass cannon for the battle ground of Horse Shoe Bend, in the State of Alabama."

Amendment by Mr. RUPLEY:

"To the Grand Army of the Republic of the city of Lebanon, Pa., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with a carriage and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To the city of Americus, in the County of Sumter and State of Georgia, two condemned or brass cannon, with carriage and a suitable outfit of cannon balls for use in the public park, to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

"One condemned bronze or brass cannon with cannon balls to the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul, Minn., to be placed in the public park of such college.

"To Grand Army of the Republic Post, El Paso, Ill., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be placed in the public parks."

Amendment by Mr. LOGUE:

"Two bronze or brass cannon, with sufficient cannon balls, to the Hattie A. Jones Post, Grand Army of the Republic, for monument in Lexington County, Roxborough, Philadelphia."

Amendment by Mr. RUPLEY:

"To the Grand Army of the Republic of the city of Carlisle, Pa., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with a carriage and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. LEVY:

"Two bronze cannon to be placed alongside of Gen. Franz Seigel statue on the Riverside Drive, New York City."

Amendment by Mr. FALCONER: Page 15, line 5, add as a new paragraph:

"Two condemned brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls for display purposes in public works of the city of Everett, Wash."

Amendment by Mr. RUPLEY:

"To the Grand Army of the Republic of the city of Harrisburg, Pa., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with a carriage and suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"Two bronze or brass cannon for Grand Army of the Republic Post, El Paso, Ill."

Amendment by Mr. SLOAN:

"To the city of Crete, State of Nebraska, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece with carriage and a suitable outfit of cannon balls for use of park."

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is it in order for me now to offer to amend by an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Of course it is when the Clerk has finished reporting all the amendments as one amendment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DIES. To strike out the last two cannon balls, or the last two words.

Mr. MANN. The amendment has not been reported yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas when the Clerk has completed reporting the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reporting of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend my amendment by adding at the end thereof:

To the city of Carrollton, Ga., two brass or bronze cannon, with carriages and three pyramids of shells, to be used for ornamental purposes on the public square.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the amendment written out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir; if the Clerk can read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the city of Carrollton, Ga., two condemned bronze guns or brass cannon, with carriages and three pyramids of shells, to be used for ornamental purposes on the public square.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, which I have placed in the Clerk's hands.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman propose to offer it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DIES. I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FIELDS. I want to offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. You can do it after the gentleman from Texas has used his five minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I partially agree with the disposition of these gentlemen to locate these cannon over the country. They ought to be located. Now is the most opportune time in the history of our world to locate the cannon of the country in Georgia, and Pennsylvania, and Maryland, and Maine, and they ought to have the balls, the leaden, molten images of death, located about in Georgia, at the schools and playgrounds of our country. This ought to be an opportune time to locate them, when half of the world is engaged in a fratricidal warfare and half of the world, Mr. Speaker, is engaged in the death grapple. Now is a good time. Moreover, in this Republic we have an admirable example of the fruition and greatness of war. Already we have spent four or five millions of dollars paying the pensions of soldiers.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the rest of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the city of Delafield, in the county of Waukesha, in the State of Wisconsin, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages and with suitable outfit of cannon balls for two pyramids, not needed for present service.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he wants that to stay as "city of Delafield" or "village of Delafield"?

Mr. COOPER. Village of Delafield.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will strike out the word "city" and insert the word "village" in lieu thereof.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SLOAN:

"To the city of Stromsberg, State of Nebraska, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece, with carriage and suitable outfit of cannon balls, for use of public park.

"To the town of Russellville, Ky., for the Confederate monument, two cannon with their carriages and suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To the Grand Army of the Republic Post of Morgantown, Ky., for the Federal monument, two cannon and their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To the city of Clinton, Mo., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington:

"To the city of Aberdeen, Wash., for use in public park, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. WATSON: Page 31, as a new paragraph:

"To donate to the town of Boydton, Va., two cannon or fieldpiece carriages, not needed for the present service, to mount cannon on either side of the Confederate monument on the courthouse square in said town, in the State of Virginia.

"To the town of Manassas, Va., two bronze or brass cannon, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. GREEN of Iowa:

"To the town of Guthrie Center, Iowa, two condemned brass or bronze cannon, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"Two bronze or brass cannon and two pyramids of cannon balls, for soldiers' monument, to the city of Vincennes, Ind.

"Two condemned bronze or brass cannon with their carriages and with pyramid of balls, for the courthouse yard at Stanford, Ky., subject at all times to the orders of the Secretary of War.

"To the city of Sylvester, Ga., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages and suitable outfit of cannon balls as ornaments to the public square around courthouse.

"To the town of Salisbury, in the State of Maryland, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages and suitable outfit of cannon balls for use in the courthouse square.

"To the city of Mount Vernon, N. Y., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado:

"To the city of Durango, Colo., two condemned bronze or brass cannon fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. FERRIS:

"To the town of Anadarko, Okla., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls for three pyramids.

"To the village of Johnstown, in the county of Licking and State of Ohio, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with carriage and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

"To the city of Bardstown, Ky., to be placed on grounds of the public building in said city, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, located at St. Joseph, Mo., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Page 31, as a new paragraph, after line 5:

"Two bronze or brass cannon for the use of Col. Ezra Griffin Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Scranton, Pa.

"To the town of Maryville, Tenn., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages not needed for present service, the same to be placed in the public park of said town of Maryville."

Page 31, as a new paragraph:

"To donate to the town of Houston, Halifax County, Va., one bronze or brass cannon for use on the public square of said town.

"To the city of Covington, Ky., two condemned bronze or brass cannon with carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be mounted in the public park of said city.

"To the Grand Army of the Republic Post, Neosha, Kans., two bronze cannon.

"To the towns of Dardanelle and Danville, State of Arkansas, two condemned bronze or brass cannon of field size or fieldpieces with carriages and suitable outfit of cannon balls for use of parks.

"Two condemned brass or bronze cannon with carriage, with cannon balls for two pyramids, for the public square at Elizabethtown, Ill."

Amendment by Mr. HILL:

"To the city of Marion, County of Williamson, State of Illinois, two condemned bronze or brass cannon of full size or fieldpieces with carriages and suitable outfit of cannon balls for use in the public square.

"City of Twin Falls, Idaho, two brass or bronze cannon with suitable carriages and outfit of cannon balls.

"To the city of Cape Girardeau, Mo., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To the city of Claremore, Okla., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, for use in a preparatory school."

Amendment by Mr. SINNOTT:

"To the city of Dalles City, in the State of Oregon, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages, and with suitable outfit of cannon balls, not needed for present service, for the post-office lot."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that some of the amendments that have been offered involve the donation of Army rifles. The Chair will state for the benefit of all concerned that amendments of that kind are not germane to this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, may I have the ear of the Speaker for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I offered that amendment, and I did so because on page 18 of the bill is this provision:

To the Sons of Veterans' Camp, of Coshocton, Ohio, 200 Army rifles, not needed for present service, the same to be the property of said camp and to be used in drill practice.

I followed this language exactly in the amendment offered by me. I think there are other amendments of the same kind. There is one just a few lines before that one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if it is part of the bill printed in italics?

Mr. MOORE. Yes. That is part of the House amendment. On page 18 there are two.

The SPEAKER. That amendment, the Chair understands, has never been agreed to. The gentleman had better withdraw his rifle proposition until we come to that amendment.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, that is in the bill that has already been read.

The SPEAKER. Whereabouts in the bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. On page 18.

Mr. MANN. The House amendment has not been agreed to.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am under the impression that the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The House amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to state that if there is any provision in this bill providing for the loan or gift of any Army service rifles, or any rifles, it is here by mistake, and ought not to be in here. There is a provision of law by which these schools and colleges are furnished with these service rifles. They have no business in this bill, and they were put in by mistake. The House amendments in the bill have been agreed to. I ask unanimous consent that all items in the bill referring to service rifles be stricken from the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to strike from the bill any amendment pertaining to Army rifles.

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that request, and I believe perhaps it would be a good thing if it were agreed to. But I wish to explain in this connection that I would not have offered the amendment I did had it not appeared that two items of this character had slipped into the bill.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill is about cannon and cannon balls and cannon carriages. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to strike from this bill all items about Army rifles. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this item appropriating rifles for the use of the Sons of Veterans, of Coshocton, Ohio, is in my district. I feel now very much like the dog who swallowed a chunk of meat with a string attached to it. [Laughter.] I do not want to object or make objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], but inasmuch as the item is in the bill, and this item has been passed, I would appreciate it very much if it were allowed to remain in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has just explained that the statute covers that. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia if it is true that there is a statute relating to the loaning of these old rifles?

Mr. HAY. There is a statute by which these rifles can be furnished to schools and to people for the purpose of practicing shooting, and so forth.

Mr. ASHBROOK. And no such authorization as this has ever been made by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. HAY. No such authorization as this has ever been made by the House before.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that all items in this bill referring to Army rifles be stricken from the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the remainder of these cannon amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the city of Billings, Mont., two bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

To the Grayson Amusement Co., Grayson, Ky., two condemned bronze or brass cannon and suitable outfit of cannon balls.

Amendment by Mr. EVANS:

"To the city of Great Falls, Mont., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

Amendment by Mr. DALE:

"To the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with their carriages and suitable outfits of cannon balls for McCarren Park, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"To the Rugless Camp Grounds, Burtonville, Ky., two condemned bronze or brass cannon and suitable outfit of balls."

Amendment by Mr. TAGGART:

"To the city of Kansas City, Kans., two fieldpieces with carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls to be mounted on Huron Place in said city."

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS:

"To Faribault, Minn., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces with carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To the city of Carrollton, Ga., two condemned bronze or brass guns with carriages and three pyramids of shell to be used for ornamental purposes in the public square."

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

"To the city of Keyser, W. Va., for use of the State preparatory school, two condemned brass or bronze cannon and carriages and suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"Two condemned or brass cannon and suitable complement of cannon balls, for use of Warren farmers of Martin Dies."

By Mr. RAINEY:

"To the city of Petersburg, Ill., two condemned brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable complement of cannon balls."

By Mr. WALTERS:

"For the borough of Ebensburg, Pa., two condemned brass or bronze cannon and carriages, with suitable supply of cannon balls for use at soldiers' monument."

The SPEAKER. The question is on these amendments which have been read.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TOWNER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. TOWNER:

Page 17, line 3, after the word "Iowa," strike out "one condemned cannon or fieldpiece," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces."

The Clerk read the following amendments:

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota:

"To Grace City, N. Dak., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

"To the town of Rugby, N. Dak., to be placed in the county courthouse grounds, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

By Mr. GILL:

"For St. Louis, Mo., two condemned bronze fieldpieces or cannon and shell and mountings, for the Army and Navy Club at St. Louis."

By Mr. SELDOMRIDGE:

"To the town of Manitou, State of Colorado, two bronze or brass cannon, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, for display in a public park or square in said city."

By Mr. LOBECK:

"For the city of Omaha, Nebr., to be placed on the courthouse grounds in Omaha, two bronze or brass cannon, with suitable appurtenances, with the necessary cannon balls for pyramids, to commemorate the deeds of veterans of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars.

"To the city of Hutchinson, Kans., two condemned bronze or brass cannon and suitable collection of balls.

"To the city of York, Pa., two condemned bronze or brass cannon and necesary balls.

"To the town of Marion, Va., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

The SPEAKER. The question is on these amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 19.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, had further insisted upon its amendment 107 to the bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15869. An act to provide for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine safety stations for making investigations and disseminating information among employees in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 7646. An act to authorize Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Ohio River from the city of Parkersburg, State of West Virginia, to the town of Belpre, State of Ohio; and

S. 7723. An act authorizing the Texarkana Board of Trade to construct a bridge across the Red River between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS SIGNATURE.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

PURCHASE OF SHIPS.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the shipping bill.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.
The Clerk read the conference report and statement on the bill (S. 5259) as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NOS. 1465 AND 1491).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1.
That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same.
And that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill.
Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:
Page 9, line 3, of said amendment, add to section 9, after the word "Provided" and the period, the following: "The captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of this act shall be American citizens."
Pages 11 and 12 of said amendment, strike out all of section 16.
Page 12 of said amendment, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three" in line 2 of section 17.
And the House agree to the same.

JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER,
L. P. PADGETT,
RUFUS HARDY,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 5259, "An act to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:
Amendment No. 1 inserts the words "with the approval of the President," making it necessary that the President's approval be obtained before any Navy mail lines shall be established, and the Senate recedes.
Amendment No. 2 strikes out the word "shall," and the House recedes. This provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall detail such officers and enlisted men of the Navy and officers and men of the auxiliary service and retired officers of the Navy as he may deem necessary for the operation of the Navy mail lines.
The Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill.
Amendment No. 3 remains the same as it passed the House, except in the following particulars: A proviso is added at the end of section 9 whereby it is required that the captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of the act shall be American citizens. Also section 16, which provides that after the conclusion of the present European war the Navy Department shall have the right, with the approval of the President, to lease or charter any of such vessels not needed for naval or military purposes to any firm or corporation for use as a merchant vessel, etc., has been stricken out. Also in section 17 a period of three years after the conclusion of the present European war is allowed before the operation of sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the act, instead of two years, as provided in the House amendment. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House No. 3 and agrees to the same with the above amendments.
The effect of the action of the conferees is to extend the period of the House amendment indefinitely after the close of the European war instead of two years, and the Navy Department requires the approval of the President before any of the provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 can be put into operation, after the expiration of three years after the close of the European war.

JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER,
L. P. PADGETT,
RUFUS HARDY,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the conference report, on the ground that the conferees exceeded their jurisdiction. In the first place, they have inserted in section 9, which was a part of the House amendment, at the end of the section, the following language:

The captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of this act shall be American citizens.

There is no provision relating to that matter in the amendment or in the original bill which was sent to conference.
Another point of order: The original bill consists of four sections, and under the law, if enacted, it would go into effect at once upon its approval by the President, which we term the passage of the bill.
The House amendment contains section 17, providing that sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this act, which sections constitute the whole of the original bill, shall not take effect until two years from and after the conclusion of the present European war, that fact to be determined by the President; so that the Senate had passed the bill which provided that the first four sections should take effect at once upon the passage of the bill.
The SPEAKER. That is the Weeks bill.
Mr. MANN. That is the Weeks bill. Then the House passed an amendment, providing that those four sections should take effect two years after the President determined that the European war had ceased, and there was then in controversy between the two Houses the question of time, extending from the passage of the bill to two years after the conclusion of the European war. The conferees, of course, could not make the bill take effect before its passage, and they had no jurisdiction to go beyond the time fixed by the House at the other end.
If the House passes a bill carrying an appropriation of $100 and the Senate inserts an amendment making it $1,000 and that goes to conference, the conferees are confined in their work between $100 and $1,000.
The SPEAKER. What did the conferees do about the time?
Mr. MANN. They extended it to three years; they extended it beyond the limit either way. If the House passes a bill providing that a certain thing shall be done by January 1 and the Senate amends it and provides that it shall be done by July 1, the only controversy between the two Houses is between January and July, and the conferees have no jurisdiction to go outside of those dates.

These principles are well established. The matters of difference are the matters the conferees have jurisdiction over, and the matters of difference are those which arise between the proposition submitted by the one body and the proposition submitted by the other body.

I do not desire to detain the Speaker longer. The suggestion in reference to this point of order which I have made was made by the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. I think he has another point of order, which I hope he and the gentleman from Massachusetts may have an opportunity to discuss.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman a question. The conference report says:

Add to section 9, after the word "Provided" and the period, the following: "The captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of this act shall be American citizens."

The Chair wishes to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that subject is touched upon either in the Weeks or the House bill?

Mr. MANN. If it is, it is unknown to me; it is concealed by language that I do not understand, if it is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order against this conference report on the ground that the conferees have exceeded their authority; and, of course, if they have exceeded their authority, under the rules of the House the point of order should be sustained. But I do not think the gentleman from Illinois is correct in assuming in his statement that the conferees have exceeded their authority in their action in this matter.

The Senate passed a bill that was known as the Weeks bill. It came to the House, and the House passed the first four sections of the bill, which was the entire bill, and added thereto an amendment consisting of 13 other sections. When the bill was returned to the Senate with the House amendments—three of them—the Senate disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference. Therefore, on the 13 paragraphs of this bill that constitute the three House amendments there was a total disagreement.

There has been no amendment by the conferees to the language of the Weeks bill; that was agreed to by the two Houses. The entire changes that have been made in this bill are changes in the text of the bill that was added as amendments on the part of the House, to which the Senate disagreed in entirety.

Of course, when the House amendment was in entire disagreement with the Senate any amendment that was germane to the House amendment would be in order, because the whole amendment was in disagreement.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose the Senate made an appropriation of $100 and the House amendment appropriated nothing, would the gentleman think it was in order for the conferees to make it $1,000?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The other House had not expressed itself on the subject; it was a question of a total disagreement with no limitations. Of course I recognize the principle that if the House makes an appropriation of $100 and the Senate makes an appropriation of $200, the conferees are limited within those two amounts. But here is a question of total disagreement. It being a total disagreement, it authorizes the conferees to agree to anything that is germane to the subject matter that they had in conference. The question of the date when it would take effect was clearly germane, because that was a part of the House amendment.

Now, as to the other proposition, the language that was inserted on page 9, line 3, where it provides "the captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of this act shall be American citizens," the purpose of the House amendment was to establish an American merchant marine providing for enrollment of these vessels, for the operation of these vessels, for the conduct of a merchant marine, and also for the manning and officering of these vessels. The whole House provision in reference to this matter is in disagreement. The conferees put a limitation on how these ships shall be manned and officered by providing that they shall only be officered by American citizens. It seems to me that it is clearly germane to the purpose of the House amendment, and if it is germane, the whole amendment being in controversy, the conferees had a right to add the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield for just a moment, I will show wherein this proposition, the nationality of watch officers, was involved in the House bill. Section 8, in the second paragraph, page 11, provides:

All rules and regulations relating to or which affect shipping, navigation, or water-borne commerce of the United States, heretofore made or published, by authority of law, shall only be and remain in force until midnight on the 31st day of December, 1915, and by proclamation of the President shall cease to have any force or validity at any prior date when new shipping rules and regulations shall as provided hereby take the place of those now in existence.

This added provision is a limitation on that section, because this matter of watch officers being American citizens is a part of the present rules referred to in section 8, second paragraph, and it seems to me that plainly was one of the points in issue. It is only by a regulation of the President suspending a law which Congress puts within his option to suspend that foreign officers may be on vessels of American register. This added provision makes this regulation of the President inapplicable to any ship owned by the corporation created by this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct in reference to those rules and regulations, because this Congress in a bill itself, in the October or November session, shortly after the beginning of the war in Europe, provided for certain discretion of the President in waiving the right to have American officers command American ships, and the bill itself, on page 2, provides as follows:

Such civilians, such officers of the naval auxiliary service, and such officers and enlisted men of the Navy, including officers on the retired list, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary to be employed in the business of the said mail line or lines, and retired officers of the Navy so employed at sea or on shore shall, in all respects, be held and considered to be in an active-duty status, and shall receive the pay and allowances of officers of the active list of the same rank and length of service.

That refers to the officers that shall be employed, and the conferees extended that by providing that these officers referred to in the bill shall be American citizens. It seems to me it is clearly germane to the scope of the bill.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say to the statement made in respect to the time limit?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as I stated, the Senate bill had no provision in reference to time. The House bill made a limitation of two years. There was no provision in the Senate bill. It was without limit, running on to eternity, if the ships could last that long. If there is any limitation within which these conferees must be bound, it is between the two years the House provided and the eternity that was provided in the Senate bill.

Mr. GARDNER. But it is a question of the act taking effect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was not the time that the act should take effect, but the time that this House amendment should exist.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take exception to this conference report as being beyond the jurisdiction of the conferees, both as to the amendment to section 17 and the amendment that strikes out section 16, and I will state the point. I have to begin by saying that the original Weeks bill is the first four sections of this bill. It provided that ships of the Navy could be used during this exigency as commercial ships in foreign trade, and those sections are to enact it almost word for word, the words "with the approval of the President" being inserted and one other word being changed. Otherwise it is an enactment of the original Weeks bill as it came to the House. There is no total disagreement, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. There is no disagreement at all as to the first four sections of the bill, the Weeks bill as it came from the Senate. There is only a postponement of the time when the provisions of the original Weeks bill shall take effect from taking effect immediately until two years after the European war shall cease. That was the only difference as to those four sections between the House and the Senate, the sole difference being as to time, and the matter in difference between the Senate and the House was whether the Weeks bill should take effect immediately or in two years after the war should cease. The conferees had a right within the limits of those times to fix a time to which it might be postponed. They had no right to enlarge the postponement made by the House to three years after the war should cease. I think I have said enough as to that point, for it seems to me to be conclusive.

My point as to section 16 is different. The House, as I say, enacted but postponed the Weeks bill. The House made an addition of an entirely new scheme by which temporarily the United States should have stock in a shipping corporation, which should run vessels so purchased or leased or chartered, under the control and advice of a shipping board. That scheme is contained in sections 5 to 16 of the bill, and is entirely an addition to the Senate scheme, not a disagreement to the original matter.

That addition by section 16 was to be temporary, because by section 16 two years after the war should cease the shipping board should be dissolved and the ships should be transferred to the Navy of the United States or otherwise disposed of. Taking these new sections together, I make the further point that when the House provides for a shipping board, a shipping corporation, and all that machinery, which is to last for a certain limited space of time, and the only question of difference between the House and the Senate is whether such limited corporation shall be established, the conferees have no right to turn that limit of time into eternity by striking out the section which makes the limitation.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey seriously contend that the conferees can not strike out any part of it?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Not as a matter of technical ruling, but when it is a matter that goes to the essence of the proposition usually you govern it by the rule that is established. For instance, with reference to the limitation upon hospitals, where there was a general law limiting the cost of a hospital to $20,000 the conferees came in with an appropriation for $40,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but that is not what the Chair asked the gentleman. The Chair inquired if the gentleman contended that the conferees did not have ample power to strike out any part of the whole thing.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Ample power unless the striking out enlarges the whole scheme that there was; but as a technical matter I will say that usually, as a matter of technical words, the conferees were entirely within their rights, but, as a matter of right, to strike out the limitation of the act so as to make it perpetual, I do not think the whole subject was within the hands of the conferees. But I submit, as was handsomely submitted by the gentleman who opened this matter, that so far as the two years are concerned it is beyond all question that when the House postponed the Senate bill—the Weeks bill—for two years when the Senate had ordered it to take effect immediately, the conferees can not postpone it for three years and enlarge the postponement, which is the matter of difference between the two Houses.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 are the provisions of the Weeks bill which passed the Senate, and the following sections, designated as amendment 3, were incorporated by the House. There is no limitation in the Weeks bill as to the time when the law shall go into effect. The Senate never had the question of time under consideration. In the absence of a time considered and named by the Senate when the act would go into effect, the law says the act shall go into effect from and after its passage and approval by the Executive. The House amendment provides that the House amendment shall continue in operation for two years. The House amendment further provides that after two years the vessels owned by the Government and controlled by the shipping board shall be transferred to and operated by the Navy Department under the provisions of the Weeks bill. And the House amendment postpones the operation of the Weeks bill for two years, and so forth. In reference to the first question raised, whether or not the amendment to section 9 agreed to in conference provided that the masters and watch officers on the vessels owned and operated under the House amendment shall be citizens of the United States, there is no question in my mind but that the amendment is relevant to the subject matter of the bill. Under existing law masters and watch officers on vessels of the United States shall be American citizens. The President of the United States has authority, under the act of August 18, 1914, the ship registry act, to suspend that provision of the law as to foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry for the foreign trade. The House amendment to the Weeks bill provides:

> The shipping board herein provided for shall propose such rules and regulations applicable to the shipping and water-borne commerce of the United States, in lieu of those now in force and covering matters of like character as they may determine suited to the present needs of such shipping and commerce, which, when approved by the President and published shall apply and become of full force and effect in lieu of such rules and regulations as are now applicable thereto. In the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be adopted and put into force, different classes of shipping, navigation, and water-borne commerce may be appropriately and differently treated and provided for. Such rules and regulations when promulgated may be modified, changed, or amended by the shipping board.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair wants to ask the gentleman a question. What part of this bill, considering the whole thing as one bill, which it is, which was submitted to the conferees—on what part of that bill did the conferees hang this provision the gentleman is now talking about and upon which the gentleman from Illinois based his first point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. On the House amendment, including the particular paragraph to which I have just called attention.

The SPEAKER. Well, what is the language of it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have just read it. There are 12 or 13 sections in the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but what is the language on which the conferees hang that amendment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have just read the clause in the amendment which gives the shipping board jurisdiction to change existing rules and regulations with reference to our shipping.

Now, the conferees simply place a limitation on that authority by expressly providing that the masters and watch officers on vessels of the United States shall be American citizens. That certainly is germane to the subject matter and is a limitation on that authority. The whole amendment was in disagreement between the House and Senate, and the amendment providing that the master and watch officers should be American citizens was accepted by the House conferees and is a limitation on the authority of the shipping board who otherwise might prescribe that these officers might be foreigners.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Could the shipping board under the law that was passed in any way determine whether the watch officers should be citizens or not? Was not the question of whether these watch officers should be citizens or noncitizens a matter that is absolutely regulated by statute and over which no regulation could be made?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; except as provided by the act of August, 1914, which gave the President authority to suspend the provisions of our navigation laws in that regard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Gave authority to suspend a statute for a certain period or for certain ships, but there is no law which gives the shipping commissioners any authority to regulate or determine whether the watch officers shall or shall not be American citizens.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We place that beyond question by this amendment, which is germane to the subject matter of the bill.

Now, with reference to section 16, that is the part of the House amendment, and provides that two years——

The SPEAKER. There is no use in wasting time on that section 16, because the Chair has his mind made up.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The only remaining question is on the amendment to section 17.

Mr. GARDNER. Of course the Chair will hear me?

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not like to be taken off the floor by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Section 17 of the House amendment provides that sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the act shall not take effect until three years from and after the conclusion of the present European war, that fact to be determined by the President. Now, as I have stated, there is no limitation of time in the Weeks bill as it passed the Senate as to when the act shall go into effect. The Senate never considered the question of time. In the House amendment we provide that the provisions of the House amendment, sections 5 to 16, inclusive, of the bill, shall be limited to two years, and at the end of two years the vessels controlled by the shipping board and the corporation provided for in the amendment shall be transferred to the Navy Department and thereafter operated by the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. Now, what does the gentleman say to the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the conferees can not go lower in this case than the lower or higher than the higher figure, and it is a difference between zero and two, or a difference between going into effect at once, which all the statutes do unless there is some particular division about it——

Mr. ALEXANDER. There was disagreement between the House and the Senate as to any time at all, whether zero or two years—the Senate had never considered the question of time. Zero may well represent the mental attitude of the Senate. The question of time was considered for the first time by the House and the time fixed at two years, and that question was in conference to be determined by the conferees.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say to the proposition that you can not go higher than the higher figure or lower than the lower figure?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have tried to make it clear that there was no lower figure and there was no higher figure until it was agreed to by the conferees.

The SPEAKER. If they had agreed to it, they would not have gotten into conference on it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Unless there was a higher figure and a lower figure, then there is no question about which the Senate and House could disagree. The question has been asked by some of the gentlemen, and they seem to be impressed with the illustration: If the House had inserted the sum of $100 in an appropriation bill for a certain purpose and the Senate had increased it to $1,000, could the conferees agree upon a sum in excess of $1,000 or less than $100? Maybe not. But if the House had fixed the sum at $100 and the Senate had disagreed to it, might not the conferees agree upon a different sum, whether more or less than $100? That is this case.

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman think that if there is one statute passed without any limitation as to time when it goes into effect, which means it goes into effect immediately, and another proposition that goes into effect two years hence or two years after a certain event, it makes the two limitations higher and lower?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do, but not by any affirmative action of the Senate and House resulting in a disagreement. Zero can hardly represent any affirmative action of the Senate fixing the time when the act should go into effect. I say that between the two Houses there was no agreement at all as to time, and when we went into conference there a disagreement between us as to the time fixed by the House, and the conferees were free to agree upon the time fixed by the House or fix a different time when the provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 should go into effect. If there was a total disagreement between us, the conferees were free to agree upon the time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the Senate bill as it came to the House contained what a bill sometimes contains, that "this act shall take effect upon its passage," and the House had amended that and said, "This act shall take effect two years after its passage," would the gentleman contend then that the conferees could change it to take effect 20 years after its passage?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have tried to show that they could under the circumstances of this case we are now discussing.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the Chair what seems to me to be a fallacy in the argument of the gentleman from Alabama with regard to the amendment to section 9 of the bill put in by the conferees. That is, the added words, "the captain and watch officers of vessels, registered and enrolled," and so on. As I understood the gentleman, when interrogated by the Chair, he predicated the right of the conferees to insert that language at the foot of section 9 on the words found on page 2 of the bill, which specify, in a general way, the kind of officers who can be employed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Now, it should be borne in mind, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is a double-barreled proposition. Except for the limitation in the last section, as soon as the bill was signed, the Secretary of the Navy could begin a line of commercial steamers, and the shipping board could begin another line of commercial steamers, and those two lines could have been run concurrently. But by section 16, limiting the beginning of the operation of sections 1, 2, 3, and 4, the Navy commercial line can not come into existence until two or three years after the act is signed.

Now, sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 relate wholly and exclusively to the means and the methods and the manner of operating the Navy commercial line, and the sections 5 to 17, inclusive, relate solely to the operation of the shipping board's commercial line, and if the limitation had remained in and the vessels of the shipping board at the end of the two years had been turned over to the Navy Department the rules and regulations under which they would have been run by the shipping board would not obtain when they are run by the Secretary of the Navy, so that there is no possible peg in sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 on which to hang a proposition regulating the citizenship of the officers of the vessels that are to be operated under the shipping board. And it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the reading of the language of section 9 shows conclusively that a proposition involving the citizenship of officers is not at all germane to the language of that section.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say of the suggestion of the gentleman from the State of Washington [Mr. BRYAN] that that language can be hung on page 11—the second section, on page 11?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is a matter that is already fixed by law, Mr. Speaker. It is the statute law as it exists to-day.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And there is no possibility——

The SPEAKER. You can change the statute law as it exists to-day by passing a new statute.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I concede that, Mr. Speaker; but can you do that——

The SPEAKER. The only question involved in that is whether that language about foreign officers is germane to any part of this bill.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is the contention that I make, Mr. Speaker, that it is not germane to any part of the bill.

The SPEAKER. How about that provision of page 11?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is the provision of the law, to the effect that regulations under the law can be made by certain officials that will fix citizenship, and this is fixing citizenship by direct law, and there is nothing here in the bill that in any way touches on the question of citizenship of officers.

The SPEAKER. Now, if the statement of the gentleman is true, is not this provision that the conferees report back a limitation on the power of the shipping board?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I do not see that it is any limitation whatever on their power.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is all I wish to say, to point out to the Speaker that here are two sets of rules or laws in this bill regulating two separate and independent lines of commercial steamers, and you can not pick out the regulations of the Navy line and say that thereon you can hang an amendment which affects the shipping board's line, and there is nothing in the shipping board's line that gives warrant for this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me just one word, the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] in reference to the two lines of ships provided in this bill is correct, up to a certain point. But after a fixed period the officers that will man the ships under the Gore bill, under the terms of this bill all go under the provisions of the Weeks bill, which provides for officers, and this limitation in the House amendment affects the officers provided for in the original Senate bill, and does affect it, and was in conference, because the control of this shipping company under the House amendment goes out of effect at the end of three years, and this entire shipping interest goes into the control under the Weeks bill, where the officers are provided for.

So that the two systems are locked together.

Mr. CRISP and Mr. GARDNER rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia later.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the only thing which prevents the legislation of this Congress being drafted by conference committees is that limitation which provides that conferees shall not bring out any proposition which was not contemplated by one House or the other. They must reconcile existing differences between the two Houses, not invent differences which do not exist.

Now what does this shipping bill conference report do? The Weeks bill provided for naval auxiliaries. The House amendment to the Weeks bill provided for a temporary merchant marine under Government control; but this conference report provides for a permanent Government marine, a matter which was not in dispute between the Senate and the House, since it was contemplated neither in the original Weeks bill nor in the House amendment to the Weeks bill. It is true that the conferees have accomplished their purpose and have placed this new proposition before us not by adding anything to the text of the bill, not by substituting anything, but by striking out a limitation. I am coming to that aspect of the case in a moment. First, however, I beg that the Chair will picture the situation as if it applied to the Army appropriation bill, which is now in conference between the House and Senate.

The House adopted an amendment to the Army bill to the effect that, so far as next year's appropriation is concerned, none of it is to be spent in arsenals where the Taylor system is in operation. The bill went over to the Senate, and the Senate struck out that amendment. In effect the Senate said, "We are not going to touch the Taylor system at all." What is it that the conference is required and empowered to determine? It is clothed with the duty of determining whether we are to leave the Taylor system alone, in accordance with the views of the Senate, or whether, in accordance with the views of the House, we are going to refuse money for the next year to all arsenals where the Taylor system is in operation. The only alternative open to the conferees is to compromise and agree on some provision somewhere between those two limits.

Now, does the Chair think that by any dexterous striking out of words it would be within the scope of the power of that conference committee to report a clause enacting a permanent law against the Taylor system? Yet that action would be precisely similar to the step which the conferees on the shipping bill are attempting to take by striking out section 16. I am familiar with the decision to be found on page 467 of the Manual. I am aware of the fact that the present Speaker once decided that on a certain occasion the conferees were acting within their powers when they struck certain words out of a certain Senate amendment, although by so doing the scope of the amendment was broadened. But broadening the scope is entirely different from changing the whole nature of the proposition. If the Chair will apply the reasoning which I have indicated and the analogy which I have drawn in the case of the Army appropriation bill, I think he will see that I am right; that the mere fact that the proposition for a permanent Government merchant marine was arrived at by striking out certain words instead of by adding certain words does not alter the fact that the conferees have reported something which was not contemplated by either House of Congress, and is therefore outside their jurisdiction.

Now, I invite the memory of the Chair to a certain privileged resolution which I myself introduced a number of years ago, in which I made inquiry of the State Department as to certain matters connected with the rules of the British House of Commons. When I got the resolution before the House I proposed to strike out all the part about the British House of Commons, without adding anything at all, but with the result that I entirely changed the proposition. From a resolution of inquiry addressed to the State Department the resolution would suddenly have become a proposal to revise the Rules of the House of Representatives, if the amendment were adopted. In other words, I proposed to present to the House a measure entirely different from what the House took up as a privileged resolution. Although I did not propose to add a single word to the resolution, but merely to take away words, nevertheless the Chair held my amendment out of order. The Chair ruled me out of order. I appealed from his decision, and the House sustained the Chair. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call your attention——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will interject one remark, that that was one of the most skillful parliamentary maneuvers that ever happened since I have been here, some 22 years.

Mr. GARDNER. I thank the Chair for his compliment, but nevertheless the Speaker overruled me. I now refer the Chair to pages 720 and 721 of the fifth volume of Hinds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GARDNER. A certain bill went through the House granting privileges to a suburban street railway here in Washington. When it got over to the Senate the Senate granted those same privileges to a lot of other street railways. It went to the conferees to decide whether the one street railway should have the privilege or whether all the street railways should have the privilege, or something in between. What did the conferees do? They took the privilege away from all the street railways. In other words, the conferees did not give the privilege even to the one street railway to which the House had originally given it. The point of order was made that the conferees had exceeded their powers. On the other hand, it was argued that inasmuch as the conference amendment was germane that made it in order and within the power of the conferees. But the Speaker, Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, sustained the point of order, saying:

> If we were to adopt the idea that when once the subject matter was introduced that was to control, and not the differences between the two bodies, we should be likely to enlarge the powers of the committee of conference rather beyond what was intended by the House. To the Chair it seems the point of order is well taken, and therefore the Chair sustains it.

Now, if the Chair will turn over to the next page he will find a decision by Speaker Blaine. Mr. Blaine says:

> It is not necessary that the matter reported by the committee of conference should be considered in either branch if it be germane and in the nature of an amendment which may reconcile the differences between the two branches.

Is this permanent Government merchant-marine provision an amendment reconciling the differences between the two branches, or is it going outside the difference between the two branches and injecting a new proposition beyond the scope of the text adopted by either House?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, you have ruled, and it is the unbroken practice of the House, that where an amendment is offered striking out all after the enacting clause of the bill and a new text is inserted that the whole matter is open before the conferees; that they can write an entirely new bill. The proposition before the Chair to-day to decide is that, commencing with section 5, this House has inserted an entirely new and substantive legislative proposition, to wit, providing for a merchant marine operated by a shipping company. There was nothing in the bill as to when it should become operative.

The SPEAKER. Which bill?

Mr. CRISP. The substantive legislation or the other. They were both to take effect from the passage, because it was not specially stated when they were to take effect.

In this substantive legislation which the House added—and it is a complete piece of legislation, as much so as if all the bill had been stricken out after the enacting clause and a new proposition inserted—there was a provision that sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 were not to take effect until two years after the cessation of the European war, when these boats should be leased or transferred. The House agreed to those sections with that proviso.

In answer to the proposition where certain times are specified the conferees are bound between them, that has no application in this case because time is not the essence of this legislation and the whole legislative scheme, the whole proposition, is open before the conferees. Why? Because the Senate rejected the entire legislative proposition put up to them by the House, and they rejected section 16, providing for two years, the same as they rejected every other proposition in the bill, and everything in that substantive legislation was before the conferees for adjustment and settlement.

That being true, the conferees had plenary power to reconcile that difference by adopting any amendments that were germane to that legislative proposition.

That legislative proposition provided for the operation of ships, and authorized the employment of officers and sailors necessary to the operation of them, and the amendment provides how those ships should be operated.

As to the two or three years' proposition, when the bill passed the House it provided that it should become operative after two years. The Senate rejected the entire proposition and the whole matter was before the conferees, and the conferees reached a settlement by making the time three years. The amendment, in my opinion, was germane; and as the whole legislation was before the conferees, they were only limited to put in germane amendments, and as both amendments were germane, both were in the power of the conferees to adopt; and I do not believe the point of order is well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the conference report is clearly subject to a point of order. The so-called Weeks bill passed by the Senate provided for a naval mail line to take effect on its approval by the President or his failure to return the bill within the time fixed by the Constitution. The House did not strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, but it passed the Senate bill with an amendment. A part of that amendment provided that the first four sections of the bill should not take effect until two years after a certain event. If it had not been for that amendment, those provisions of the bill would have been effective from the time the bill became a law. The Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House, so that the question in controversy between the House and the Senate was whether certain sections of the proposed law should become effective two years after a certain event or should become effective upon the approval of the bill. That is the only question in controversy between the House and the Senate. Should sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 become effective upon the approval of the bill, or should they become effective two years from and after the conclusion of the present European war, as determined by the President? The managers upon the part of the two Houses did not reconcile that difference between the two Houses, but they went beyond any question which had ever been considered by the two Houses, and they reported an agreement that sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this bill should not be effective until three years after the determination of the European war, as decided by the President of the United States.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, instead of this particular amendment the House had placed here an amendment providing that $100,000 should be available for a certain purpose in connection with the bill, and that the Senate disagreed to the amendment. The only question in difference between the two Houses to be determined would be whether any sum up to $100,000 could be appropriated for the purpose. If the conferees proposed to appropriate in excess of $100,000, the amendment would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman any authority for the statement that where a question of amount is at issue between the two Houses the limitation is the maximum or minimum that may have been placed there by either House? Is not the rule this, that the only question at issue is a question of money, and that they could not bring in any other question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not my recollection of the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can the gentleman cite a case?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I could if I had taken the trouble to look it up, but I have not taken the trouble to look the matter up, because in experience the practice has been so firmly fixed that I have not undertaken to look up the authorities. I regard it is a universally accepted proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think there is authority for the statement that where two sums are named, then the question at issue is between those two sums, but when there is only one sum named, and that is in disagreement, the conferees may go above or below the sum named.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that has not been the practice of the House. I have been a conferee on appropriation bills for nearly 10 years, and no such rule as that has even been in force or permitted. The conferees have never undertaken to report an appropriation in excess of the sum proposed by either House. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the conference report is subject to the point of order for one of the other reasons assigned, and that is that the amendment providing that the captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of this act shall be American citizens.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has attempted to justify this provision because of the wording of the bill as found on page 11. On page 11 of the bill authority is given to the shipping board to make all rules and regulations relating to or which affect shipping, navigation, or water-borne commerce of the United States. Mr. Speaker, the citizenship of the captain and the watch officers of vessels in the American merchant marine, however, is not affected, not controlled, not regulated by rules or regulations issued by any board or by any authority. The question of citizenship is determined by statute. The act passed last August permitting the admission of certain vessels to American registry authorized the President of the United States to suspend under certain conditions certain statutory provisions relating to the citizenship of the captain and watch officers of vessels in the American merchant marine, but no authority exists in our statutes which gives to the Commissioner of Navigation, to any official of the Government, or to any commission of the Government authority to determine whether these watch officers shall or shall not be citizens of the United States. That is a matter regulated and controlled now by the statutes of the United States, and the most comprehensive power that can be conferred upon any public official to make rules and regulations about a matter does not and can not confer power to make rules and regulations which are in conflict with the statutes of the United States.

For the two reasons which I have mentioned I insist that the managers on the part of the House have exceeded their authority in attempting to report to the House matters not included in the difference between the two Houses, and that the report, therefore, is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I brought up this proposition in reference to the nationality of officers as involved in the rules and regulations referred to in this act. That proposition has been discussed by several gentlemen who have preceded me. The attempt has been made to create the impression that this is solely a matter of statute. That suggestion is erroneous. The only earthly ground on which the officers on vessels of American register involved can be foreigners is by virtue of a regulation, a regulation of the President. All of these rules and regulations as to navigation are made by the President acting through his Cabinet officers under authority of a statute. It is true the statute authorizes the President to suspend the law, but he has got to do it by a plain, ordinary regulation, and so this section provides that the shipping board can amend the regulations by making new regulations and repealing all pending rules and regulations, but when the conference report comes in it puts a limitation on that, so that while in other cases vessels brought from under foreign flags and put under our flag may have foreign officers, under this plan those vessels owned by this Government corporation can not have foreign officers, not by rule or regulation of the President or the shipping board. That certainly was a matter put at issue by the provisions of this bill, so that the conferees had authority to make the adjustment they did make. Now, just a moment more, if the Speaker will permit me. There is a little bit too much ability in parliamentary law displayed here and not enough of reversion to the facts involved in the bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that there was no intent of a permanent plan at all, and this amendment establishes a permanent Government-owned merchant marine, and in that respect the conferees have gone beyond their powers. In the original bill, section 4, the Weeks bill, it provided for $100,000 and three years' proceeds of the business created by the act for the expenditure, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose of "organizing, creating, and carrying on the traffic provided for in this act."

The original bill gives the Secretary of the Navy the right to appoint officers, to appoint a shipping board if he wanted to, to make any arrangement necessary in his discretion to organize, to inaugurate, and carry on the traffic provided for, which was domestic and foreign traffic. It was suggested in the Senate—and the debates will show that it was suggested—that the House would have to perfect it. Senator WEEKS himself said, on August 3, as the RECORD will show, it would be up to the House to perfect it. So, when this body took up the measure the war had developed. It is true the bill was passed after the war started; but the war developed and a new situation arose, and it seemed very plain that the sending of naval vessels to Europe carrying freight, with United States officers in uniform, with guns on the prow, could not be done immediately, at any rate; so that we would have for the present to put an addenda on the bill and substantially amend the plan. So we put this addenda on and provided for the present, in inaugurating, organizing, and carrying on the traffic provided for by the fourth section of the Weeks bill; we would have a shipping board created only in a certain way; that we would have merchant officers; that we would not have United States naval officers, not for the present at least; that we would not have guns on the ships as the Navy transports carry, because we could not carry on business that way while war conditions prevailed, at any rate; but we would go into an ordinary merchant-marine plan of organizing a corporation, and that just as soon as the war was over the thing would dovetail back again into the plan provided here, which seemed to please the Senate. It seemed necessary, for parliamentary purposes, to take the Senate plan and make it workable. This whole thing ought to be taken together; it ought to be considered as a whole.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Do not do that. We are trying to fix it so that we can have a recess for dinner.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, to save time I withdraw the point. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. In organizing this system we have a right to start it in the amended form, and if the Speaker will consider the whole system as one, he will find the two propositions work together as one system and that the whole thing is unity throughout. The bill takes effect immediately. We could have stricken out these four sections of the Weeks bill, so they would never have gone into effect if we had elected so to do. But we chose to amend and establish one system and let it evolve into the Senate plan.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, at the risk perhaps of wearying you, I would like to add a few words to the discussion that has taken place upon this most interesting point of order.

There are three things involved, as I understand it: One is the elimination of section 16; another is the addition at the end of paragraph 9 of these words:

The captain and watch officers on vessels registered, enrolled, or operated under the provisions of this act shall be American citizens.

And the other is in the last section of the bill, where the word "two" is stricken out and the word "three" inserted.

I have listened with great interest to the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts with respect to section 16, and there is great force in the contention which he makes, and yet it does seem to me that perhaps one would be justified in saying that, under the conditions, the language of section 16 is involved in the controversy which the conferees were to settle. What is the controversy? The first four sections of the bill are the Senate bill. Section 5, to the end of the chapter, is the amendment presented by the House. To that, as I understand it, the Senate disagreed. Hence the conference. The House agreed to the first four sections, however. The Senate agreed to the first four sections. The amendments which the House attached are those which were really in controversy. Now, then, we find condensely stated in the Manual the rule which governs upon this subject:

The conferees may not include subjects not within the disagreement, and can not make new amendments, even though germane to the question in issue. Managers may not change the text to which both Houses have agreed.

And then the exception:

That where an alteration has been made by striking out all of the bill after the enacting clause, there is a wider latitude given.

Now, then, it is under this last exception that the argument of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] are based. Is this a case of striking out all after the enacting clause? It certainly is not. But the effort is made to show that because they begin with section 5 to exclude all the rest of the bill, then this free hand at alteration is permitted under this exception. But is that a forceful and sound argument? Apply it to the question of the change of years. As you very tersely put it in your interrogation, Mr. Speaker, it is the difference between zero and two. Now, what amendment is that? It is the amendment that relates to that part of the bill which is called the Weeks bill. The Weeks part of the bill is not in controversy. It is the amendments of the House that are in dispute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. According to the rule that you have decided as fundamental in regard to Congress, the conferees are limited to the subject matter. Now, what was the subject matter as it is affected by the amendment to the Weeks bill, as to when it shall go into operation? The subject matter was one of time, and they brought in no other question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. You might just as well say that the subject matter in an appropriation bill is one of money, and yet if one enactment is $100 and the other is $1,000 you are limited by those two extremes, and it is within that difference that the conferees must take their action. The dispute here is the difference between zero and two, and what does the conference report? It reports three years, which is entirely in excess and beyond that which was submitted to them for their arbitrament and report back to us. I wish to call attention to this fact also, that the argument based upon striking out all after the enacting clause can not apply to the first four sections of this bill. They were not stricken out, and this amendment which is contained in the seventeenth section relates solely to those four sections of the bill, for it says:

That sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this act shall not take effect until two years from and after the conclusion of the present European war, that fact to be determined by the President.

Now, that confines the language to sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the bill, and therefore when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] appealed to the wider range and liberty given, when everything is stricken out except the enacting clause, that argument can not avail.

One word with reference to the suggestion that has been made here as to the phrases that have been taken from the section on page 11, beginning with the sixth line and ending with the fourteenth line. What argument can be put because of this language in favor of the amendment that every one of these officers named shall be an American citizen? This paragraph refers to the making of rules and regulations by a subordinate body. The language to which the gentleman from Illinois took exception is the enactment of a law. It ceased to be a question of regulation. It is the establishment of a law. All vessels henceforth shall be officered in this manner that come under the provisions of this bill.

The enactment of a law is not within the scope of the changing of a regulation of a department. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] very clearly and concisely pointed out precisely the same line of argument as that which I am making, and it is sound. This point of order ought to be sustained, for this House is opposed to legislation by conference, and every innovation of that kind should be frowned upon and checked. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the other side practically concedes, with the exception of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]—at least the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania] did—that the conferees were well within their rights when they struck out section 16, and that is perfectly apparent, because that was an entirely new proposition which the House proposed and which the Senate had disagreed to, and it was in order to eliminate it.

Now, as to section 9, the gentleman from Pennsylvania undertakes to claim that the conferees exceeded their power, because of a distinction that he seeks to draw, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] did, between a law and a regulation. But we are not dependent upon the language which relates to regulations found on page 11 of the bill, in order to sustain the amendment which the conferees put to section 9 upon page 12 of the bill. Section 9 is law, so far as a bill yet to be finally enacted can make it law, and it dealt with the vessels that the shipping board might purchase or construct, and it gave to those vessels rights which they would not have under existing law. It gave to the vessels which it should purchase rights in regard to American registry and trade which they could not have except for that provision.

Now, the whole paragraph was in issue. The conferees simply qualified the rights that such vessels purchased by the shipping board should have, by adding a requirement as to the officers—the nationality of the officers—that should be employed on them, and there is no question of regulation or law involved in the thing at all. It is simply the question of germaneness, and it is germane to the powers and duties that the shipping board would have touching vessels purchased or constructed.

Now, as to the last proposition, I am willing to concede for myself a part of the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. It is true that section 17 dealt with the first four sections of the original Weeks bill, and that the situation is not one where you had stricken out all after the enacting clause. But what is the situation? Both the House and the Senate agreed to the Weeks bill, as to the four sections; but the House said, "We agree to it with one qualification," and it introduced a new subject, and that subject was the one of time. It said, "We agree to it, to take effect after two years."

Now, they had at issue a question of time. The conferees have not undertaken to bring in an extraneous subject matter. They have not violated the rule that the gentleman from Pennsylvania read in the opening of his remarks. They have not sought to say that this ship bill shall not take effect, not only as regulated by time, but by some other event. If they had undertaken to say that sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 shall not be operative in the event of the happening of any particular thing that they chose to stipulate, they would have brought in an element which was not at issue between the two Houses. But they did not. So the real question is this: The House has said, "Here is a bill which we agree to take effect two years after the enactment." Now, they raised the question of when it should go into effect. The Senate took issue on that, and the conferees finally got together and said, "All right; we will agree to sections 1, 2, 3, and 4, with the time at three years in place of two," and the attempt of gentlemen now to put a limitation on and say "the conferees were dealing with immediately on the one hand and two years on the other, and therefore were confined within them" is, to my mind, not warranted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. If the Weeks bill were passed without any provision as to when it would go into effect, it would go into effect immediately?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Now they come along, as the conferees do, and say, "It will go into effect in three years."

Mr. SHERLEY. Ah, but there is a distinction between a case where you have stated a time and where the other body states another time, so that both Houses have considered the question of degrees of time. But that is not here. The Senate did not undertake expressly to provide that the matter should be operative at once. They simply passed an act which under the general rules would have become operative immediately. But they did not express that view in the sense of making a concrete issue with the House between immediately and two years. The House brought in the question of time, which had not been considered at all by the Senate. The Senate did not say in any way that it wanted to limit it to immediate operation, except inferentially, by not providing anything at all as to time; and I have not yet found any authority, and I have not heard any authority quoted by gentlemen here, even to show that if there was a question at issue between immediately and two years, the conferees could not necessarily go beyond the two years. To my mind it is totally illogical thus to restrict it.

The idea is to restrict conferees from bringing in extraneous mattter, but it is not to prevent them from dealing fully with the matter which is actually at issue.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. After the House passed section 17, were not both the House and the Senate in agreement that the four sections of the act should be in effect after two years, and was not the only disagreement as to the difference between the present time and up to the two years?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. The first four sections were agreed to between the two Houses, and the House introduced a new proposition—that of time. There had never been any proposition of time involved until the House brought it in by limitation. Now, gentlemen want to say that that binds it on one side but not on the other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. He overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and advocated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], as to striking out section 16.

He overrules the second proposition about American citizenship in section 9. He thinks that is a limitation. He sustains the third point of order, as to time.

If there is anything settled about conferences between the two Houses it is this: Where two amounts are named, and the question is referred to the conferees, they may oscillate as much as they please between the two extremes, but they can not go below the lower amount and they can not go above the higher amount. That applies to sums of money in appropriation bills. This has been ruled so often that it is as familiar as the multiplication table. In tariff bills, where the House suggests one rate on any given article and the other House suggests another rate, the conferees can not go below the lower, and they can not go above the higher rate.

Unless the memory of the Chair is badly out of condition, this thing happened when the Payne bill was passed: There were certain amendments in controversy. The House fixed the rate on shoes, and so forth, at 15 per cent, and the Senate fixed it at 20 per cent. I have heard—I do not know that it is true, but from what happened afterwards I believe it to be true—that President Taft notified the conferees that if they did not cut that rate on boots and shoes to 10 per cent he would not sign the bill. I know that the House passed a resolution in order to enable the conferees to cut the rate down to 10.

As far as the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is concerned, that where everything after the enacting clause is struck out, then the conferees have carte blanche to bring in a bill; but that is not this case here. The House never did strike out everything after the enacting clause in the Weeks bill. It practically agreed to the Weeks bill, which has really been in conference only technically. But the limit of time was fixed at two years, and the conferees extended it to three years. If they could extend it beyond two years, they could extend it until the end of time. Their limit was from zero to two. In the nature of things they could not go below zero; under the practice of the two Houses they could not go higher.

The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House ask for a further conference on the bill.

Mr. MANN. That the House further insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That the House further insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the House further insist on its amendments and ask for a conference. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The same conferees will be appointed as before. The Democratic conferees were Messrs. ALEXANDER, PADGETT, HARDY, and TALBOTT of Maryland. Who were the Republicans?

Mr. MANN. Messrs. GREENE of Massachusetts, ROBERTS of Massachusetts, and HINDS.

The SPEAKER. Those conferees will be reappointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 37.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3352) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9899) to authorize the laying out and opening of public roads on the Winnebago, Omaha, Ponca, and Santee Sioux Indian Reservations in Nebraska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 20894. An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 366. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to use any allotment made under the provisions of an act approved October 2, 1914, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," for the improvement of East River and Hell Gate, N. Y.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 20347), and ask unanimous consent to agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the bill H. R. 20347, the Army appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOWELL, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of George B. Haight, alias William Riley, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until half past 8 o'clock to-night. Pending that, I desire to say that there are several conference reports in here now, and I hope that by taking a recess long enough to let every Member go home, Members will be back here prepared to stay and take care of these conference reports.

Mr. MANN. I would like to remind Members of the House that as fast as conference reports on appropriation bills are agreed to, the bills must be enrolled, and it is not physically possible for the enrolling clerks to enroll all the appropriation bills within the last 24 hours; that there are a number of conference reports likely to come in and we will probably be here very late to-night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I want to say that more appropriation bills have been crowded into these last few days than ever before.

Mr. MANN. Yes; we may have to take a recess at different times during the night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there have been an extraordinary number of bills passed to-day, which have burdened the enrolling clerks very much.

The request of Mr. UNDERWOOD was then agreed to; accordingly the House (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) stood in recess until 8.30 p. m. to-night.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 8.30 o'clock p. m.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 7566) granting pensions and increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1498).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7566) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 5, 10, and 11, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, and 9.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$12"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$36"; and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7566) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, viz:

Amendment No. 1: House recedes. Proposed increase is fully warranted by the evidence.

Amendment No. 2: House recedes. Proposed increase is in accordance with the rules of both committees.

Amendment No. 3: House recedes. The facts in this case justify allowance of pension to soldier.

Amendment No. 4: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $12. The rules of both committees justify this rate.

Amendment No. 5: Senate concurs. A higher rate is not warranted by the circumstances of the case.

Amendment No. 6: House recedes. Proposed pension is fully justified by the evidence.

Amendment No. 7: House recedes. The evidence in the case and the extreme helplessness of soldier justify the proposed rate.

Amendment No. 8: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $36. The rules of the committee justify proposed increase.

Amendment No. 9: House recedes. Proposed pension is warranted by the evidence on file.

Amendment No. 10: Senate concurs. The evidence in this case does not justify proposed increase.

Amendment No. 11: Senate concurs. Proposed increase is not justified by the evidence on file.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I also present a conference report on the bill (S. 7598) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1497).

Amendment No. 11: House recedes. Proposed pension is fully justified by the evidence.

Amendment No. 12: Senate concurs. The circumstances of this case do not justify a higher rate than $12.

Amendment No. 13: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $24. This is the rate allowed in similar cases for the widow of a captain.

Amendment No. 14: Senate concurs. The proofs on file justify allowance of proposed increase.

Amendment No. 15: Senate concurs. The evidence on file warrants proposed increase.

Amendment No. 16: Senate concurs. Proposed increase is fully justified by the evidence on file.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report, accompanied by a statement, on the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee presents a conference report upon the naval appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the conferees.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The conference report (No. 1500) and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 966).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 18, 29, 30, 37, 43, 46, 56, 58, 65, 66, 67, 71.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 41, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 59, 61, 62, 63, 72, and agree to the same.

That amendment numbered 33 be transferred to page 26 of the bill and inserted as a separate paragraph after line 22; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 1 of said amendment, down to and including the words "Provided further," in line 8 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "Melville, Rhode Island"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out "docks"; also in line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "toward" and insert "for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 13 of Senate engrossed amendments, line 8, strike out the word "lieutenant"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Page 16 of Senate engrossed amendments, line 6, after the word "sixteen," insert "or," and after the word "twenty" strike out the comma and the words "or twenty-four"; same page, line 20, after the word "served," strike out the words "more than," and after the word "eight" insert "or more"; same page, line 22, after the word "served," strike out the words "more than," and after the word "twelve" insert "or more"; page 17 of Senate engrossed amendments, line 5, strike out the word "twelve"; same page, line 7, strike out the word "one-fourth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That hereafter the commander in chief of the United States Atlantic Fleet, the commander in chief of the United States Pacific Fleet, and the commander in chief of the Asiatic Fleet, respectively, shall each, after being designated as such commander in chief by the President, and from the date of assuming command of such fleet until his relinquishment of such command, have the rank and pay of an admiral; and in each of the above-named fleets the officer serving as second in command thereof shall each, after being designated as such second in command by the President, and from the date of assuming duty as such second in command until his relinquishment of such duty, have the rank and pay of a vice admiral; and the grades of admiral and vice admiral in the Navy are hereby reestablished and authorized for the purposes of this section. The annual pay of an admiral shall be $10,000, and of a vice admiral $9,000: Provided, That in time of peace officers to serve as commander in chief and as second in command of the three said fleets shall be designated from among the rear admirals on the active list of the Navy: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall create any vacancy in any grade in the Navy nor increase the total number of officers allowed by existing law, and that when an officer is detached from duty as such commander in chief or as such second in command, as above provided, he shall return to his regular rank in the list of rear admirals and shall thereafter receive only the pay and allowances of such regular rank."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 2 and 3 of said amendment strike out the words "transporting coal," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "transportation of fuel between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$6,820,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$4,090,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$49,976,801" and in lieu thereof insert "$45,053,801"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to submit to the next regular session of Congress a report on building four warships of the type, power, and speed which, in his judgment based on the knowledge gained from the prevailing war in Europe, are best suited for war on the sea; also to report, in the light of that war, the value and uses in naval warfare of aeroplanes, dirigibles, balloons, and submarines."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendment No. 1 permits subscription to newspapers and periodicals for the naval service to be paid for in advance; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 2 provides for the creation of a new office in the Navy Department to be known as the Chief of Naval Operations. This office is to be filled by a line officer not below the grade of captain, who is to be appointed for a period of four years by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. He will be charged, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, with the operations of the fleet and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in time of war. The principle of civilian control of the Navy Department is not violated, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 3 provides that the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to allow in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers certain payments during the fiscal year 1916, and also provides for the disposal of useless papers in the files of the navy yards and naval stations, which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and have no permanent value or historical interest, where such papers are 2 years old or more, from date of last indorsement thereon. It provides that a detailed report be made to Congress in every case of papers destroyed. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the authority granted to accounting officers of the Treasury and agrees to the remainder of the paragraph.

Amendment No. 4 provides that the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to allow in the accounts of the disbursing officers of the Navy all payments heretofore made for telephones in Government quarters that have been disallowed or are subject to disallowance under section 7 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, or judicial expenses of the Government, approved August 23, 1912; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 5 makes permanent law of a provision carried in the naval appropriation bill last year, as well as in the present bill, whereby officers who now perform engineering duty on shore only and officers of the construction corps are made eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them.

Amendments Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9 increase the reappropriation of $500,000 to $1,000,000 from the unobligated balances of the appropriations "Construction and repair of vessels" and "Steam machinery"; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 10 provides for a national advisory committee for aeronautics to supervise and direct a scientific study of the problems of flying with a view to their practical solution. The Senate committee provided for 12 members, 3 of whom are skilled in aeronautical sciences in civil life; and the House recedes with an amendment making the committee consist of 12 members, 5 of whom are from civil life. Two members will be from the War Department, two from the Navy Department, one from the Smithsonian Institution, one from the United States Weather Bureau, and one from the United States Bureau of Standards, making the majority of the committee from governmental sources. An appropriation of $5,000 a year is provided for and an annual report to Congress is required, including an itemized statement of expenditures.

Amendments Nos. 11 and 12 make officers of the Coast Guard eligible with officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to receive medals of honor for distinguished service; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 13 provides for an appropriation of $10,000, to be immediately available, for the relief of inhabitants of American Samoa from suffering as a result of a hurricane in the islands; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 14 and 15 provide for printing of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions in the Hydrographic Office and increases the appropriation for that office from $80,000 to $105,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 16 strikes out the limitation on the appropriation "Ordnance and ordnance stores" whereby none of that appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of armor-piercing shells of 12-inch caliber or larger unless such shells are found by tests to be able to penetrate 10-inch kruppized plate without breaking up when fired with a standard service powder charge and an actual range of 12,000 yards; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 17 provides for a building for storage of torpedoes to cost $20,000 at Melville, R. I., and the House recedes with an amendment striking out Melville, R. I., and provides that the building shall be constructed at the torpedo station, Newport, R. I.

Amendment No. 18 provides for the construction of a projectile plant by the Government in the event that the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase projectiles at what he considers to be a reasonable price, and appropriates the sum of $5,000,000 for that purpose; and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 19 and 20 provide for the construction of building slip and equipment at Norfolk Navy Yard, to cost $50,000; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 21 and 22 provide for borings to determine the water-front conditions at Charleston Navy Yard, and appropriates $15,000, and $50,000 for the construction of building ways at the same yard; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 23 provides for a reappropriation of $15,000 to be used for remodeling a building at the naval station, Pensacola, Fla., to be fitted as a sick quarters and dispensary for the Naval Aeronautical Station; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 24 provides for the reappropriation of $400,000 heretofore appropriated for a marine barracks at Panama to be used for marine barracks at Mare Island, Cal., and Norfolk, Va., to cost $200,000 at each place; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 25 is a change of total; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 26 provides for transportation of remains of officers and men who died abroad while on duty at any time since April 21, 1898, and also that no deduction shall be made from the six months' gratuity allowed by law on account of expenses for preparation and transportation of remains; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 27 and 28 are a transposition of language which, in its effect, makes the 48,000 enlisted men of the Navy exclusive of men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia and is in accordance with existing law; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 29 provides for the appointment of George W. Littlehales as a professor in the corps of professors for mathematics in the Navy with the rank of captain; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 30 strikes out the House provision for the repeal of section 9 of the personnel act of 1899, known as the plucking board, and inserts a provision intended as a substitute for the plucking board. The Senate recedes, which restores to the bill the repeal of the plucking board.

Amendment No. 31 is a grammatical change by the use of "any officers" instead of "all officers"; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 32 strikes from the House provision the restoration to the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps any officer who has been retired by the action of any board; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 33 provides for the restoration to the active list of Lieut. Col. C. M. Perkins, United States Marine Corps; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 34 strikes out the provision which restores to the active list any officer of the Marine Corps on the retired list whose case has been examined by the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Sixty-third Congress; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 35 strikes out the provision, which is a practical repetition of a previous paragraph, relating to the restoration of officers who were plucked. The remainder of the paragraph has a proviso which is transposed and made a part of a previous paragraph relating to the officers who have been plucked under section 9 of the personnel act. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 36 changes the word "medical" to "physical"; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 37 authorizes the President to transfer to the active list any officer of the Navy retired by voluntary application under the personnel act of 1899, as amended by the act approved August 22, 1912, who is now performing duty, and also provides that no money appropriated for the pay of the Navy shall be used for the pay of any dental surgeon unless he shall have been appointed a dental officer, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 38 is a provision relating to aviators in the Navy and Marine Corps. Officer student aviators are granted 35 per cent increase of pay and allowances; officers qualified as naval aviators while performing duty involving actual flying in air craft receive 50 per cent increase of pay and allowances; enlisted men receive an increase of 50 per cent of their pay, including allowances, and permanent additions incident to their rating and service. The number of aviators is restricted to 48 officers and 96 enlisted men of the Navy and 12 officers and 24 enlisted men of the Marine Corps. In the event of the death of an enlisted man in the Navy or Marine Corps as the result of an aviation accident not the result of his own misconduct he receives an amount equal to one year's pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the time of the accident resulting in his death. The amendment provides that no officer senior in rank to lieutenant commander shall receive any increased pay in this duty; and the House recedes with an amendment placing the limit at that of commander in the Navy.

Amendment No. 39 provides for the establishment of a United States naval reserve, which shall consist of citizens of the United States who have been or may be entitled to an honorable discharge from the Navy after not less than four years' term of enlistment or after a time of enlistment during minority. The provision provides that all men honorably discharged within eight years shall be eligible for enlistment in the reserve, and if enlisted will receive pay at the rate of $12 per annum. All men honorably discharged within four months will be eligible for enlistment in the reserve, and if enlisted will receive pay at the rate of $30 per annum if they had less than eight years' service in the Navy and $60 per annum if they had more than eight years' service in the Navy and $100 per annum if they have served 12 or more years in the Navy.

After 2 years from the date of approval of the act those men who complete 16 or 20 or more years may be eligible for transfer to the reserve upon their own application, and when so transferred will receive pro rata pay based upon length of honorable service in the Navy of one-third and one-half, respectively, of their base pay.

Provision is made for the calling of enlisted men on the retired list into the active service in time of war. The provision requires that in time of peace members of the naval reserve may be required to perform not less than one month's active service on board a vessel of the Navy during each year of the service in the naval reserve, and such active service shall not exceed two months in any one year. An appropriation of $130,000 is made to carry this provision of the act into effect.

Amendment No. 40 provides for a commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet to have the rank of an admiral, and the second in command of the Atlantic and the commander in chief of the Pacific and Asiatic Fleet to have the rank of vice admiral, not providing any increase in pay. The House recedes with an amendment whereby the commanders in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, the Pacific Fleet, and the Asiatic Fleet shall have the rank of an admiral, and the second in command the rank of a vice admiral, to hold this rank only while acting as first and second in command of the fleets. The pay of the admiral is fixed at $10,000 a year, and the vice admiral at $9,000 per year. There is no increase in the number of officers, and upon detachment from duty from the fleet or retirement from the active list such officers retire with the rank and pay of rear admiral only.

Amendment No. 41 provides for the paymasters' clerks in the Navy. The provision changes the title to "pay clerks" and provides that acting pay clerks shall be appointed from enlisted men of the Navy holding the rating of acting or permanent chief petty officers who have served three years as enlisted men, two years of which must have been on board a cruising vessel of the Navy. Pay clerks who are now in the service whose service is less than one year may be given an appointment as acting pay clerk without previous service as enlisted men; also paymasters' clerks whose appointments have been revoked within six months next preceding the passage of this act, who have had not less than one year's active service as such, may be warranted as clerks without previous service as enlisted men or acting pay clerks.

After six years' service as pay clerks they are promoted to commissioned chief pay clerks, and shall have the same rank, pay, and allowances as other chief warrant officers. The total number of chief pay clerks, pay clerks, and acting pay clerks allowed shall not exceed 1 for each 250 enlisted men in the Navy. No person is eligible to be appointed a pay clerk unless his accumulated previous service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, together with his possible future service prior to attaining the age of 62 years, will amount to at least 30 years; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 42 provides that when the lowest obtainable cost of transporting coal by merchant carriers is considered excessive the appropriation "Fuel and transportation" may be charged with the expense of paying transportation, shipping, and subsistence of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries engaged in transportation of fuel: Provided, That the appropriation "Maintenance of naval auxiliaries" is insufficient therefor; and the House recedes, with an amendment restricting the transportation of fuel between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States.

Amendment No. 43 provides for part of a lump-sum appropriation to be expended for air craft; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 44 provides for the care of the wind tunnel at the Washington Navy Yard in the appropriation "Construction and repair of vessels"; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 45 provides for an increase in the Construction Corps of 24 officers by transfer from the line of the Navy to the Construction Corps, without any increase in the total number of officers in the Navy; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 46 provides for a lump-sum appropriation to be expended for air craft; and the Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 47 and 48 provide for the purchase of land for sites for radio shore stations, the purchase price not to exceed $10,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 49 increases the appropriation "Engineering" by $15,000 for tools and appliances in certain shops in navy yards; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 50 provides for the increased limit of cost from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 for high-power radio stations located in the Canal Zone, California coast, Hawaiian Islands, American Samoa, Guam, and the Philippine Islands. An appropriation of $400,000 is made; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 51 provides for the 10 per cent increase for Marine Corps officers on sea duty and 20 per cent increase for the enlisted men of the Marine Corps while serving at sea; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 52 and 53 provide for the increase of 20 gunnery sergeants, 20 sergeants, and 70 corporals of the Marine Corps; the number of privates is reduced by 110 and the appropriation increased $16,080; and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 54 and 55 are changes of totals; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 56 provides for six "or more" torpedo-boat destroyers and the words "or more" are stricken out; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 57 changes the speed of the torpedo-boat destroyers from "the highest practicable speed" to "a speed not less than 30 knots per hour"; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 58 fixes the aggregate limit of cost of the torpedo-boat destroyers; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 59 changes the words "torpedo boats" to "torpedo-boat destroyers"; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 60 provides for five seagoing submarines instead of one as provided by the House; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out 5 submarines and inserting 2 in lieu thereof.

Amendment No. 61 fixes the surface speed of the seagoing submarine at 25 knots or more, if possible; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 62 increases the limit of cost of the seagoing submarine from $1,400,000 to $1,500,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 63 increases the number of coast-defense submarines from 11 to 16; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 64 is a change of total.

Amendment No. 65 provides for a gunboat; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 66 provides for one hospital ship; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 67 is a change of total; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 68 is a change of total, and also provides for an armor-plate factory to cost not to exceed $8,000,000, appropriating $1,000,000 therefor, if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price, and also extends the time for the submission of the report of the armor committee to the regular session of Congress convening in December, 1915; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the provision for the armor-plate factory, and inserts a provision continuing the armor factory committee for the purpose of making such further investigation and report as may be deemed advisable.

Amendment No. 69 is a change of total.

Amendment No. 70 provides for a report to be submitted by the Secretary of the Navy at the next regular session of Congress on building 4 battleships of the type, power, and speed which, in his judgment, based on the knowledge gained from the prevailing war in Europe, are best suited for war on the sea; also to report, in the light of that war, the value and uses in naval warfare of aeroplanes, Zeppelins, dirigibles, balloons, and submarines; and the House recedes, with certain minor changes in verbiage.

Amendment No. 71 strikes out the provision fixing a limitation on appropriations in the act preventing the use of stop watches or other time-measuring devices in the service of the United States Government; and the Senate recedes, leaving the provision as it passed the House.

Amendment No. 72 provides that no sum appropriated in the act shall be expended for the purchase of steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce or trade of the United States; and the House recedes.

The bill as passed by the House carried	$144,648,901.88
The bill as passed by the Senate carried	152,961,981.88
An increase by the Senate	8,313,080.00
As agreed to in conference, the bill carries	147,538,981.88
Reduced in conference	5,423,000.00
Net Senate increase	2,890,080.00

The following are reappropriations, and are not charged to the bill:

Aeronautics	$1,000,000
Marine barracks, Norfolk and Mare Island	400,000
Hospital and dispensary, Pensacola, Fla	15,000
Toward submarines	800,000
Total	2,215,000

Authorizations in the bill as it passed the Senate have been reduced by the following amounts:

Projectile factory	$500,000
Armor-plate factory	8,000,000
Three fleet submarines	4,500,000
One gunboat	750,000
One hospital ship	2,250,000
Total	16,000,000

Authorization for an increased cost of radio stations from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 was agreed to in conference, making a net reduction in authorizations in the bill in conference of $15,500,000.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
ALBERT ESTOPINAL,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
ERNEST W. ROBERTS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PADGETT rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what action the conferees took so far as the plucking board is concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. So far as the plucking board is concerned, it is repealed, and substantially the House provision remains in the bill. There is no change except that there was a change in language, because the House had a duplication of language.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the protection that the House inserted in providing that these men who had been plucked should take an examination so that they would be shown fit for service has been retained?

Mr. PADGETT. It has.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the matter is left with the President to reappoint them?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what action the conferees took so far as the increase in the naval program is concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the House conferees consented to the increase of one of the large seagoing submarines and to the increase of five of the coast-defense submarines, and struck out of the bill the hospital ship and the gunboat and three of the large submarines.

Mr. STAFFORD. So there has been no change so far as the battleship program is concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. The only increase being as to submarines, which was the recommendation of the naval board?

Mr. PADGETT. It is less than the naval board. The naval board recommended three, and we have agreed to two.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not refer to the ocean-going submarines, but to the coast-defense submarines.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the coast-defense submarines remain the same as the recommendation of the General Board.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in following the reading of the report I took it that most of the legislation that was reported in the bill and which was stricken out in the House on points of order has been reinserted by the Senate and retained by the conferees.

Mr. PADGETT. Most of it; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there any exception where it has not been retained?

Mr. PADGETT. There was some of it that the Senate did not reinsert, and then there was one provision placing a civilian upon the commissioned list, which was stricken out in conference.

Mr. BUTLER. And the Marine Corps provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state what is the total amount, including those sums which are made available out of prior appropriations, which is carried in this bill as it is now agreed on?

Mr. PADGETT. The exact amount is stated in the bill. I do not remember what it is, but it is about $150,000,000 and a little over. I do not remember the exact figures. They are given to the cent in the statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall that the Senate receded from their disagreement so far as the Taylor system of time efficiency is concerned.

Mr. PADGETT. That is just as the House passed it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us in reference to amendment 39, the naval reserve, just what was done with it?

Mr. PADGETT. The naval reserve is retained in the bill with some verbal changes. It is substantially the one that was reported by the House committee.

Mr. FOSTER. And practically as it is here?

Mr. PADGETT. Almost.

Mr. FOSTER. As it went out on the point of order in the House?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; word for word except where it said 12 years they put in 12 years or more, and where it said 8 years it says 8 years or more. This would leave dead points if you said 8 years and less than 12, or 12 years and less than 16, so that on those even periods there would be no status of the enlisted man.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will that provide for in the bill now; how much will it cost?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, sir, I have printed a statement and the estimate for the next 10 years; it is estimated by the department the savings will about equal the cost.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the gentleman mean by "savings"?

Mr. PADGETT. It will induce men to stay in the service longer and that will reduce the cost of recruiting. It will save the cost of $60 for the outfit on first enlistment and various items incident to the cost of transportation, and the cost of education of the recruits for six months at these recruiting stations and training schools.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform us about amendment 24 in reference to the amount appropriated for barracks?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the amount we appropriated; that is retained.

Mr. FOSTER. Retained as it is in the conference report?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. So this bill as it is agreed to in conference carries about $150,000,000? Is that the gentleman's statement?

Mr. PADGETT. As the bill is agreed to in conference it carried $147,538,981.88, and then it carries——

Mr. BUTLER. Less than the Naval Affairs Committee reported to the House.

Mr. PADGETT. It carried in addition to that the reappropriations that are made available, which were in last year's bill. They are diverted from the purposes for which they were appropriated in last year's bill and made available for these purposes in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state how much that aggregates?

Mr. PADGETT. Two million two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Substantially the amount carried is within $100,000 or $200,000 of $150,000,000?

Mr. FOSTER. That is, the reappropriations.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Amendment No. 70, what was done with that? That is in reference to the Secretary of the Navy's direction to submit to the next Congress plans and specifications as to conclusions from the European war.

Mr. PADGETT. That is retained with a verbal change of language, but the substance of it is retained.

Mr. BUTLER. He is only required to report.

Mr. PADGETT. As it was passed by the Senate it provided that he should submit plans and specifications. Well, plans and specifications for a ship are very expensive and would cost many thousands of dollars. This directs him to report as to the character of design and type and style of ship.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the gentleman one more question. He makes that report next year——

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; to the next regular session.

Mr. FOSTER. As to what they think has been the result of the European war?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and aeroplanes and submarines and the whole question.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, amendments 14 and 15. Can the gentleman inform us in reference to the printing of nautical books, and so forth?

Mr. PADGETT. That is retained.

Mr. FOSTER. As it is here?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. So that is increased $25,000 over the House provision?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was the estimate on that?

Mr. PADGETT. The original estimates that were sent down were $80,000. Then, in the hearings, they stated that that was an error; that subsequent matters had developed; and that they ought to have this increase on account of this war condition, and the British Admiralty has shut off the purchase of the sailing directions, the books, and so forth, and has given notice——

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think we shall need very many of those directions for sailing the seas at this particular time?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is very necessary.

Mr. BUTLER. It depends on the direction we sail.

Mr. PADGETT. I think they should be provided with them.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is all I wish to know about the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] 5 minutes.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Navy Committee what disposition the conferees made as to Senate amendment No. 68?

Mr. PADGETT. Is that with reference to the armor-plate factory?

Mr. VARE. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. That goes out.

Mr. BUTLER. And continuing the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. And continues the committee until the next regular session.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the parliamentary situation of the bill at this time prevents an opportunity to introduce a motion for a separate vote on amendment No. 68, which provided that if the "Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor-plate factory upon land already owned by the Government, the total cost not to exceed $8,000,000, toward the construction of which $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated."

I am strongly in favor of the Senate amendment providing for the establishment of an armor-plate plant, because I believe it is a wise measure of military preparedness. In November, 1913, I introduced a bill for the appointment of a commission to make a survey of available sites and to look into the matter of costs, and such a commission was later created by Congress.

There were three members of this joint committee—Mr. PADGETT, the chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee; Senator TILLMAN, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee; and Admiral Strauss. After an exhaustive investigation, including personal inspection of the existing armor-plate plants in Pennsylvania, the committee reported to Congress as follows:

> Estimates were first prepared for the 20,000-ton plant, and the 10,000-ton plant estimate has been patterned therefrom. The price of the land necessary for the plant and certain other items are so indefinite as to be only the roughest approximation. The location and local conditions will bear largely on the cost of the various buildings and the installation of the machinery therein. The committee calls attention to the fact that the Government now owns, at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, ample land for the erection of an armor factory, and therefore no land would have to be bought. Philadelphia is an ideal place for the erection of such a plant, as it is accessible both by deep-water transportation and railroad facilities, is near coal and iron, and has a fine labor market. However, the Navy Department itself will select the location and construct the plant if Congress orders one, and the committee only mentions that no expense for land will be necessary. Besides the navy yard has facilities for assisting in the construction of this plant, which will largely reduce the expense of erecting it.
> The committee has done its work fairly and impartially. It has not expressed any views of its own, but has merely set down the facts. Allowing 10 per cent for incidentals, engineering expenses, and unforeseen contingencies, the committee has estimated a 10,000-ton-capacity plant at $6,635,107 and a 20,000-ton plant at $10,331,906.
> If the 20,000-ton plant were established at Philadelphia, where it could be run most economically, it would mean a pay roll amounting to $1,368,492.34 annually. If the smaller sized plant—the one with a capacity of 10,000 tons—were established, it would mean an annual pay roll of $812,206.83.
> But there would be an annual saving to the Government amounting, probably, to more than a million dollars a year. When it is realized that the present naval bill provides an appropriation of $19,275,998 just for the armor and armament for vessels heretofore or now authorized, there can be no doubt that the opportunity for economy is great.

It is significant that the Secretary of the Navy has repeatedly asserted that he is unable to obtain competitive bids from the existing armor-plate companies. The bids have been so uniform, he says, that he has become convinced that competitive bidding is impossible unless the Government itself provides the competition.

Mr. Speaker, for three years in this House I have heard economy talked on all sides. Now a splendid opportunity arises when those who have been denouncing the so-called Armor-plate Trust year after year have a chance to show good faith, but I fail to see favorable action. Notwithstanding the fact that the Senate had provided this amendment, we find the conferees on the part of the House opposing it, and the result is that this opportunity to economize, this opportunity to back up the Secretary of the Navy in securing moderate prices, is lost sight of and not taken advantage of by this Democratic Congress.

Far more important than the economy involved—and I want to say that I do not believe any existing company will be driven out of business, but that better competition will be the result—is the question of military preparedness. The time must come when a Government armor plant will be established. It is a detail in our plan for strengthening the national defenses that should not and can not be overlooked. Like the Government-owned shipbuilding plants, an armor-plate plant will prove a regulator and not a destroyer of private enterprise.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VARE. I am sorry, but I have not the time.

The Department of the Interior recently hailed the discovery of one of its experts who has been experimenting with coal-tar dyes from the mining industry as a great national achievement. The expert has found a reduction process by which one of the materials used in the manufacture of gunpowder could be obtained. It was stated that this might ultimately make us independent of private interests in the matter of explosives.

I think it well that the Government should be as independent as possible in the manufacture of war materials. There is nothing so necessary to a good naval equipment as an armor-plate factory. It is a necessary part of the naval establishment. It is not merely a matter of economy or of bringing about competition; it is a matter of efficiency.

It was undoubtedly for the purpose of protecting the Government against any agreement among the existing plants that the Senate bill inserted amendment No. 68, which, after appropriating $19,275,998, provided:

> That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor-plate factory upon land already owned by the Government, the total cost not to exceed $8,000,000, toward the construction of which $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated.

I think the amendment is a good one and that it is a matter of economy and efficiency to establish such a plant where it can be constructed most economically and conducted most efficiently—at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I have not the faintest idea that what I am about to say to the Members of this House will have any effect whatever upon this legislation. But I believe it is important that I should pursue a little further the question of armor-piercing shells. You will remember the other day when this bill was in the House we passed in the Committee of the Whole an amendment to the bill which required that the department should no longer buy armor-piercing shells of 12-inch size or over unless they could show that those 12-inch shells or larger could pierce 10-inch armor at 12,000 yards. That amendment was passed by the Committee of the Whole. On a separate vote in the House it was voted in by a large majority, and it became an amendment to this bill for the conferees to take care of.

Now, since that time I have been struggling with myself to determine whether I should tell some more facts respecting this important part of our common defense; but I have determined to say something here to-night which may not be just according to the ethics of legislation as laid down in this House. I am going to do it, hoping it will sink into the minds of some of you and be of some good to the people of this country.

I read the other day part of the hearings of Gen. Crozier before the Appropriations Committee, and found his reply—to a question which was asked him respecting the power of armor-piercing shells to pierce 10-inch armor at 12,000 yards—was essentially a confirmation of my contention in the matter.

Gen. Crozier conceded the point that we made when that amendment was passed in the House. He said that a 12-inch shell had a limit of about 12,000 yards, in which it would pierce armor of 10-inch thickness. I will read the colloquy. Mr. White was interrogating the general regarding my statements made on this floor recently.

Mr. WHITE. He makes a most remarkable statement. He makes the statement that our 12-inch guns will not pierce 10-inch armor at a greater range than 12,000 yards. Do you accept that? He is speaking of 10-inch K. C. armor.

Gen. CROZIER. Krupp cemented; the cementing being the process of the Krupp establishment. Cemented means face hardened. The 12-inch rifle firing a 1,070-pound projectile at a velocity of 2,250 feet a second, which are standard conditions, will penetrate 10 inches of this class of armor at a range of about 12,000 yards. That is, with incidence approximately normal, 10°, possibly 15° inclination, but beyond that range it will not penetrate armor of that thickness.

Mr. WHITE. He makes this statement:

"We have been experimenting at Indianhead with different charges of powder, firing armor-piercing shells, for years. By these experiments at short distances they got a theoretical trajectory, and because they pierced through armor plate under experimental conditions they have considered for years that they could pierce armor plate at 6 miles distance, or 12,000 yards; but when they experimented by actually shooting these shells at 12,000 yards they could not pierce the armor."

Gen. CROZIER. Twelve thousand yards would be just about the limit at which our projectiles can be fired through that armor. Our projectile is a little different from the Navy's, being 1,070 pounds as against 870 pounds, and for that reason there is a little less retardation as it goes through the air than with the Navy's projectile. Notwithstanding the fact that it has a lower initial velocity, I think by the time that it gets out to 12,000 yards it has greater remaining energy, so that it probably would have a more penetrative effect than a naval projectile at that range.

Note that the general says that the 12-inch Army shell has "greater remaining energy," than the Navy shell, but beyond 12,000 yards the Army shell will not pierce 10-inch armor plate. Note, also, the words "with incidence approximately normal."

In battle formation the incidence is seldom "normal," but presents greater difficulties to the shell than at target practice.

Aside from the actual experience at target practice, this is expert evidence to prove my point.

What I particularly want to say to you is this: It is supposed, when you are on the ordnance subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that what you learn is not to be told—that there are some secrets. But it will not hurt us, if an armor-piercing shell will really pierce, to let the world know that we have more of them than we need; it will not hurt us to let the world know that we have this great stock of armor-piercing shells loaded up, and are ready for any enemies that may come. It will do no harm to let them know we have more than enough. And that is the situation to-day, and the revelation of that secret would not hurt anybody. [Applause.]

We have appropriated in this bill over $2,000,000 to buy armor-piercing shells that may not pierce, and for every gun afloat we have more shells than will be required to wear it out. The best testimony we have had before our committee is that from 75 to 80 shots will wear out these guns, and they must be relined after that many shots have been fired. Every man knows that if we were in war we could not stop to reline our guns—not while in the thick of battle.

Now, if we have 124 shells for every gun afloat, which is about 40 more than is required to wear out the guns, why, in God's name, do we insist on buying 5,000 more which we are not sure will pierce armor? What is the answer? That is the fight I have been making. Somebody please tell me where is the business proposition in this. Some one has told me that the reason why we want to keep on buying armor-piercing shells is because some people who are advocating a high-explosive shell, which seems by all the evidence to have been used lately in the European war, have hurt some one's feelings. That can not be it, for that would not be business. I have also been informed that our highly educated expert men who have charge of these matters are honest men. I believe that. For the time during which I have been on the Naval Committee I have never seen an incident or a sign—and that has been for four years—that would indicate that these men are not honest. I believe in their honesty and patriotism. I believe they are expert, but I believe my own eyes when I see things. But I want to say this much—and it is not a severe criticism to make—that these men seem to be opinionated and too slow to accept inventions that will come along after awhile and add to the value of our Navy and its efficiency.

Now, if we can use a high-explosive shell—and experiments indicate that we can—I want to repeat what I stated the other day, that of those battleships that we have laid aside—and there are 28 of them according to my own calculation—we could return 12 of them and make them efficient by the use of the high-power modern guns that we have in our Navy, and while they can not penetrate armor as well as our more modern guns, yet these guns could throw an explosive shell and hit a ship at very long range and do it great damage.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BATHRICK. I regret that my time is nearly gone.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. It is your opinion the reason why we do not purchase high-explosive shells is because if we did there would not be so much armor to be pierced or so much that would be necessary?

Mr. BATHRICK. I have heard a good many observations and intimations of that kind, but I am not prepared to believe them. That would be a reflection on these men in the department, of whom I say I have never seen one dishonest action on their part in connection with their work.

But here is a provision which our conferees have yielded, given up, and it evidences what we are likely to do when we are approaching the last days of a session; how legislation of importance and the people's money goes slashing through this House like stray dogs through a sausage mill, and nobody knows what we are doing. We are largely going to waste this money that we invest in armor-piercing shells. We have already got more of them than we can use if we were at war to-day. We have got more than enough for every gun, if they are all right; and, in the second place, if they are not effective, we need none of them. The Navy Department has the power now to buy these doubtful shells. It is up to them to see the business proposition. I am going out of Congress, but I am not going out of the country nor lose my interest in it.

Mr. Chairman, before I close I wish to pay my tribute to the gentlemen who have largely shaped this bill. It is a good bill, and, in the main, the large sum appropriated will be well spent. It is a bill which mainly must be made by the Navy experts, and I think they have conscientiously striven to do all for the best. My differences with them are few and not drastic, and my service on this committee has convinced me that our men of the common defense are worthy of the confidence of the people. If they err, I believe them big enough to correct error, to admit it, and turn around.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs what was done with Senate amendment 57, providing that the speed of torpedo boats should be not less than 30 knots, which reads as follows:

Six or more torpedo-boat destroyers, to have a speed of not less than 30 knots per hour and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $925,000 each.

Mr. PADGETT. We kept it in the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Good! What was done with amendment 72, which is as follows:

That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce or trade of the United States, or the commerce or trade between the States and any Territory or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture. But this limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract.

Mr. PADGETT. We kept it in.

Mr. FOWLER. Good! I believe you say amendment 68 was eliminated? It reads as follows:

Toward the armor and armament for vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $19,275,998: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price, he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor-plate factory, upon land already owned by the Government, the total cost not to exceed $8,000,000, toward the construction of which $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That the time for the submission of the report of the committee appointed by the act of June 30, 1914 (Public, No. 121), is hereby extended to the regular session of Congress convening in December, 1915.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the provision for going into the manufacture of armor plate at this time?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. That went out.

Mr. FOWLER. I am very sorry of that, for the Secretary of the Navy stands in sore need of relief. He has fought manfully for it, and I am sorry his request has not been granted.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman what was done with the Senate amendment authorizing the Navy Department to submit plans and specifications for building four warships with the highest speed and power possible, which reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to prepare and submit to the next Congress plans and specifications for building four warships of the type, power, and speed which, in his judgment, based on the knowledge gained from the prevailing war in Europe, are best suited for war on the sea; also to report, in the light of that war, the value and uses in naval warfare of aeroplanes, Zeppelins, and submarines.

Mr. PADGETT. We retained that, directing him to report to the next Congress on that subject.

Mr. FOWLER. Good! Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the progress which he has made in this conference report, and I take my hat off to him; and if I have ever said anything against him in the past, or his work for the great Navy Department, I take it all back now, because of the magnificent work which he has done for America. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the high-speed vessels which are competing in deadly conflict in the East have proven to be the winners. It has also been demonstrated in that death struggle that the high-explosive shells, combined with the high rate of speed and big long-range siege guns, are winners on the water. [Applause.] I congratulate the gentleman and his committee on bringing back to this House a conference report which fairly bristles with these new and modern improvements. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, that type of dreadnaught known as the Queen Elizabeth type of Great Britain is proving the efficiency of the Navy of Great Britain and her wisdom in the construction of her navy. The Queen Elizabeth, a 25-knot dreadnaught, is now in the Dardanelles with her 15-inch guns, and it is due to that great monster of the sea that the allies will be able to register the victory which will be the crowning one among the victories of this war. The greatest naval victory, in my opinion, which will be won will be the capture of the Dardanelles, adding one more piece of evidence to the wisdom of the men who are advocating high-speed war vessels, high-explosive shells, and big long-range siege guns. Equip the American Navy with these superior advantages, and we will have a Navy equal to that of any other country in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is always desirable to have orderly procedure in the House; and in saying "orderly procedure" I do not refer particularly to order in the House. Especially is it desirable to have orderly procedure in Congress when the jam comes toward the close of the session.

The other day we agreed to the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, although it should have been presented to the Senate first. We now have the naval conference report before us, although it should have been presented to the Senate first.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not understand why. We agreed to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. That just shows! We did nothing of the sort. I am going to explain the circumstances. It shows how necessary it is for the gentlemen in charge of conferences to know what they are doing, so that there may be orderly procedure. I will explain.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. The papers were in possession of the House and were turned over to us by the House, and we received them from the House as the agents and representatives of the House. The Senate asked for a conference.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is still in error.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. MANN. Let me explain what the facts are.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have got the papers to back me up, and the gentleman has not. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD showed that the other day when the naval bill was before the Senate the Senator in charge of the bill moved that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference, and the conferees were named; but they did not send any such message to the House.

When the naval bill with Senate amendments came to the House the gentleman from Tennessee moved that the House agree to the conference. That is true, according to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But, as the Senate had not asked for a conference, the clerks of the House, who attempt sometimes with great effort to keep the House in orderly procedure, sent a message to the Senate asking for a conference, because we had no request before us asking for a conference; and if we had sent a message to the Senate agreeing to a conference which was not asked for we would have been very foolish.

The Senate agreed to the conference which we asked for, and sent a message to us agreeing to a conference. Now, these papers were in the hands of the conferees, all of them. I am not disposed to criticize the conferees for not knowing what was in the papers, but yet it is desirable, especially in the jam toward the end of the session, for gentlemen in charge of the papers in conference to examine the papers and know what the situation is.

As a matter of fact, nobody is authorized to act upon a bill after it has passed one body, without having actual, physical possession of the papers, because without that no one knows how things will become mixed up. When we asked for a conference, as we did the other day, we sent a message to the Senate so stating and the papers accompanied the message. When they agreed to the conference they sent us a message agreeing to it, and the papers accompanied the message. Then the papers were turned over to the House conferees, and the gentleman from Tennessee and the other conferees went into conference with the papers in their possession. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, the rule is that when you agree upon a conference the conferees who have possession of the papers turn them over to the other conferees. I will read from Jefferson's Manual, page 236:

> * * * And in all cases of conference asked after a vote of disagreement, etc., the conferees of the House asking it are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other; and in one case where they refused to receive them they were left on the table in the conference chamber.

Without following the orderly procedure, if we get into this sort of a jam, no one knows what will be in the enrolled bill after it is enrolled. The enrolling clerks have only one way; they know that they must follow orderly procedure. The clerks of the House do their best to keep us in order, but they can not make us follow orderly procedure unless we help them out. I hope that there will be no more conference reports come to this body when they ought first to go to the other body.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senators would not take the papers; we tried our best to give them to them.

Mr. MANN. They would if you had told them what the parliamentary law is; perhaps they did not know it. I have read you what Jefferson says about it.

Mr. BUTLER. We had the papers, and they would not take them.

Mr. MANN. They would take them. The same conferees have taken them many years before. There never has been a case before when the naval bill came to the wrong body first with the conference report since I have been a Member of the House. The first thing we know the enrolling clerks will not know anything about what either body is doing. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to state that these matters mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois were fully discussed in conference and the matters gone over, and it was considered there, and it was the unanimous opinion of the Senate conferees that the House, having the manual, actual possession of the papers, and delivering them to us as their representative, that we could not part with the papers without the authority of the House, and they declined to take them, and insisted that we bring them to the House.

Mr. BUTLER. We had to do something with them.

The SPEAKER. Well, they are here, anyway.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

COLORADO MINE STRIKE (H. DOC. NO. 1630).

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith a report on the investigation of the Colorado strike made by the subcommittee of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois submits a report of a subcommittee on the investigation of the strike in Colorado, which is ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 21201, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1496).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R.

21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 22, and 23.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Salaries, United States agency: One counsel and joint secretary, at $2,750 per annum; stenographer, at $1,200 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $200; rent of rooms, $600; in all, $4,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: ": Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission, counsel, and secretary, except a sum not exceeding $10 per day each, when absent from Washington on official business"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SECOND PAN AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS.

"To enable the Government of the United States suitably to participate in the Second Pan American Scientific Congress, to be held at the city of Washington, and for the necessary expenses for clerks, printing (including the publication of the proceedings of the congress in English and Spanish), stationery and supplies, and other incidental expenses, including rent in the District of Columbia, and for the entertainment of the delegates, to be immediately available, $15,000, which sum is in addition to the $35,000 appropriated for the same purposes by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915,' approved June 30, 1914, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; and the said appropriation of $35,000 is hereby made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1916."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year 1916, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee, and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

Nos. 1, 2, and 3, relating to the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico: Appropriates $14,000, instead of $7,500 as proposed by the House and $25,000 as proposed by the Senate; makes $8,000 of the amount immediately available to resume and continue the work relating to the distribution of water as authorized by the protocol of May 6, 1896; and provides that the "water commissioner" may study the questions connected with the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande River.

No. 4: Provides that advances of money may be made to the commissioner, and through him to chiefs of field parties engaged in the work of marking the boundary line between Alaska and Canada and the United States and Canada.

No. 5: Provides for the exercise of judicial authority and jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases in a vice consul at Shanghai, China, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, relating to the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain: Appropriates for a counsel and joint secretary at $2,750, instead of a joint secretary at $3,000 as proposed by the Senate, and two counsel at $2,520 each as proposed by the House; provides for a stenographer at $1,200; strikes out the messenger at $720, proposed by the House; appropriates $200 for contingent expenses as proposed by the Senate, instead of $500 as proposed by the House; and appropriates $600 for rent of rooms, instead of $1,380 as proposed by the House, and $1,000 as proposed by the Senate.

No. 11: Appropriates $1,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, for the Fisheries Convention, United States and Great Britain.

Nos. 12 and 13, relating to the International Joint Commission: Inserts authority for the employment of counsel not to exceed $5,000; appropriates $55,000 instead of $60,000, as proposed by the Senate; and provides that the commission, counsel, and secretary may be allowed not to exceed $10 per diem for subsistence when absent from Washington on official business.

Nos. 14 and 15, relating to the Consular Service: Provides for payment of salaries of officers in accordance with the "act for the improvement of foreign service" from the date of its approval to the end of the fiscal year 1915.

Nos. 16, 17, and 18: Strikes out the reappropriations, proposed by the House, for the completion of Chinese treaties, the International Conference on Maritime Law, and the Nineteenth Conference of the Interparliamentary Union.

No. 19: Appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Second Pan American Scientific Congress.

No. 20: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the entertainment of foreign delegates in connection with the Pan American Medical Congress, to be held at San Francisco in June, 1915.

No. 21: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to send delegates or representatives to the International Engineering Congress, to be held at San Francisco in September, 1915.

Nos. 22 and 23, relating to the exposition in the city of Panama: Appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for participation by the United States; and strikes out the authority, inserted by the Senate, for the expenditure of $75,000 of that sum for the erection of a building.

No. 24: Appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the conference of American financiers.

H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER.
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What is the conference report on the Mexican boundary line?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is a total sum of $14,000, $6,000 of which is to be applied to the Boundary Line Commission proper.

Mr. MANN. The House appropriated $7,000?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The House appropriation was $7,500, and the Senate amendment was $25,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield in order that I may ask a question in that connection?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia what was the purpose of increasing the appropriation? Was it to survey the tributaries to the Rio Grande?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. A good deal of evidence was presented to the conference committee in the shape of printed testimony of engineers to the effect that if the flood waters of the Pecos and the Devil Rivers were controlled and impounded they could prevent the bed of the Rio Grande from changing and thereby fix a stable boundary line between this country and Mexico.

Mr. GARNER. Without any additional control of the Rio Grande?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes. That would constitute the control of it, and the conferees on the part of the House thought that was worth investigating, as we had expended $800,000 in trying to fix a boundary line and had been unable to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RECALL OF A BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 37, that the same may be laid before the House for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 37 and to pass the same at this time. It is a request of the President to send back a bill, about which there is some mistake. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 37.

THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 19, 1915.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill, S. 7362, an act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and bottoms contiguous thereto, in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

STANDARD APPLE BOX.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4517) to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the standard box for apples hereinafter provided for shall be of the following dimensions when measured without distention of its parts:

Depth of end, 10½ inches; width of end, 11½ inches; length of box, 18 inches; all inside measurements, and representing, as nearly as possible, 2,173½ cubic inches.

SEC. 2. That any box in which apples shall be packed and offered for sale in interstate or foreign commerce which does contain less than the required number of cubical inches, as prescribed in section 1 of this act, shall be plainly marked on one side and one end with the words "Short box," or with words or figures showing the fractional relation which the actual capacity of the box bears to the capacity of the box prescribed in section 1 of this act. The marking required by this paragraph shall be in black letters of the size not less than 72-point block Gothic.

SEC. 3. That standard boxes marked "Standard" as hereinafter provided when packed, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or which shall be sold or offered for sale within the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States of America, shall bear upon one or both ends in plain letters the name of the person, firm, company, or organization which first packed or caused the same to be packed; the name of the locality where said apples were grown; and the name of the variety of the apples contained in the box, unless the variety is not known to the packer, in which event the box shall be marked "Unknown."

SEC. 4. That the apples contained within the said standard box when so packed and offered for sale, shipment, or delivery in interstate or foreign commerce shall be well-grown specimens, of one variety, reasonably uniform in size, properly matured, practically free from dirt, insect pests, diseases, bruises, and other defects, except such as are necessarily caused in the operation of packing.

SEC. 5. That standard boxes packed in accordance with the provisions of this act may be marked "Standard."

SEC. 6. That boxes containing apples marked "Standard" shall be deemed to be misbranded within the meaning of this act—

When the size of the box does not conform to the requirements of section 1 of this act, and when the markings on the box and the contents thereof do not conform to the requirements of sections 3 and 4 of this act: Provided, however, That all shipments in boxes to foreign countries in which a standard box may have been established may be marked "For export, quality of contents equal to American standard."

SEC. 7. That any person, firm, company, or organization who shall mark or cause to be marked boxes packed with apples intended for interstate or foreign commerce, or sell, or offer for sale, shipment, or delivery, in interstate or foreign commerce, apples in boxes contrary to the provisions of this act or in violation hereof, or shall sell or offer for sale or delivery in interstate or foreign commerce in a standard box apples other than those originally packed therein without first completely obliterating the original markings and labels on such box and mark the box to conform to the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $1 for each box so marked, sold, or offered for sale or delivery, and costs, to be recovered at the suit of the United States in any court having jurisdiction: Provided, That the penalty to be recovered on any one shipment shall not exceed the sum of $100, exclusive of costs.

SEC. 8. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after the 1st day of October, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from South Dakota to 20 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word in regard to this bill, so that the House may get the facts before it. This is Senate bill 4517, and as the motion is made to suspend the rules we have stricken out of the Senate bill as it passed the Senate that provision which exempts Colorado from the bill.

And also on lines 14 and 15 we have struck out the words:

In plain figures the number of apples contained in the box; also,

And on lines 15 and 16:

The style of pack used.

And then on lines 21, 22, and 23 we have struck out that sentence which provides:

A variation of three apples from the number designated as being in the box shall be allowed.

And we have changed the month in which the act shall have force and effect from the 1st day of July to the 1st day of October, 1915.

A counterpart of this bill is H. R. 11178, reported by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House, and is the same as the Senate bill which passed the Senate, with the addition of the statements made by me.

There were some who objected to the bill as to counting of the apples and the style of the pack. The western apple growers, all the associations of packers, wanted it, but in deference to a few of the eastern people, those in Colorado and a few other places, we felt that, while we would like to have that in, we had better take it out and avoid any possible question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the motion before the House is to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 4517 with certain amendments?

Mr. RAKER. It is.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not the way it was reported.

Mr. RAKER. It was.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not so understand it.

Mr. RAKER. The motion strikes out of the Senate bill the proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the packing, shipment, or offering for sale of apples grown in the State of Colorado in boxes or containers whose dimensions do not comply with those herein above prescribed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman tell from what page he is reading?

Mr. RAKER. It is not in the printed bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it in the Senate bill?

Mr. RAKER. It is in the Senate bill. The Clerk read from the original Senate bill with this proviso eliminated.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is, the first proviso is eliminated?

Mr. RAKER. It is eliminated.

Mr. STAFFORD. What else is eliminated?

Mr. RAKER. Those parts which I stated, in lines 14, 15, and 16, the following words:

In plain figures the number of apples contained in the box; also—

And then follows:

The style of the pack used.

And then, on lines 21, 22, and 23, commencing with the word "A" and ending with the word "allowed," on line 23.

I just want to say this further word, that many of the States, through their organizations, have recommended the passage of this legislation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. They appeared before the committee and urged the passage of this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. WINGO. I notice that on the first page of the Senate bill, in the last paragraph, the Colorado apples are exempted from the provisions of this bill. Why is that?

Mr. RAKER. The motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill eliminates that proviso. I have seen the Senators, and they all agree to that elimination.

Mr. WINGO. I want to ask another question.

Mr. RAKER. Go ahead.

Mr. WINGO. Why do you make this apply to anything else than interstate commerce? Why do you make it apply to the offering for sale? Why do you not limit it to the shipments in interstate commerce?

Mr. RAKER. That is what the purpose of it is—interstate and foreign commerce. That is all it applies to.

Mr. WINGO. Section 2 says:

Which apples shall be packed and offered for sale——

Mr. RAKER. In interstate commerce.

Mr. WINGO. That is all?

Mr. RAKER. There is nothing in the bill except that which applies to interstate commerce; that is all.

Mr. WINGO. There is nothing in the bill except what applies to interstate commerce?

Mr. RAKER. Not at all. That is the purpose of the bill and the intent of it.

Mr. FALCONER. Are the provisions of this bill mandatory or elective?

Mr. RAKER. They are elective. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserves the balance of his time, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself five minutes.

This bill is without merit and ought to be defeated. It pretends to establish an arbitrary standard box for apples. It fixes the length, the depth, and the width of the box, and excludes every other box, so far as a standard is concerned. It is a standard of form and not of contents. It does not hitch to any known measure. It does not accord with avoirdupois or Troy weights. It does not accord with the bushel, or barrel, or any other known measure in this or any other country. It does not accord with the mandatory apple-box bill of Maine. It is optional, so far as the standard box is concerned.

As to section 2 it is mandatory. I ask every Member of this body before they vote upon this bill to read carefully that section of it. It is mandatory as to the short box. It quarantines every grower of fruit who uses a smaller box than the standard box, and as to him it is mandatory. He must mark his box "short."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman mean to say that by the provisions of this bill you can only use a certain definite-sized box—neither larger nor smaller?

Mr. DILLON. Neither larger nor smaller, and mark it "standard." You must mark it "standard," and if it is less it must be marked in fractional part or it must be marked "short."

Section 2 is not only mandatory but it is intrastate as well as interstate; it is applicable to interstate trade as well as to intrastate trade. The standard box is applicable to the interstate trade alone. That is not all. This apple-box bill is not in accord with the pure-food laws of the Nation. Under the pure-food provisions of our legislation, which are now mandatory, everybody must mark in weight, in measure, or in numerical count, and that law is now mandatory upon our statute books. At one time it was permissive, but it proved to be a failure as a permissive law, so that Congress made it mandatory.

Now we have upon our statute books a mandatory law, a pure-food law, according to which you must stamp upon the container the weight, the measure, or the numerical count. Now I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to tell me how he is going to make this short box comply with the pure-food laws of this country? You must mark it. He has eliminated by his amendment the numerical count. He eliminates every other feature of the pure-food laws of our Nation.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. DILLON. Not just now. Let the gentleman wait until I get through. He will mark it as a short box. Then you must comply with the pure-food law, which is unrepealed, which is not mentioned in this vicious measure, and then under that you must mark the numerical count or the weight or the measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used five minutes of his time.

Mr. DILLON. I will take one more minute, Mr. Speaker. I will then yield to others. No; I will first yield to myself three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Very well.

Mr. DILLON. So that the party, when he marks his box "short," which is mandatory, must comply with the pure-food law.

Suppose he has a half bushel in that box. He must mark it under the pure-food law "one-half bushel," if he takes that standard, and he must mark it "short"; and I challenge the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to answer this argument before he presses this vicious bill before this House. If he wants to adopt the other provision and go by weight, he marks it "50 pounds" and marks it "short," and sends it out into the market quarantined; and, of course, nobody would want to buy a box of that kind with "a half bushel" marked upon it to comply with the pure-food law and marked "short" under it to comply with this vicious measure.

Suppose he marked the numerical count, say 50 apples, to comply with the pure-food law and under that mark it "short." And that is not all. You take the penalty that is imposed. It provides that the party would be liable to $1 penalty or fine for each box. Imagine the great Government of the United States going around and collecting $1 and suing for it in your community! It would turn the Federal courts into police courts.

Mr. Speaker, I trust this vicious measure will be defeated. It has not a good provision in it. We must have mandatory provisions in our law if we shall ever have a standard measure. We have tried it. Massachusetts tried it in her option laws, but Massachusetts had to resort to mandatory laws. Wisconsin has tried it, and New Jersey has tried it, and Maine has tried it; and Maine has on her statute books to-day a mandatory provision in reference to an apple box, and that apple box is one-third of that new barrel. That apple box is one-third of the New York barrel, the barrel that we recently made a mandatory standard in the bill which we passed. If the Congress of the United States will establish measures, let it do so by laws that are not optional or mere makeshifts as this law is. Let the law be mandatory in form, in order that it may establish something when we have promulgated a standard.

Let me call your attention to the fact that in Indiana onions weigh 47 pounds to the bushel and in Illinois 58. Broom-corn seed in Minnesota weighs 57 pounds to the bushel and in the two Dakotas 30 pounds to the bushel. It is because of such laws as this, made by the States, that Congress, if it will have standards, must fix standards that are absolute, and not fix them in optional forms that are vicious in terms and which anyone may or may not use.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RAKER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is largely to put into law the custom of the trade in the selling of apples by boxes. In the Pacific Northwest, where we ship very long distances at high rates of transportation, we have for many years used the apple box described in this bill, and the size of the box described in the bill is the result of the experience of the packers in packing hundreds of thousands of boxes and in selling them all over the country and in Europe. The cubical contents of the box are a little over 20 cubic inches more than the Winchester bushel.

When the hearings were on before the Committee on Agriculture some years ago, and also before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures later, on the subject of apple-box legislation, it was testified by every dealer who appeared before these two committees that the manner of selling apples in boxes, in the way in which they were sold, marked with the numerical count, the name of the packer, and the variety of the apple, was practically without abuse. I think only one instance was cited where a few boxes were sold of which there was complaint. There was no such complaint made of the apple box trade as there was made of the barrel trade.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In the hearings of which the gentleman speaks were any representatives of the apple growers of Michigan heard?

Mr. HAWLEY. There were representative apple growers from New York, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and other States, but I am not sure whether there were any from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman know whether there was any expression of opinion from any dealers or interested people from Michigan?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not tell you that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. These are the dimensions of the boxes that have been in vogue on the Pacific coast for many years, are they not?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are; the exact measure. I asked one of the larger dealers in apples if he would take a trainload of apples packed in boxes under the conditions described in this bill, and send them out to his customers without examining them, upon the statement of the grower and packer. He said he would and did. I asked him if he would do the same thing with a trainload of apples in barrels. He said he could not afford to do it. The apples in the boxes are of guaranteed number, quality, variety, and character, and have been sold in that way for years. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DILLON. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with extreme regret that I can not agree with my friend from California [Mr. RAKER] that this bill ought to pass. It is a very serious matter to fix a standard of measure, and I do not believe that at the close of the session, and under such circumstances as these, it can be done with that degree of caution and of study that should be given to so important a matter. Standards of measure concern our trade and regulate intercourse of a commercial character between men, and they ought to be fixed with due regard to the demands of trade and to the requirements of the country generally. I do not think that this bill does that. I believe that when we say what a pound is it ought not to be complicated with such definitions and conditions as have been imposed in this bill. I believe that every standard of measure ought to be what it purports to be on its face and nothing more; that it ought to contain so many cubic inches of content, or ought to contain so many ounces, or such a quantity of liquid. I do not believe that it ought to be conceived in the interest of any particular trade or any particular section of the country instead of the interest of all of the people.

This bill imposes conditions which are objectionable in section 2, in section 3, and, in fact, in every section, except possibly lines 6 to 10, inclusive. If we are going to fix the size of a box for the sale of apples, it is not necessary to go beyond the declaration to be found in section 1, on the first page of the bill, where the depth, the width, and the length of the box are described, and the contents of the inside measurement clearly set forth.

I believe if the bill should pass at all, it ought to be with every other feature stricken out of it. There is a considerable demand for time, Mr. Speaker. Other gentlemen want to speak on the measure, and I yield back the balance of the three minutes that the gentleman so kindly gave me.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add very much to what has been said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]. This bill is not altogether on all fours with the barrel bill which passed a few days ago. It does not go so far as that bill attempted to go. Nevertheless, in my opinion, this bill goes too far. I think that the function of the Congress has been conformed to when it has exhausted the power under the Constitution and fixed a standard of weight or measure. I think it lies within the power of Congress to fix a standard of measure, but when the bill undertakes to go further, when it undertakes to prescribe the brand that shall be put on the box, it seems to me that it is exceeding the power which Congress ought to exercise. I think that this bill has been designed as a sectional bill. I believe it goes to an extent to which Congress should not go in undertaking to fix brands on boxes, and for that reason, as much as I like my friend from California, I feel constrained to cast my vote against the bill, and I very much hope that it will not pass.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I have received more letters, petitions, and resolutions in favor of this bill than any other bill affecting the Western States. It is simply a bill to compel honesty in the shipment of fruit. In the western country apples are shipped in boxes rather than in barrels, as are the apples in the Central and Eastern States, and this bill provides a standard box in which these apples shall be shipped. The measurements of the box provided in the bill contain 2,173 cubic inches, 23 cubic inches more than are in the standard bushel. So, under the proposed law when a person desires to buy a box of apples he knows that if it is marked "Standard" that he is getting a full bushel of apples.

I can not understand why anyone who believes in honesty and fair dealing should oppose the bill. We have a pure-food law which compels a statement on boxes of merchandise sold by weight as to its weight, or if the contents are sold by numerical count the exact count. This bill simply provides a standard box, so that when a person buys a box of apples marked "Standard" he knows that he is not getting short measure. [Applause.] This is a very meritorious bill, and I hope it will be speedily enacted.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I can not see why anyone should resent the standardization of a market measure which will make the public know what is being purchased. Those who resent this standardization of the apple box will find that their communities will not be able to pack and market their goods as well as those districts who do comply, although voluntarily, with a standard that is generally understood.

The question as to what the Constitution may provide as to labeling boxes is amusing. We have coins and we label and brand them, and nobody claims that it is an invasion of the Constitution to thus disfigure a piece of metal. This bill has other things in it that greatly add to its value. It provides against diseased fruit and dirty fruit. Those who are most successful in fruit marketing are the ones who are careful about the goods that they ship, who see to it that their product is good, and is so packed and labeled as to carry a guaranty of its amount and its quality on the outside of the package. Wherever brains and care are used producers are getting away from indefinite standards, whether of barrels and boxes or other packages. It is much cheaper to have a standard box that can be ordered at the sawmill and that carries with it a guaranty of contents. The producer knows what he must furnish; the consumer knows what he is getting. This is not a sectional bill, but a bill to expedite and simplify the business of distribution. Never will any fruit business be well and profitably conducted if we do not get down to a standard and know the quantities and qualities in which we are dealing.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made that the hearings on this bill were had before the Committee on Agriculture. I remember no hearings on a bill of this kind except those that were held about eight years ago. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

I wish to say further that the bill then considered provided for a box of different size and different dimensions from the one described in this bill. It was strenuously opposed then only, as I remember, by the gentlemen representing the States of the Pacific coast, because they had the standard box in vogue in that part of the country, and they did not wish a different standard adopted. This bill now provides for a standard box according to their measurement. They are pleased with it, and they would force it on all of the rest of the country.

I further object to the passage of this bill on account of the way in which it is brought up, in the last days of the session in the nighttime without any reasonable opportunity for proper consideration of the bill, with no notice given that it was to be considered. The committee having the bill in charge has been called from time to time on Calendar Wednesdays, and has had other opportunities for presenting the measure. It has availed itself of none of these opportunities, but brings it up here under suspension of the rules, when there is not sufficient time for proper consideration of it. It is an altogether too important measure to be considered in this way, and I trust at this time that the House will not act favorably upon it. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we passed the apple-barrel bill, which has been very successful in its operation. The apple-box bill, in my judgment, if passed, would be equally successful. I do not think that I could say anything which would be more to the point than to read a short extract from one of the numerous letters which I have received from fruit-growing and fruit-handling people concerning this bill. The purpose of the bill is to round out legislation already passed by the Federal Government as applied to apples packed in barrels what is known to the trade as the Sulzer bill. I read from a letter from the president of the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association of America:

> The above has the indorsement of at least practically every growers' association, every horticultural society, and every trade organization in the country. It has been indorsed by retailers' and consumers' organizations.

Mr. Speaker, as the president of this association writes, it has the indorsement of practically all of the associations of men engaged in growing apples, in handling apples, and so far as consumers' associations are concerned, in consuming apples. What objection can there be to fixing a standard apple box so that the purchaser knows whether he is getting a certain quantity of apples or not? We all know that we are constantly buying short weights, even where the weight is put upon the article, as is now required by the amendment to the pure-food law. People are not required to use the standard apple barrel, and they will not be required to use the standard apple box; but if they do not, they must say so in common honesty. We passed the apple-barrel bill mainly for the benefit of the eastern producers of apples, where the apples are packed in barrels, as they are in the main in my part of the country; but in the far West the apples do not bear transportation well in barrels, and hence they are packed in boxes; and what we did for the eastern producer and dealer we ought to do for the western producer and dealer and consumer. [Applause.]

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have not any time.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman yield the balance of his time?

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman conclude in one speech?

Mr. RAKER. I yield one minute now to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I represent one of the great apple-growing sections of the country, the Oregon apple district. The apple growers of my district and my State, and on the coast, are unanimous in favor of this bill, particularly those of the Hood River section of my State. The people in that district last year shipped, I think, some 1,500 carloads of apples, using over 1,000,000 boxes.

All of the apple associations in the Hood River Valley are in favor of this bill. The same thing prevails over in the State of Washington and in the State of Idaho, and throughout the entire Pacific coast apple-growing section we find the growers and the shippers unanimously in favor of this legislation, and I trust that it will receive the approval of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will close in one speech.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman answer the question as to how he would mark this short box to comply with the pure-food law and comply with this law? I have heard no answer to it. Consequently I want to call your attention to the fact that I never heard—and I have attended all the meetings of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures—any demand for this bill, so far as I was able to determine. I think there is a demand on the Pacific coast, and that it is a manufactured demand. They have written communications to the other dealers asking them to assist.

Now, I want to call attention to the further fact that this bill will put a quarantine upon every small-box man. The small-box man can not sell unless he makes it short, unless the apple is matured. He can not sell unless it is free from dirt, unless it is free from insect pest, unless it is free from bruises and other defects.

Now, the way the grower of apples in the east and central part of the State shakes the apples down bruises them, and he wants to sell them in the box, and he can not do it if he complies with this statute, if it is made a statute, because it cuts him out of business. It quarantines him and destroys his ability to sell in a box. And why must you deprive him of doing so? If he wants to sell green apples or bruised apples, let him sell them. [Applause.] Why deprive him of the right to sell? But that is what this bill does.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] had an opportunity to bring this bill in on Calendar Wednesday, but he sidetracked it and did not bring it in because it would not stand debate. This bill ought to have time and ought to be well considered before it passes this body, on account of its great importance. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, Mr. S. L. Lupton, a member of the organization, appeared before the committee urging this legislation; Mr. R. H. Pennington, of Indiana, one of the largest fruit growers of the West, appeared before the committee urging this bill; Mr. R. F. French, of New York, representing an organization of over a thousand, appeared before the committee urging this bill, and every State organization of the West——

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I want to challenge that statement.

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield. Their testimony is in the hearings and is lying on my desk, and there has not been one dissenting vote. I want to read to this House a statement in regard to Colorado by the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association of America. Mr. Tidwell was here in Washington and took the matter up with the fruit growers of Colorado, and in a letter to me writes as follows:

I have communications from the principal growers' organizations in Colorado indorsing the apple-box bill, and I am just in receipt of a letter from the Grand Junction Fruit Growers' Association stating that they will mark their apples according to the bill, whether it passes or not, as they feel that this is the solution to the subject.

Full hearings were given to this bill. There has been no objection before the committee, even by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], except that he asked, If you put crab apples in a box, how are you going to count them? We struck that out in deference to him, and now he comes in and makes the pretension that it is a question of pure food in the counting of these apples. And this is the only opportunity we have had, because the gentleman himself objected to the bill being considered by the committee when it was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I ask the House to vote for this bill because of the passage of the Sulzer bill. The hearings show conclusively, by testimony from all these organizations, that that bill worked admirably. The one under consideration is drawn along the same lines, and I do not see why the Members of the House can not give the apple growers of the West, when they are joined by the East, this legislation which they say will be beneficial to their interests. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present some conference reports on pension bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman to wait until we get through with this apple-box bill.

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows how long that would take. It will take only a few minutes to dispose of these conference reports on pension bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that they are privileged, but can not the gentleman wait until we get through with this other bill?

Mr. MANN. There are long bills to be enrolled yet.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I think we ought to get these pension bills enrolled.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House of Representatives upon the said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I submit conference reports on the following Senate bills: S. 7597, S. 6981, S. 7212, and S. 7509, respectively, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and I ask that the respective accompanying statements be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] calls up certain conference reports and asks that the statements accompanying them be read in lieu of the reports. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first one.

The accompanying statement and report on the bill S. 7597 were read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1495).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7597) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 4, 5, 7, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 8.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert the sum "$17"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$12"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$12"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert the sum "$100"; and the House agree to the same.

JOHN A. KEY,
WILLIAM H. MURRAY,
SAM R. SELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7597) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, viz:

Amendment No. 1: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $17. This amount is fully justified by the proofs on file.

Amendment No. 2: Senate concurs. Proposed pension is not justified by the evidence.

Amendment No. 3: House recedes. Proposed pension is fully warranted by the proofs on file.

Amendment No. 4: Senate concurs. Proposed pension is justified by the proof on file.

Amendment No. 5: Senate concurs. A higher rate than that proposed is not justified by the evidence.

Amendment No. 6: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $12. This amount is fully justified by the proofs on file.

Amendment No. 7: Senate concurs. A higher rate is not warranted under the rules of the committees.

Amendment No. 8: House recedes. Proposed pension is fully justified by the proofs filed.

Amendment No. 9: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $12. The facts in this case fully justify proposed pension.

Amendment No. 10: Senate concurs. A higher rate is not warranted by the proofs.

Amendment No. 11: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $100. The proposed pension is fully justified by the soldier's long and honorable record, the present necessitous circumstances of his widow, and the many precedents established by Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the general deficiency bill, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the general deficiency bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

H. R. 21546. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. BARTLETT, and Mr. GILLETT.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next statement accompanying a conference report on a pension bill.

The statement accompanying the conference report on the bill S. 6981 was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1494).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6981) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 4, 9, and 13, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 11, and 12.

Amendment numbered 6: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$17"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$17"; and the House agree to the same.

JOHN A. KEY,
WILLIAM H. MURRAY,
SAM R. SELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6981) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, viz:

Amendment No. 1: House recedes. Proposed increase is fully justified by the evidence.

Amendment No. 2: House recedes. This pension is fully justified by the evidence.

Amendment No. 3: House recedes. The amount proposed is fully justified in accordance with the rules of the Senate committee.

Amendment No. 4: Senate concurs. The evidence on file does not warrant proposed pension.

Amendment No. 5: House recedes. Additional proofs filed justify this pension.

Amendment No. 6: Senate concurs in House amendment with an amendment allowing $17. This amount is fully justified by the proof.

Amendment No. 7: House recedes. Proposed pension is fully justified by the evidence on file.

Amendment No. 8: House recedes. Proposed pension is fully justified by the evidence on file.

Amendment No. 9: Senate concurs. The facts in this case are not deemed sufficient to warrant the allowance of proposed pension.

Amendment No. 10: Senate concurs in the House amendment with an amendment allowing $17. This is to comply with the rules of the House committee in similar cases.

Amendment No. 11: House recedes. Soldier's long and honorable service and his high rank fully justify the allowance of the proposed pension.

Amendment No. 12: House recedes. Soldier's helpless condition, which by additional evidence is shown to be of service origin, fully justifies the allowance of proposed increase.

Amendment No. 13: Senate concurs. A higher rate than that proposed by the amendment is not justified by the proofs.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The statement accompanying the conference report on the bill S. 7212 was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1493).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7212) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, and 18, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 12, 13, and 17.

Amendment numbered 6: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$24"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and in lieu of the sum proposed therein insert the sum "$12"; and the House agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

STANDARD APPLE BOX.

The SPEAKER. The question to be voted on is the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to suspend the rules and pass the standard apple-box bill (S. 4517). Those in favor thereof will say "aye"; those opposed will say "no."

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD and Mr. DILLON demanded a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes, 118; noes, 59.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative——

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the want of a quorum.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota that he call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Dakota insist upon his point of no quorum?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count,

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum, and ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. RAKER and Mr. DILLON to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 77.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-three Members present—a quorum. Two-thirds having failed to vote in the affirmative, the House refuses to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

SERVICES OF CERTAIN OFFICERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16510) to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army and Navy, late members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to extend to them the thanks of Congress, to authorize their promotion, and for other purposes, and I move to concur in the Senate amendment, with the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. The bill has to be laid before the House first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays the bill before the House. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to the following officers of the Army and Navy of the United States who, as members of the late Isthmian Canal Commission, have rendered distinguished service in constructing the Panama Canal, to wit, Col. George W. Goethals, chairman and chief engineer; Brig. Gen. William C. Gorgas, sanitary expert; Col. H. F. Hodges, Lieut. Col. William L. Sibert, and Commander H. H. Rousseau.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to advance in rank Col. George W. Goethals to the grade of major general of the line, United States Army; Brig. Gen. William C. Gorgas to the rank of major general in the Medical Department, United States Army; Col. H. F. Hodges and Lieut. Col. William L. Sibert to the grade of brigadier general of the line, United States Army; and Commander H. H. Rousseau to the grade of captain, United States Navy.

SEC. 3. That such officers of the Army and Navy as were detailed for duty with the Isthmian Canal Commission on the Isthmus of Panama for more than three years, and who shall not have been advanced in rank by any other provision of this bill, shall be advanced one grade in rank upon retirement: Provided, That any officer of the Army or Navy now on the retired list with similar service shall be immediately advanced one grade in rank on the retired list of the Army or Navy.

SEC. 4. That the President is further authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint such officers of the Public Health Service as were detailed for duty with the Isthmian Canal Commission on the Isthmus of Panama for more than three years to the grade next above that at present held by such officers.

SEC. 5. That the numbers in such grades provided for in sections 2 and 4 of this act, except where vacancies occurring in any grade by the provisions of this act can be filled by such officers in a lower grade as are entitled to the benefits of this act, shall be temporarily increased during the time such offices may be held: Provided, That the officer who may be advanced and appointed major general in the Medical Department, United States Army, shall thereupon become the head of such department, and the operation of so much of section 26 of the act of February 2, 1901, as limits the term of office of the head of the Medical Department, United States Army, shall be suspended during the incumbency of the head of the department who may be appointed under this act: Provided, That whenever the head of the Medical Department appointed under the provisions of this act shall become separated from the active list of the Army, by retirement or otherwise, the extra office or grade to which he shall have been so advanced or appointed shall cease and determine, and thereafter the rank of the head of the Medical Department, United States Army, shall be that of a brigadier general: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall operate to interfere with or retard the promotion to which any officer would be entitled under existing law: And provided further, That the officers advanced to higher grades under this act shall be junior to the officers who now rank them under existing law when these officers have reached the same grade.

SEC. 6. That at any time after the passage of this act any officer of the Army or Navy to be benefited by the provisions of this act may, on his own application, be retired by the President at 75 per cent of the pay of the rank upon which he is retired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 5, by striking out the word "captain" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "rear admiral of the lower nine."

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman where that comes in? There is no page 4, line 5, of the Senate amendment.

Mr. DENT. It is on page 4, line 5, of the print that I have.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would suggest that it is in the next to the last line of section 2 of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment ought to come in on page 2, line 5, of the print of the Senate amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I offer it at that point.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment with the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATOR OF WILLIAM J. LANDRAM, DECEASED.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18038) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Louis Landram, administrator of William J. Landram, deceased.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11694) providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Binghamton, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site for a public building in the city of Binghamton, N. Y., for the use and accommodation of the post office, courts, and other governmental offices at a limit of cost for the said site not to exceed $100,000.

And the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to sell, at such time and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, the present Federal building and the site thereof at Binghamton, N. Y., and convey the last-mentioned property to the purchaser thereof by the usual quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds derived from such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt, such sale to be made after the completion and occupancy of said new building.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] as tellers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will withdraw his objection. I demanded a second in order that we might have an explanation as to the emergency that requires the passage of this particular bill.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws his objection. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] 20 minutes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds about a week ago. I will state for the information of the House that one year ago there was a fire in the Federal building at Binghamton, N. Y., which partially destroyed it. Since that time the business of the post office has been largely conducted in a garage across the street, poorly lighted, poorly ventilated, and poorly heated. The old post office in Binghamton was constructed about 30 years ago, and the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department have made careful investigation and have decided that it is absolutely useless to repair the old building. The United States court, which was formerly held in Binghamton, which was in the southern part of the State, is required to be held in Watertown, in the northern part.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was this a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. It was.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was deemed by the committee to be an emergency matter?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, that is true; and it was recommended by the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Is it not a fact that the matter was reported out by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with the understanding that the passage of the bill should not be pressed at this session of Congress?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I do not know of any such understanding. I know the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds came and asked me to present the bill at this time, and I did so.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not certain that I was at the committee meeting when this action was taken, but my understanding was that the bill was reported out with the understanding that the passage should not be pressed at this session.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds here, but Mr. BURNETT, the ranking member, is present, and I yield five minutes to him.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from New York is as understood by the committee. The destruction of that property by fire a year ago absolutely gutted the building and made it, I believe, totally untenantable, and, as he says, the post office is now occupying a garage.

The committee believed that some immediate action should be taken, and they were inspired by a report from the Treasury Department that some steps should be taken for the procurement of a site in order that work might be commenced as speedily as possible. If we had waited until next winter, when possibly an omnibus public buildings bill could be brought in, they would have to wait another year, even for the procurement of a site. The conditions were such that the committee thought it was an emergency case, probably as much so as any bill reported during the session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman to bring his bill to a vote, because I think we can pass it. There is another little matter to attend to, and then I think we can take a recess and go home.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this statement. My motive in asking for a second was in order that there might be some explanation of the bill and of the emergency character of it. I knew personally nothing about it, and I desired some information before passing the bill. The gentleman from New York and all other gentlemen recognize what trouble it would bring to Members of the House to permit a public-building bill to go through under such circumstances as this without some explanation. I am entirely satisfied, so far as I am concerned, with the explanation given by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Alabama, and I do not care to use any more of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill H. R. 4545, with a Senate amendment, be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill H. R. 4545, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16642. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Vineland, N. J.

RECLAMATION SERVICE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House joint resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 438.

Resolved, etc., That until the meeting of the Sixty-fourth Congress those members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, who are Members elect to the Sixty-fourth Congress, are authorized to conduct hearings at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere concerning the work of the Reclamation Service and estimates for the various projects of that service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, submitted a report that the files and papers described in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury in House Document No. 1528, Sixty-third Congress, third session, dated January 22, 1915, and in the report of the Secretary of the Navy in House Document No. 1612, Sixty-third Congress, third session, dated February 16, 1915, and in the report of the Postmaster General in House Document No. 1615, Sixty-third Congress, third session, dated February 18, 1915, were not needed in the transaction of the current business of such departments and have no permanent value or historical interest, which report (No. 1486) was ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until to-morrow morning at 10.30 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not to-night. Mr. Speaker, I made the motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARLIN. I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 3, 1915, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ABERCROMBIE, from the Committee on Education, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15470) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1487), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTLETT (by request): A bill (H. R. 21589) to erect a summer home for the President of the United States at Mount Dome, Randle Highlands, D. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 3, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

S. 4180. An act to validate title to certain town sites in the State of Montana;

S. 7188. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Garden City, Kans.; and

S. J. Res. 191. Joint resolution to convey appreciation of Congress to their excellencies Señor Domicio da Gama, Señor Rómulo S. Naón, and Señor Eduardo Suárez for their generous and distinguished services as mediators in the controversy between the Government of the United States and the leaders of the warring parties in Mexico.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5495) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe, disagreed to by the Senate, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. HARDY, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, and Mr. HINDS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 438) concerning estimates and expenditures for the Reclamation Service, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 16642. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Vineland, N. J.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 6 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 23d day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the Capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 24th day of Feoruary, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.]

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.
By S. A. KOZER, Deputy.

STATE OF OREGON,
TWENTY-EIGHTH LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
SENATE CHAMBER.

Senate joint memorial No. 6.

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation designed to encourage the development of the water-power resources of the West; and

Whereas it is contemplated by such legislation that the interest and control of each State in the water power which may be developed, under the provisions of such legislation, shall in some particulars be no more than one-half, the other one-half accruing to or resting in the Government of the United States; and

Whereas in other particulars said legislation would give to the Government of the United States a preferential reversionary interest in water powers developed thereunder: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That it is now wise and opportune for the State of Oregon and the whole people thereof, through their legislative assembly, respectfully to assert for the guidance of their Senators and Representatives in Congress and for the information of the Congress of the United States, the following principles as just and equitable in the premises:

That the title to the beds of all nonnavigable streams and the water powers within their banks now unappropriated and as yet not alienated by the State of Oregon and the title to the beds of all navigable streams within the State of Oregon and the water power within their banks (subject only to the rights of commerce) is vested exclusively in the State of Oregon and the whole people thereof.

That the unappropriated or reserved or withdrawn Government lands on the banks of said streams wherein water power is available, while necessary to the development of said power, are in no case of value equal to the value of the water power within said banks and owned by the State of Oregon.

That the State of Oregon does not concede that the proportionate value of said water power to the value of said lands necessary to its development is less than the ratio of fifty to one.

That under such conditions it is to the benefit of public policy that the Government of the United States relinquish to the States its title to lands needed for water-power development, under such terms as will safeguard the public from monopolistic or speculative control.

That of importance equal to the water-power development is the creation of hydroelectric markets now interfered with by burdensome restrictions on the settlement of public lands and on the utilization of mineral and timber products, extending in Oregon alone over tracts equal to nearly 60 per cent of the area of the State; and be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of declaring in more specific detail the principles which the water-power and public-land States of the West deem a just and equitable basis for developing their resources, the Legislature of the State of Oregon does hereby invite each of the governors of the States of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, California, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, South Dakota, and North Dakota and five delegates, to be appointed by the legislatures of the said States, to meet with five delegates, to be elected by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, in conference at Portland, Oreg., in summer or fall of the year 1915; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor be selected as chairman of the Oregon delegation, and that the senate select two delegates and the house two delegates, provided that in those States where the legislature will not convene before the time of conference, the governor be requested to appoint the delegates, and that the governor of the State of Oregon appoint the time for such conference in accordance with the desires of the several States herein mentioned; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Oregon Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the governor of each State invited to the water-power conference herein provided for transmission to the legislature of his State.

Adopted by the house February 20, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 20, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) Senate joint memorial No. 6. Introduced by committee on federal relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents: That the several Indian reservations in the State of Arizona now embrace large areas of mineral land, which under present regulations are not open to location as mineral claims, and are valueless as tillable or agricultural land; and

Whereas the opening of these mineral lands in these aforesaid reservations to entry as mineral claims by prospectors, miners, and legitimate mining companies will hasten the development of the State and, at the same time, give employment to the Indians on big reservations in road building and other departments of work, and make them more self-supporting; and

Whereas the opening of these claims to mining will develop water in many heretofore arid portions of the State and improve the value of said lands for grazing, to which they are now allotted: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, That the Congress of the United States is hereby petitioned and urged to enact such legislation as may be necessary to open to entry and location the mineral lands embraced within the confines of these aforesaid Indian reservations by bona fide prospectors and miners, subject to the same regulations governing mineral lands on other public domain: Provided, however, That this petition shall not be so construed as to permit any person, company, or corporation to enter in or upon large tracts of land in these reservations for any purpose other than mining as hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That no land other than mineral lands, as defined in the mineral laws of the United States pertaining thereto, shall be included within the provisions of this petition; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and the Representatives of Arizona in Congress; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

Passed the house February 19, 1905, by a vote of 30 ayes, 1 no, — absent, 4 excused.

WM. E. BROOKS,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the senate February 25, 1915, by a vote of 19 ayes, — noes, — absent, — excused.

W. P. SIMS,
President.

OSCAR COLE,
Secretary.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota concerning agricultural extension work, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within resolution, to wit, house joint resolution No. 5, was duly passed by the 1915 session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, and that the same is now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, this 18th day of February, 1915.

[SEAL.]

FRANK M. ROOD, Secretary of State.

A joint resolution to accept the provisions and benefits of the Smith-Lever Act of Congress, approved by the President May 8, 1914.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota: SECTION 1—

Whereas the Congress of the United States has passed an act approved by the President May 8, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for cooperative extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture"; and

Whereas it is provided in section 3 of the act aforesaid that the grants of money authorized by said act shall be paid "to each State which shall by action of its legislature assent to the provisions of this act": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the assent of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota be and is hereby, given to the provisions and requirements of said act, and that the State treasurer of the State of South Dakota be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to receive the grants of money appropriated under said act, which agricultural extension work shall be carried on in connection with the State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts in accordance with the terms and conditions expressed in the act of Congress aforesaid.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, relating to a bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain, S. Dak., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within resolution, to wit, house joint resolution No. 6, was duly passed by the 1915 session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, and that the same is now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, this 15th day of February, 1915.

[SEAL.]

FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution memorializing Congress and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Chamberlain.

Whereas about the year 1905 the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., as the parent corporation of the White River Valley Railway Co., entered upon the construction of a line of railway commencing at the east bank of the Missouri River, at the city of Chamberlain, and extending westward through Lyman, Stanley, and Pennington Counties to the city of Rapid City, and as a part of said line of railway constructed a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and

Whereas the said Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. has taken over the property of the White River Valley Railway Co., including the pontoon or pile bridge at Chamberlain, but has never constructed a permanent railroad bridge; and

Whereas the said pontoon or pile bridge goes out at least from one to four times each year, when there is any unusual condition of the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and

Whereas said pontoon or pile bridge is unsafe and dangerous to the traveling public, and by reason of the maintenance of said bridge in its unsafe condition a railway train, either passenger or freight, is liable at any time to be precipitated in the Missouri River, especially during the early spring of the year, when the ice is going out and during the June rise, and in the fall of the year and when the ice is formed or floating in said river it is impossible to operate the draw in said bridge; and the maintenance of said bridge by the said railway company is inimical and dangerous to the public health and safety of the traveling public generally, as well as to shippers; and

Whereas by reason of the fact that all traffic to points west of the Missouri River when said bridge is out or the draw open must be sent via the lines of the Chicago Northwestern Railway Co. via Wolsey and Rapid City to consignees between Chamberlain and Rapid City and passengers, mail, express, and freight are thereby greatly delayed and the development of said country deterred and the business interests of the people located between Chamberlain and Rapid City jeopardized: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Congress of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, urged to use all honorable and lawful means at their command to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to erect at the earliest possible date a good, safe, permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Secretary of War.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21009) to make Van Buren, Me., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1063) thereon.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment:

H. R. 13470. An act for the relief of James Grady (S. Rept. 1071); and

H. R. 17464. An act for the relief of Fred Graff (S. Rept. 1070).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7748) granting an increase of pension to William H. Lewis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 7749) granting a pension to Joseph Wessler (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 7750) granting an increase of pension to Annie Humphreys (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7751) granting a pension to Mary J. McLaughlin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

ENFORCEMENT OF NEUTRALITY LAWS.

Mr. KERN. I have a joint resolution here touching a matter of importance about which there is some urgency. I should like to introduce it by unanimous consent and have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and also to have it printed and that it be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator what the joint resolution relates to.

Mr. KERN. It gives the President certain powers in regard to the enforcement of the neutrality laws. I submitted it to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and he thinks it would be well to have it enacted into law. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 244) was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 244) to empower the President to better enforce and maintain the neutrality of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That from and after the passage of this resolution and during the existence of a war to which the United States is not a party, and in order to prevent the neutrality of the United States from being violated by the use of its territory, its ports, or its territorial waters as the base of operations for the armed forces of a belligerent, contrary to the obligations imposed by the law of nations, the treaties to which the United States is a party, or contrary to the statutes of the United States, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to direct the collectors of customs under the jurisdiction of the United States to withhold clearance from any vessel of American register, or license, which he has reasonable cause to believe to be about to carry fuel, arms, ammunition, men, or supplies to any warship, or tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation, or to commit any other similar act in aid of the prosecution of hostilities in violation of the obligations of the United States as a neutral nation.

That, further, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to direct the collector to give clearance to any such vessel of American register or license: Provided, That before clearing out the same the owners or master or other person or persons having charge or command thereof give bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in double the amount of the value of the vessel and cargo on board, conditioned that the vessel shall not be employed in the commission of such act or acts; and in case of a breach of the condition thereof the bond shall be forfeited to the United States, and the owner or master or other person or persons having charge or command of any such vessel shall, in addition, be severally liable to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both; and in case any such vessel of American register or license shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States without clearance in pursuance of such act or acts above set forth, the owner or master or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel shall severally be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, and, in addition, such vessel shall be forfeited to the United States.

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to direct the collectors of customs or other appropriate authorities to accord the treatment of a vessel of a belligerent, including internment, to any vessel of foreign register in, or hereafter arriving in, a port or any territorial waters of the United States, when such vessel is acting, or preparing to act, or attempting to act, or intending upon departure from the jurisdiction of the United States to act as a tender to the armed forces of a belligerent, or otherwise to act in aid of the prosecution of hostilities.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

That the provisions of this resolution shall be deemed to extend to all lands and water, continental or insular, and to all air spaces that fall within the jurisdiction of the United States.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 166).

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill 20975, the naval appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the report before the Senate.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 19, 29, 30, 37, 43, 46, 56, 58, 65, 66, 67, 71.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 41, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 59, 61, 62, 63, 72, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33 is transferred to page 26 of the bill and inserted as a separate paragraph after line 22; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 1 of said amendment, down to and including the words "Provided further," in line 8 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the word "toward" and in lieu thereof insert "for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out "docks," also in line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "toward" and insert "for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 13 of Senate engrossed amendments, line 8, strike out the word "lieutenant"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Page 16 of Senate engrossed amendments, line 6, after the word "sixteen," insert "or," and after the word "twenty" strike out the comma and the words "or twenty-four"; same page, line 20, after the word "served," strike out the words "more than," and after the word "eight" insert "or more"; same page, line 22, after the word "served," strike out the words "more than," and after the word "twelve" insert "or more"; page 17 of Senate engrossed amendments, line 5, strike out the word "twelve"; same page, line 7, strike out the word "one-fourth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That hereafter the commander in chief of the United States Atlantic Fleet, the commander in chief of the United States Pacific Fleet, and the commander in chief of the Asiatic Fleet, respectively, shall each, after being designated as such commander in chief by the President, and from the date of assuming command of such fleet until his relinquishment of such command, have the rank and pay of an admiral; and in each of the above-named fleets the officer serving as second in command thereof shall each, after being designated as such second in command by the President, and from the date of assuming duty as such second in command until his relinquishment of such duty, have the rank and pay of a vice admiral; and the grades of admiral and vice admiral in the Navy are hereby reestablished and authorized for the purposes of this section. The annual pay of an admiral shall be $10,000, and of a vice admiral $9,000: Provided, That in time of peace officers to serve as commander in chief and as second in command of the three said fleets shall be designated from among the rear admirals on the active list of the Navy: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall create any vacancy in any grade in the Navy nor increase the total number of officers allowed by existing law, and that when an officer is detached from duty as such commander in chief or as such second in command, as above provided, he shall return to his regular rank in the list of rear admirals and shall thereafter receive only the pay and allowances of such regular rank."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 2 and 3 of said amendment strike out the words "transporting coal" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Transportation of fuel between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "five" in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert "two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$6,820,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$4,090,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$19,275,998" and in lieu thereof insert "$18,957,998." Strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 1 of said amendment, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the committee appointed by the act of June 30, 1914 (Public, No. 121), is hereby continued to the regular session of Congress convening in December, 1915, for the purpose of making such further investigation and report as may be deemed advisable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$49,976,801" and in lieu thereof insert "$45,053,801"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to submit to the next regular session of Congress a report on building four warships of the type, power, and speed which, in his judgment based on the knowledge gained from the prevailing war in Europe, are best suited for war on the sea; also to report, in the light of that war, the value and uses in naval warfare of aeroplanes, dirigibles, balloons, and submarines."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask the Senator about certain amendments of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall be very glad to give the Senator the information.

Mr. LODGE. What became of the amendment on page 3 in regard to Chief of Naval Operations? It is almost impossible to follow the amendments as numbered.

Mr. SWANSON. It remains as agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely as we put it?

Mr. SWANSON. There was no change made in that item.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the Senate amendment, making the sum appropriated for aeronautics $1,000,000 instead of $500,000, was agreed to by the House.

Mr. SWANSON. That is continued at $1,000,000, as agreed upon in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The advisory committee?

Mr. SWANSON. That is continued. No; that is continued, but it was increased two civilians.

Mr. LODGE. Increased from the Senate provision?

Mr. SWANSON. We provided for 10. The number was increased to 12.

Mr. LODGE. Otherwise it remains the same?

Mr. SWANSON. It remains the same.

Mr. LODGE. On page 18, the amendment striking out the limitation on the appropriation for projectiles?

Mr. SWANSON. The House recedes on that and that is continued as it was agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. It goes out?

Mr. SWANSON. It goes out.

Mr. LODGE. What became of the amendment on page 20—a plant for the manufacture of projectiles?

Mr. SWANSON. That was eliminated. The Senate conferees receded.

Mr. LODGE. Was the reappropriation the Senate put in on page 25 for the barracks at Norfolk and at Mare Island retained?

Mr. SWANSON. The House receded.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that what is known as the plucking-board provision remains as it came from the House.

Mr. SWANSON. It remains precisely as it came from the House. The Senate had abolished it and the House abolished it.

Mr. LODGE. They abolished the plucking board and put nothing in its place.

Mr. SWANSON. Nothing in its place. I will state that we endeavored to substitute something, but the Members of the House contemplate passing a personnel bill early in the next session, and it was thought on all sides it would be wise to let it go over than to try to settle it now.

Mr. LODGE. Did the House accept the amendment which we substituted on, as I recall it, page 31, striking out the provision about the Marine Corps?

Mr. SWANSON. What number?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know the number of the amendment. It is on page 31, striking out the provision that was there about the Marine Corps covering a single case, and we put in that case by name.

Mr. SWANSON. The House agreed to the Senate amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The dental amendment went out altogether?

Mr. SWANSON. That was eliminated entirely. The House insisted on that going out.

Mr. LODGE. What became of the Naval Reserve amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. The Naval Reserve is continued as the House had it, with a slight modification.

Mr. LODGE. The House had nothing about the Naval Reserve. We put it in.

Mr. SWANSON. I mean that it is continued as it was in the Senate amendment, except that the terms were made 16 and 20.

Mr. LODGE. It has gone in substantially as it came from the department?

Mr. SWANSON. That was the only change made in the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment at the bottom of page 47, in regard to naval constructors, in the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. SWANSON. The House accepted that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. On page 49, the radio station?

Mr. SWANSON. The House accepted that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. On page 55, about gunnery sergeants in the Marine Corps?

Mr. SWANSON. That is amendment No. 51.

Mr. LODGE. On page 55, increasing the number of gunnery sergeants in the Marine Corps?

Mr. SWANSON. The House accepted our amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Now, as to the organization for the Navy, I understand we have six torpedo-boat destroyers and two seagoing submarines instead of five that the Senate put in.

Mr. SWANSON. The House had one, the Senate five, and the conference committee reports two seagoing.

Mr. LODGE. They accepted our increase from 11 to 16?

Mr. SWANSON. From 11 to 16 for the coast submarines.

Mr. LODGE. And the gunboat provision?

Mr. SWANSON. The gunboat provision goes out. The Senate conferees receded on that.

Mr. LODGE. And the hospital ship?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senate conferees receded.

Mr. LODGE. What became of the armor-plate factory, at page 65?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senate conferees receded from that, and it was eliminated from the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to know just what has been done, and I am bound to say that I think the conferees have done extremely well with the Senate amendments. I think we have on the whole a very good bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I am glad the Senator is satisfied with it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, there are some matters in this report about which I wish to say a word.

Mr. LODGE. There is one other amendment I meant to ask about and that I forgot. What was done in regard to what is known as the Taylor system?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senate conferees receded on that.

Mr. LODGE. And left it as the House provided?

Mr. SWANSON. As the House passed it. I will say, in this connection, that the conference committee agreed that they would be controlled by a vote of the House, and it was taken and the House insisted on it. They took a vote on that provision in the Army bill, and the House insisted by a vote of 120-odd, I think it was, to 20. The Senate conferees then felt that they should recede on that in order to enable the bill to be passed. It has to be enrolled and signed some time to-day.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the last question of the Senator from Massachusetts was addressed to one of the matters about which I wish to make an observation.

The two things in this bill as it stands under the conference report to which I refer are the abolition of the so-called "plucking board" and the surrender to the new legislation in regard to the efficiency system—the so-called Taylor system.

As to the "plucking board" I shall not make any effort to change the action of the Senate upon that subject, because I know that it would be futile; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the real nature of the action which they have now approved. I feel the more justified in taking a little of the time of the Senate upon that because of the observation of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] as to future legislation following the abolition of the plucking board.

It is true, Mr. President, that the step which the conference report now proposes to take leaves the condition of the law in regard to the tenure of office in the Navy in a very unfortunate position. It is not the way in which we ought to legislate; it is not the way in which we would legislate if we had the full opportunity that we ought to have, unconstrained by the insensate attempt to force the ship-purchase bill through the Senate.

There are three, and only three, possible courses to follow in regard to the officers of the Navy. Either the body of officers of the Navy must hold their positions under a system of promotion by seniority alone, or they must hold their positions under a system of either entire or partial promotion by selection; that is to say, a system under which the President in making appointments, either with or without the advice and consent of the Senate, selects in accordance with merit; or, thirdly, they must hold their positions under a system by which the least meritorious or the less meritorious are from year to year dropped out of the higher positions, allowing a flow of promotions to fill the vacancies thus made.

You must have either one of the three or you may have combinations of them. Every one has its inconveniences, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who I am glad to see here, will recognize the fact that what I say applies equally to the Army. Either one of these methods has its inconveniences and its shortcomings.

The system of promotion by selection results in bitterness, in hard feeling, in a sense of injustice. When an officer of lower rank is selected for promotion and jumped over a long list of his associates they all feel that injustice has been done to them. It is not in human nature that they should not feel so. Their friends feel so. There is accordingly a diminution of the right kind of spirit which should characterize the service. We have the system of promotion by selection in the Army above the rank of colonel, and the many years of observation of the application of that system has shown me that there never is a case of the selection of a junior officer, however meritorious, to be promoted over the men who rank him, without the existence of that sense of injustice.

The application of this system of creating a flow of promotions by elimination, which we call the plucking system, equally results in the sense of injustice wherever an officer has been dropped out.

The third method is the method of promotion by seniority only. It is impossible that under the method of promotion by seniority only we should avoid having a large number of our ships under the command of officers who no longer have the youth, the strength, the initiative, the capacity to render efficient service in command. It is true in the Army that promotion by seniority alone inevitably brings to the top a large proportion of men who are no longer competent to render the service for which we are maintaining these great establishments and expending these millions upon them. The action which is now proposed to be taken in abolishing a system creating a flow of promotion under which younger men may come up by means of eliminating the less valuable officers—the action we are now taking in destroying that system without substituting any other system for it, leads us to the dead level of promotion solely by seniority; and under that system which is now being created and to which our Navy is being led in the legislation which is before us at this moment we might as well throw into the sea the millions of dollars that we are expending upon the Navy, for we are as certain as the sunrise to-morrow, under this system of promotion by seniority alone, to have some of our great battleships, for which we are providing, under the command of men who are no longer competent to command them and use them.

If there ever was an example of a failure on the part of a legislative body to do its full duty to the country it represents, you find it here in what is being done in this naval bill by cutting out the system of promotion by elimination and substituting nothing for it.

It is too late to do here what we ought to do; it is too late to do our duty; we have been kept here day and night discussing and wearing out the strength of everybody over an ill-conceived, half-baked, foolish attempt to put the Government into the shipping business, and we are neglecting our plain duty as legislators.

We are appropriating money by the hundreds of millions of dollars to build ships and maintain a Navy, and we are acting like a lot of incompetent schoolboys when we come to deal with the personnel that alone can make that Navy worth anything. I hope that at the very first opportunity the Congress will take up the subject of the personnel of the Navy and put something practicable and sensible in the place of what is left through the adoption of the present provision.

Mr. President, on the other subject, that is the recession of the Senate from the conclusion that it reached to strike out the new legislation prohibiting the employment of the so-called Taylor system in the manufactories of the Navy and the natural result of the same conclusion regarding the manufactories in the Army, I do not know anything, sir, that can better illustrate the first and most obvious reason why the Government of the United States should not go into the business of public ownership and operation of ships of foreign commerce and of internal commerce than this piece of legislation.

We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars upon the Army and Navy; we are building up great manufactories; we have great arsenals for the Army at Rock Island, at Watervliet, at Watertown, at Frankford, and at many other places, and great arsenals and manufactories for the Navy. We put officers, the most skillful men we can find, in charge of those manufactories. We charge them with the duty of expending the scores of millions of the public money which is placed in their hands to manufacture material for the Army and the Navy in the most effective manner possible; and as soon as we find that they have established a method by which they can increase the efficiency of the forces of men whom they employ, as soon as we find that they have a system which stimulates industry and action and effort and rewards ambition and energy and promotes a desire on the part of their workmen to get on, a system with which the workmen equally with the officers are satisfied, on the demand of an outside labor organization we deliberately interfere with our officers in the expenditure of the public moneys and in the discharge of the trust which we equally with them rest under. On the demand of an outside labor organization, because we are afraid of them because they have votes, we prohibit our officers from conducting the business which we put into their hands on the principles that every well-conducted private enterprise in the country applies.

Now, sir, for my own part I repudiate any such method of controlling the expenditure of the public funds and the conduct of public business. I am against it, and I am going to vote against it, but I shall not detain the Senate any further.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the receding by the conference committee from the position taken by the Senate on this efficiency provision is a great disappointment to me. It was abso-intely unnecessary to put any provision of this kind in the bill, because, as I have been informed since the bill passed the Senate, the Taylor system is not in operation in any of the departments of the Navy. It is a mere expression against the system when it is neither in operation in the navy yards or naval establishments; and, so far as I have been able to learn, neither is there any present intention of putting it into operation. The reason why I am disappointed is that I understand an understanding has been arrived at between the Naval and Military Committees that whatever is done with regard to this provision in this bill will be done in the Army bill; and the result of the adoption of the provision in the Army bill will simply be that between 400 and 500 employees of one of the arsenals will have their wages reduced very materially, while in the only arsenal in which the stop watch is now used it will not stop its use.

The only Government arsenal which now uses what is known as the stop-watch system is the Watertown Arsenal, and the Watertown Arsenal does not use any of the money appropriated in the Army appropriation bill. The money used at Watertown comes from the fortifications bill, which contains no such prohibition as the Army bill, and which is already in the hands of the President for signature. So that in legislating against the stop watch they do not stop the stop watch, but they do cut off the system of bonuses which is in successful operation in the Frankford Arsenal, and with which the employees of the arsenal are more than satisfied.

Mr. President, after speaking with a Member of the House last night I believe that the House would be satisfied with a prohibition in this bill and in the Army bill against the use of the stop watch, still allowing the bonus and premium system to be continued; and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will ask the Senate to adhere to its action, with a view to making such a compromise in a new conference.

I do not like to leave this contest and to think of the condition in which it will leave the employees of the only arsenal within the borders of my own State. I know that they are satisfied with it, and I know that they want it continued; and I hope the Senator will allow this matter to go to a new conference, with a view to prohibiting only the use of the stop watch and allowing the last half of the provision to stand.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I am going to move that this report be recommitted to the conferees with instructions to insist upon Senate amendment No. 71. The subject matter of that amendment was taken under consideration when this appropriation bill was in the Senate, and was quite exhaustively discussed. The discussion which occurred upon it occupied something over 20 pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 21 and 23. Several votes were had upon different sections of the principle involved in this amendment, and on every vote the position which the Senate has now receded from was maintained by the vote of this body.

It seems to me particularly noticeable and unwise, in view of that situation, that the conferees of this body have agreed to abandon the whole of the principles that are embraced in the matter to which that amendment refers. It is particularly so because the matter with which those amendments are connected is one of very great importance to this body and to all the industries of the United States.

What is at the base of the attempt to eradicate the Taylor system from the factories of the Government is the desire to do away with any opportunity on the part of the labor that is employed in those factories to obtain any reward for superior efficiency. The reason the attempt is made to take it out of these factories is because it is hoped that the Government having established that principle for itself, the same principle will be gradually extended to all the private industries of the country.

A very suggestive remark was made in the course of that debate by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], when at one point of it he was asked whether he was opposed to the piecework system, and he said that he was not, but a very few minutes later on he said: "I am opposed to the piecework system of payment."

What is involved in the bonus system and what is involved in the piecework system is practically the same thing; that is, a method by which efficiency on the part of labor is enabled to get a reward over the labor that is inefficient. Sometimes it is paid by a bonus given over a fixed standard of wage that applies to all, a bonus that is given for superior work, for sobriety, for intelligence, for diligence. Sometimes it is paid in the form of what is known as the piecework system, where the compensation which the laborer receives is absolutely graded in accordance with the quality and quantity of the work which he produces.

I do not at this time want to discuss this matter exhaustively; but a few minutes ago, when I listened to the senior Senator from New York in almost the last address that he will make to this body, just at the moment when he is about to withdraw from us the inspiration which we have received from listening to his words on so many occasions, it seemed to me extremely appropriate that almost the last subject he should discuss in this body should be the subject of efficiency, for he is himself the greatest example of efficiency with which I have ever come in contact. I venture to say that if the same principle had been applied to the activities in which Mr. ROOT has been engaged as it is proposed to apply to the labor of this country, if there had been applied to those occupations a system by which skill and intelligence was not allowed to rise above the dead level, we never would have known what it was to have had him among us in this body, and we would not have realized the benefit that we have realized from his association with us. I think there is no more wisdom in saying to the laborer that he must not receive additional pay for superior efficiency than there would be in saying the same thing to the lawyer or the doctor or the merchant.

I move that the conference report be recommitted to the conferees, with instructions to insist upon amendment No. 71.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I hope the motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island will prevail. I am well aware of the difficulties encountered in coming to an agreement in conference over a great bill like the Navy bill—one which will satisfy both the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House. It is next to impossible to do it, and I want to congratulate the conferees in this case in having eliminated much that was bad in the bill, in my judgment, and having retained important features and improved the bill in many details. There are, however, two actions which have been taken for which, in my judgment, there was no justification whatever; one will affect the Navy personnel injuriously, and the other will do an injustice not only to efficiency generally but to efficiency in the manufacturing connected with naval equipment and to labor employed in connection with that manufacturing.

These questions have been referred to with great clearness by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], but I want to add a word along the same general lines.

We can build equipment for the Navy in accordance with the general judgment of Congress, following the advice of our Navy experts, because there is no personal equation which enters into that general proposition. It is not difficult for us to agree on building a certain number of battleships, a certain number of ships of minor importance, or auxiliaries for the service; but when we come to deal with the condition of the personnel of the Navy we are dealing with something that is going to make that equipment effective and valuable, or we are going to make it absolutely ineffective and valueless. The conferees have agreed to do, in my judgment, something which will affect the Navy personnel more than any minor change which has been made since I have been a Member of Congress.

I remember very well when the "plucking board" was authorized. It was not established—and I wish Senators would give this point careful consideration—primarily for the purpose of selecting doubtful men out of the service, but because our officers arrived at command and flag rank at a greater age than those which obtain in other services, at an age which ordinarily prevented the best efficiency in the results which they could give the country. Incidentally, of course, in selecting these men out, those who have been supposed to be less efficient, either on account of the state of their health or on account of their professional accomplishments or because of some accident—all such reasons have been taken into consideration. The plucking boards themselves, almost without exception, have been composed of rear admirals in the active service who have distinguished themselves in their vocation, who have been and are in immediate touch with the personnel of the Navy, and they have taken their oaths to select out those men whose selection would bring about the best results in the service from every standpoint. Generally speaking, I may say that forty-nine times out of fifty there is general agreement that they have performed their work wisely and well.

As I said the other night, I am sorry for the men who are selected out. I could wish other things for them personally; but we can not properly allow our sentiment and our personal feelings to govern us in a matter which is of vital importance to the Nation. If we are going to discontinue the plucking board, it is the duty of Congress to substitute for it something which will be better. I am not enamored of that particular plan, but I am in favor of any law which will carry out the general purposes which were intended in that act, and I insist that we will be acting unwisely unless we substitute for the plucking board something which will give better results before we discontinue the provisions of that act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think this can be done at the next session of Congress more appropriately than it can be done now. I ask that for this reason: In one of the amendments proposed by the committee, and placed in the bill in the Senate, one of the members of the last plucking board found himself outside of any hope of preferment if that provision had been given effect. It seems to me that we who desire to do so have registered our disapproval of the plucking board as the best system that could be devised, and that at the coming session of Congress we can take up the matter with a view to putting in its place something that will be practical and fair and just, and insure the highest degree of efficiency in the Navy. Is not that the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am quite in agreement with the Senator from Michigan in believing that new legislation to replace the plucking board can be prepared with better results during the next session of Congress. We have been kept here in session for the past month wasting our time on a bill which substantially nobody wanted, wasting the time of Congress which should have been devoted to a careful scrutiny of the billion dollars which we are appropriating for the maintenance of the Government, so now it is unwise to put general legislation into appropriation bills under such conditions. But until we are prepared to substitute something better than the plucking board we should retain that on the statute books and prepare the something better when we have time for deliberation.

That is all I want to say on that subject. Now, as to the other question. I do not care personally anything about the Taylor system. I do not care about any particular system; but I am a believer in efficiency in the Navy manufacturing as well as in the everyday affairs of life. Members of this administration are traveling about the country criticizing manufacturers and other business men because they have not adopted efficient methods in their business. We all know our commercial rivals, in many respects, have excelled us in the efficiency with which they have been able to produce results, and yet the one efficiency item in connection with manufacturing for the military or naval service is the one that is attacked in this bill; it is to be discontinued, I understand, in both the Army and Navy bills, and I want to register my protest against that action.

I do not wish men to work more hours or work harder than an average man should. I do not wish them driven to the limit of their capacity, which would be beyond the capacity of some men, but I want a standard of efficiency established, and that is all there is in the stop-watch method that has been so much criticized. It is not a question of timing a man to see how much work he can do as much as it is a question of timing a man to see how many motions he makes in carrying on that work which can be eliminated in the operation. For instance, if a man had a lathe in front of him and picked up his material from his right hand and pushed it into the lathe with one motion, he would accomplish very much more than he would if he turned and picked up the raw material and then had to turn back and put it in the lathe. It is to eliminate waste motion that the stop watch has been used, not to find out how much the best man can do and then require other men to do the same thing.

Mr. President, if the men in the Watertown Arsenal, in Massachusetts, six hundred and sixty-odd, could go into a booth and cast an Australian ballot in favor of or against the Taylor efficiency system which has been established there, I believe that three-fourths of them at least would be in favor of it. Thousands and thousands of dollars are paid for added results obtained under its operations. The other day the Chief of Ordnance, unwisely I think, suspended the system while the House was considering what action should be taken by that body. The day he suspended the system a man had been given an order to make 132 screw-driver blades. He worked 5 hours that day on the order and made 80 blades in the 5 hours, or 16 blades an hour. The next day when he undertook the completion of the order, and the following day he made the other 52 blades in 13 hours, or an average of 4 an hour.

This may be an extreme case; I do not know what the conditions were surrounding it; but while I say that men should not be driven to their utmost limit in any employment, it seems fair to suggest that the suspension of the system should not bring a result like the one I have instanced. Labor may well be standardized to perform a fair day's work; under such a system results are not only advantageous to the Government itself but to the employees as well. If the men were left to themselves in this matter and were not dictated to by those outside of their own employment, as I have said, 75 per cent of them, in my judgment, would be in favor of retaining the system.

Now, if we are going to eliminate the only efficiency system which has been established in connection with this kind of Government employment, we ought to take the responsibility for it. I do not believe that any man who desires good results and understands the facts can afford to sustain the conference committee in the action which it has taken, and I hope that the whole report, for those reasons, will be sent back to conference.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the motion submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island. On page 350 of the Precedents——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about that. The only question is whether the Senate shall agree to or disagree to the conference report. That is the question which must be disposed of.

Mr. LIPPITT. What was the statement of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt that the only question is to agree or disagree to the conference report. No other motions are in order. If the conference report is disagreed to, it goes back automatically.

Mr. LIPPITT. Of course, I do not want to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I can only say that some of the best parliamentarians on the floor looked the matter up yesterday afternoon and gave me their positive opinion that it was in order and that there were ample precedents for it. I hope the conference report will be returned to the conferees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that the Vice President surely has not looked carefully into the Book of Precedents that to some extent governs us, because there are innumerable instances where that motion has been entertained.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, on page 350 it is definitely decided that when one House has acted on a conference report and has agreed to it, as in this case, it has been discharged and there is no conference report to refer it back to. On page 350, section 106, the question has been distinctly decided that when a report has been submitted to one House and it has agreed to it and the conferees of the House have been discharged there is no committee to refer it back to, and the Chair properly has ruled that such a motion is out of order.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate very long on the points of difference. Here is a bill appropriating——

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator just to call his attention to Jefferson's Manual, where it is laid down that it is not in order to amend a conference report, that it must be accepted or rejected as an entirety.

Mr. SWANSON. There have been cases where it has been recommitted, but it never can be recommitted to a conference committee when the conference committee ceases to exist. There is nothing to recommit it to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the point. The record shows that it has been agreed to in the other House.

Mr. GALLINGER. There may be something in that point. The suggestion of the Senator from Florida does not apply, because that refers to an attempt to amend a conference report. This is not such a case.

Mr. SWANSON. Conference reports have been at times recommitted, but it has been decided in the other House, and I think decided uniformly, that when one House acts and agrees to a report and the conferees have been discharged there is no committee of conference. I think the Chair ruled correctly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about this question.

Mr. SWANSON. Here is a bill which appropriates, as agreed to by the conferees, $145,000,000. There were tremendous differences between the House and the Senate. There is more good legislation, as the Senator from Massachusetts and others have said, on this bill for the benefit of the Navy than has been passed for many years. After these differences have been adjusted there are only two items left for criticism in this body. The question of the abolition of the plucking board was not in conference. The House had agreed to repeal section 9 of the personnel act. The Senate had agreed to repeal section 9 of the personnel act. So the abolition of the plucking board was not in conference. Both Houses by a vote had decided to abolish what is popularly called the plucking board. The only question in conference was the additional legislation that should be inserted in place of it. We had a proposition, and we insisted on it. The House was opposed to it. I do not think the junior Senator from Massachusetts favored it. We tried repeatedly, the department and others, to get legislation now that could be substituted in its place. All interested in such a measure finally decided that the best thing to do was to let that legislation go over to the regular session in December. A personnel bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives. It is favored by the Navy Department. It has a substitute for the plucking board or a repeal of section 9, and it was universally agreed that the best course to pursue was to let this matter go over until the regular session of Congress. We could not eliminate the clause abolishing the plucking board because it was not in conference. Therefore that objection is eliminated so far as the adoption of this conference report is concerned.

The next question is that the Senate conferees recede and agree to the House provision prohibiting the introduction into the Navy of what is popularly known as the Taylor system. That provision is limited to this appropriation. The Senator from Pennsylvania has said it would not hurt the Navy. It does not exist in the Navy. It will not affect the Navy or anybody in the Navy.

The Senate conferees and the House conferees agreed that when a vote was taken on the Army bill if the House insisted upon this provision the Senate would recede. A vote was taken in the House of Representatives, and by a vote of one hundred and twenty odd to 20 the House insisted on retaining that provision, and it came very nearly adhering. I understand that it was only by persuasion that a motion was made to insist instead of adhering.

It seems to me that we are bound to adjust our differences. It is impossible to let this report go back. If it is rejected, every measure that has been agreed upon, where the House has receded on nearly all the Senate amendments, it goes back into conference, and every question will be opened entirely for the conference again. It would be clearly impossible to pass this bill if it goes back into conference and would come here to-night to have it engrossed.

I, for one, favor the Government being the model employer of labor. I am not one of those who think the Government should be less generous, that it should be more exacting, than other employers of labor. The Government of the United States is the greatest employer of labor in America. I believe the Government should be a model for all employers of labor—in treatment, in generous consideration of its employees. It is useless for us to criticize other employers of labor if we have not by our own efforts shown ourselves to be model employers of labor.

It seems to me for the Senate to reject this conference report for a matter that the Senator from Pennsylvania says can not affect the Navy would be to jeopardize this bill and jeopardize this splendid provision.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator takes his seat I ask him if he will yield to me for a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator about Senate amendment No. 18 and Senate amendment No. 68. The first is found on page 20 of the bill and the other on page 70.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the number?

Mr. NORRIS. Amendment No. 18 is the first one on page 20 of the Senate print of the bill at the bottom of the page. Did the Senate conferees recede in that case?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senate conferees receded.

Mr. NORRIS. The same principle involved in that amendment is involved in amendment No. 68 on page 70. Did the Senate conferees recede on that also?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senate conferees receded in that case also.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator whether the House of Representatives had a vote on those two amendments?

Mr. SWANSON. The House of Representatives had none.

Mr. NORRIS. How did it happen that the House had a vote on the other amendment and not on these two?

Mr. SWANSON. Which other amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has just stated that the so-called Taylor system was voted upon in the House.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the Taylor system was involved in the Army appropriation bill in the same language, and the conferees of the Senate agreed that if the House of Representatives insisted on retaining the similar provision in the Army bill by a large majority we would recede on it, and the House of Representatives did take a vote on that provision in the Army bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Were the House conferees insistent in regard to amendments 18 and 68?

Mr. SWANSON. They were very insistent. We were very anxious to have that amendment retained. It is very fine legislation and very beneficial to the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if it is not true that, in substance, this amendment was in prior appropriation bills, and the Secretaries of the Navy have found that even the presence of the amendment in the proposed law has been instrumental in enabling the Government to get armor and armor plate and projectiles at a very much reduced price?

Mr. SWANSON. These provisions, I understand, have not been in any naval appropriation bill. This is the first time.

Mr. NORRIS. I think amendment No. 68 has been.

Mr. SWANSON. No. 68 is for the erection of an armor factory.

Mr. NORRIS. It has been in the naval bill heretofore.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senate possibly and the House at different times passed some provision looking in that direction, but if I am not mistaken, and I think I am not, this is the first time a direct appropriation for these two purposes has ever been included in a bill that passed either House.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not going myself to make an argument with a view of asking the Senate to reject the conference report on account of these two amendments, yet it seems to me that attention ought to be called to them. Amendment numbered 18, put in by the Senate and which the conference report provides it shall recede from, is as follows:

That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase projectiles at what he considers to be a reasonable price, he is authorized to construct and equip a plant for the manufacture of projectiles, the total cost not to exceed $500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for the purpose, said plant to be located on such site now owned by the Government as may be determined by the President. The amount hereby appropriated to be available until expended.

Amendment numbered 68 is on page 70 of the Senate print of the bill, and it reads as follows:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor plate factory, upon land already owned by the Government, the total cost not to exceed $8,000,000, toward the construction of which $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That the time for the submission of the report of the committee appointed by the act of June 30, 1914 (Public, No. 121), is hereby extended to the regular session of Congress convening in December, 1915.

Mr. President, I believe the Government ought to provide definitely and directly for the building of an armor-plate factory. While this amendment does not do that in so many words, it does confer upon the Secretary of the Navy the authority to proceed to the building of an armor-plate factory, providing he is not able to get armor plate from private parties at what he believes to be a reasonable price. I think there are several reasons why we ought to have such legislation on our statute books. I believe it is considered by those who have given it the closest study that we have been compelled to pay in the past exorbitant prices for armor plate. I think all Senators have a great deal of information on that subject. I am not going into it in detail at this time. But every time such a provision is put on an appropriation bill in one House or the other it goes out on a point of order. Here is a provision which gave to the Secretary of the Navy, under certain conditions, authority to begin the construction of an armor-plate factory, that passed the Senate, and the House conferees have objected to it, and that the Senate conferees have agreed it shall be eliminated from the bill. I am thoroughly of the opinion that if this amendment could be submitted to the House of Representatives it would be approved and adopted by an overwhelming majority.

There is another reason, Mr. President, why it seems to me we ought to build a Government armor-plate factory and a projectile factory as provided in the other amendment, and that is that it would eliminate the greatest one power that is behind the building up of a public sentiment in favor of an enormous Navy and a great Army, which is the private gain that can be made by individuals and corporations in the manufacture of materials for the Army and the Navy. I think, if the Government made its own armor plate, to a great extent the clamor for the extension of the Army and the building of an enormous number of battleships would be eliminated, because private gain, to a great extent, would be eliminated. It is the profit that is in the business that keeps up the propaganda over the country in favor of it.

If the Governments of the world made their own armor plate and eliminated private gain we would see the navies to a great extent disappear from the waters of the earth. As a purely financial proposition, however, this amendment placed in the law would give the Secretary of the Navy a leverage upon those who are supplying us with armor plate, because he could say: "Unless you supply this armor plate at what I believe to be a reasonable price I will not buy it, but I will go into the business on behalf of the Government and build an armor-plate factory."

I regret very much that our conferees have not insisted upon this amendment, at least to the extent of having it go to the House of Representatives, where a direct vote could be had upon the proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska, if he will permit me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I will first yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that, while this may be in a general way a wise provision, yet if we should chance to have a Secretary of the Navy who believes in Government ownership we would surely have a factory for the manufacture of armor plate.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope we will have such a Secretary of the Navy; and yet, while I am in favor of having a Government factory, regardless of this bill or any other, if I were the Secretary of the Navy I would not feel that this provision gave me authority directly to build a factory, and I have no reason to think that the Secretary of the Navy would so feel. It only authorizes him to do it in case he is not fairly treated by those who are making armor plate. I suppose men might disagree to some extent on that, but the Secretary of the Navy would exercise a sound and fair discretion along that line.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will say that I should hope that he would do so; yet it absolutely puts in his hands the power to reject all bids and to proceed to build a factory.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; but I would not say that the language is absolute. It says that if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor plate at what he considers to be a reasonable price. Of course, he is the judge as to whether or not it is a reasonable price, and I think it proper to make him the judge of that. He ought to know more than most people whether or not he is getting it at a reasonable price. He has the facilities in his hands to ascertain whether or not he is getting it at a reasonable price; and if he could not get it at a reasonable price he ought, of course, under the amendment, if it shall become law, unhesitatingly to proceed to build an armor factory.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. It was considered absolutely necessary by the House conferees and by the conferees on the part of the Senate, in order to get this bill through, that we should have a complete agreement. We could only reach an agreement yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. Consequently it was necessary to agree on all the items. If we had carried all the items we differed about back to our respective bodies, the 4th of March would have arrived before any agreement could have been reached.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the difficulty of the conferees, to which the Senator from Virginia has referred.

Mr. SWANSON. The conferees on the part of the House insisted on that. The Senator will recall that the Naval Committee of the Senate reported these two provisions, and we fought for them in the Senate. They were sustained on a point of order. We did all we could to get the House to agree to these amendments, but the conferees realized that it would be utterly impossible in the short time given to discussion in the other House to reach a conclusion on this and other points of difference. Consequently we realized that in order to have this bill pass it was necessary to reach a complete agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not criticizing the conferees; I know they had a very difficult task before them, and that the time was short; but I think I know something about the temper of the House of Representatives, and I believe that the House of Representatives would unhesitatingly on a vote approve of these two amendments. I do not believe there would be any doubt about that. Personally I do not believe our conferees would have run any risk if they had declined to agree as to these two amendments, important as they are—perhaps the most important amendments in the bill—and sent the matter back to the House and to the Senate for votes to be had directly upon it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to get into a discussion upon the long history of the armor-plate industry in the United States, and yet I can claim some familiarity with it. During my 18 years of service in the Senate I have participated in numerous discussions in this body when the naval appropriation bill came up, and I have personally visited and am quite familiar, of course, with the armor-plate plants in Philadelphia, in Bethlehem, and in Pittsburgh, but when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] states deliberately to the Senate that the United States is paying exorbitant prices for armor I feel it my duty, as a Member of this body and as a member of the Naval Committee, possessing a great familiarity with this subject, to say that he has not only not a scintilla of evidence for that statement but that his statement is absolutely destitute of any foundation of fact. The United States is getting armor cheaper than is any other nation in the world, and I intend to submit in a moment to the Senate a list of prices for armor plate during a series of years from the beginning of the production of the article in the United States in 1887.

Whether it shall ultimately be the policy of the Government to go into the armor-plate industry is a separate and distinct question, but the Senate is certainly entitled to the truth and the facts, and not to a reckless statement, such as we have just listened to, that the United States has been paying exorbitant prices for armor plate when we are getting armor plate cheaper than any other nation in the world, and considerably cheaper, as I shall show in a moment.

As to the present price being reasonable, I will state that over a period of 10 years the price of armor remained consistently at $420 a ton. This was the price set by our own Government as a fair price, after thoroughly investigating the armor industry. Records will show that during a period of 12 years prior to 1914 each of the plants in Pennsylvania—and there are no others producing this article—averaged in orders booked about 3,500 tons per year, or a total selling value, at $420 a ton, of its yearly production of $1,470,000.

Mr. President, was every penny of this profit? Conceding, for the sake of the argument, that every dollar of that $1,470,000 was profit on this investment, it would represent less than 20 per cent on the money invested on the invitation and solicitation of the American Government to private enterprise to go into this industry, because the investment in the armor-plate industry is from seven to eight million dollars.

Take another phase of the subject. A two-battleship program of the present dreadnaught type requires 16,000 tons of armor plate. The private manufactories of to-day have an annual capacity of 30,000 tons. Therefore, with a two-battleship program, the present manufactories, with their $8,000,000 of investment, can not run more than one-half their capacity, and their only customer, of course, is the Government. The remainder of the investment lies idle; and should Congress fail at any session to pass an appropriation for the usual number of battleships, the investment would lie completely idle for a period of years.

I referred to the investment being $8,000,000. That is the investment in one particular concern. I should say that all the plants represent approximately an investment of $20,000,000, and they were all, Mr. President, practically created on the invitation of the American Government. The last plant to enter into the field—the Midvale concern in Philadelphia—distinctly got into the field of operation at the request of the Navy Department, which solicited greater competition and asked for others to go in and submit bids for armor plate in competition with the other two concerns which had theretofore been making it. On one occasion the administration then in power deliberately requested these plants to double their capacity so that we might go on with a program of a greater Navy; and it has been the history of the American Republic—always the policy of the American Government to encourage wherever possible the individual manufacturer and to cultivate close cooperation with him.

This is, to a certain extent, a hazardous and speculative industry. I remember seeing in a shed at Bethlehem some years ago an enormous hammer costing perhaps a million dollars—I have forgotten how much—and I was informed that it was completely out of use in a very short period, because some other mechanism or apparatus had been invented in this rapidly developing industry to take its place. As it was, the expenditure for that hammer was written off as a loss.

The last contract price of armor plate—and I am not going to detain the Senate long in discussing this much-mooted question, but when the statements in this regard are made deliberately and without foundation I feel impelled to deny them and make a brief statement myself—the last contract price of armor, which was $425, was 19 years after the first price on the introduction of the industry, the first price being $510; in other words, Mr. President, during the 19 years of the industry in America the price has steadily gone down from the original amount of $510 a ton to $425 a ton, clearly showing that there has not been any tendency toward exorbitant charges or an upward movement of prices for this article. On the contrary, it shows a decrease, notwithstanding the ever-increasing severity of the specifications on the part of the Government, the increased cost of labor, and, over and above all else, legislation restricting the conditions of labor. Among the foremost of the acts of Congress affecting the conditions of labor was the one providing for the eight-hour system applied to all contractors doing work for the Government. Notwithstanding these enormous requirements added in the last few years, the price of the article to the Government has been steadily going down.

It can not be claimed, Mr. President, that the production of this article can be put absolutely on a competitive basis, as in the case of the manufacture of hats, shoes, or clothing. The manufacturer of these latter articles has numerous customers scattered all over the country, while, as I have said, there has been but one customer for armor plate.

The pioneers of this industry, as I have explained, went into it at the invitation of the Government. The Government was only too glad to have them experiment and run the chance of losing millions perhaps to produce, in the face of the steadily increasing severe specifications, this essential article to our naval development.

There has been the contention—and it is a logical one—that the Government is entitled to be charged a reasonable price for this article. That reasonable price can be roughly arrived at by a consideration of the investment, the cost of the production of the article, and a comparison of the prices paid by foreign Governments.

I have already briefly referred to the amount and character of the investment and the amount of the return under the most favorable normal conditions. I shall not go any further into details as affecting that part of the proposition.

For the product of this investment of $20,000,000, as I have said, there is but one customer, the Government of the United States; and the equipment is not like the equipment of other industrial establishments, which can be turned to some other purpose, but armor-plate plants are fitted for and useful only in the production of armor plate; and when the Government ceases to purchase armor plate, that $20,000,000 must lie idle and unproductive, the plant must disintegrate by nonuse, ultimately becoming only fit for the scrap pile—a loss to those who not only from industrial enterprise, but, Mr. President, from some spirit of American patriotism had been induced to invest their money in this form of industrial activity.

It would seem that the present method of purchasing from a private manufacturer, and placing upon the private manufacturer, as they do, the severest kind of inspection, would secure the highest class of product, while were the United States manufacturing and inspecting their own product there would be at least the incentive for accepting material which was considered good enough. The inspector for the Navy Department, who is set over the smallest detail of this process from its beginning to the end, constitutes an assurance to the Government of getting a perfect, first-class article, such as never could be attained did the Government attempt to manufacture this article itself.

I claim that to have this industry at least to some extent in the hands of private enterprise is a distinct national asset, so that in case of war we would be assured, did we have to resort to extraordinary exertions to develop our Navy—which is not now adequate for purposes, I may say, even of defense—we would have these great private enterprises ready at the call of the Government to proceed night and day to put us in a position for defense at least. Did the Government attempt to make all this armor plate, or a considerable portion of it, it would introduce such uncertainties into a business which already is filled with peril that the probabilities are that these private enterprises would slowly and gradually and inevitably wither and disappear.

There is no suspicion or charge or allegation that the Government is getting an inferior article. It is well known and a recognized fact that the United States Government is not only getting the best quality of armor made in the world—and I make the statement without fear of contradiction by any Senator in this body—but it is getting it at a price lower than any other power is buying or making armor for, the statement of the Senator from Nebraska to the contrary notwithstanding. As an example, England, the biggest consumer in the world of armor plate, as will be easily understood, is paying in the neighborhood of $475 to $500 per ton, as against the American price of $425 a ton. The biggest consumer, and the consumer getting it the cheapest of any nation in Europe, is paying, therefore, from $475 to $500 a ton, as against the $425 paid by the United States.

Mr. President, we certainly can learn something by looking abroad. We are a peaceful Nation. It is extremely difficult to get our people to wake up to the first principles of national defense. It has been so long since we had a real struggle—we can hardly call the War with Spain a first-class struggle—that war seems impossible to the American people. While we may maintain an Army and a Navy for policing the islands of the sea and our possessions, and in past years for policing the frontier, so called, in the western country, our people are no more aroused to the importance not of aggressive warfare but of national defense than they could be aroused to a proposition to create an army and go over and conquer China.

So perhaps it might not be altogether amiss if we would study what other nations do. In this connection, the nations who have for hundreds of years been engaged in a life-and-death struggle—the survival, perhaps, of the fittest—culminating in this dreadful and tremendous war which we read about every day going on in Europe, must necessarily have worked out the military and naval problems in a way with which we are not familiar, because we never have been compelled to take these matters so closely to our hearts and our necessities as they have. What do we find?

If a Government-operated plant is a good thing, as has been stated on the floor of the Senate to-day, why have not countries like England, Germany, France, Russia, and Italy, all naval nations of strength, undertaken such a project?

There is only one country, Mr. President—Japan—which seriously manufactures armor on its own account, and then only because Japan has not been able to influence private capital and private manufacturers to go into the Kingdom of Japan and start plants there, as they would be only too glad to do did individual enterprise find the opportunity or the willingness to take advantage of their invitation. Every one of these countries, as will be conceded without contradiction by every Senator in this Chamber, has cheaper labor than that which prevails in the United States, and they have never seen any advantage in establishing a Government armor plant.

In Japan in the Government plant, with the extraordinarily cheap labor which we all know prevails in Japan, armor is produced, I am informed, at a cost of $390 a ton. Think of it, Mr. President! Japan, with its labor 90 per cent cheaper than it exists in America, with a Government-owned plant, produces armor for $390, as against the American price of $420 or $425 a ton. Why, when we stop to reflect on the different conditions of labor, the different relative costs of labor, the cost to Japan and the cost to the United States is to an extraordinary degree similar.

It has always been, on the contrary, the policy of such great nations as England, Germany, and France—two of whom, at least, surpass the United States in sea power, and the last nation comes very nearly approximating to our own strength—to meet and conduct negotiations with private manufacturers for their supply of armor over a period of years. This gives the Government, as well as the manufacturers, an insured basis on which their business will be conducted, without a yearly contention arising as to prices in every recurrent appropriation, such as now occurs with the Government of the United States.

I have here some figures regarding the cost of an armor plant and the cost of armor production. I hope that what I have said already in a brief way, touching only on the high points of the discussion, has made some impression on the Senate. At the risk of being a little tedious, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a few figures regarding the cost of a plant. Based on the amount invested by private manufacturers in their private plants, a fair basis for the cost of the plant is about $1,000,000 for each 1,000 tons of yearly output up to a 10,000-ton capacity plant. For example, a 10,000-ton capacity plant would cost about $10,000,000. The minimum amount of depreciation of such a plant would be 6.5 per cent per year, or a cost of $65 per ton on a production of 10,000 tons per year. This percentage remaining constant, with a plant running at only one-half capacity this item would be doubled in the cost of production, or $130 per ton. In the case of a plant running on a one-battleship plan, the work to be divided equally between a Government plant and the three armo-plate plants now existing, each plant would receive 2,500 tons per year, which in the item of depreciation alone would mean $260 per ton.

Experience has demonstrated that no investment should be made for a manufacturing plant which does not show a return of 20 per cent; but against the plant of 10,000 tons per annum, suppose we figure 15 per cent for interest on the investment. With the plant running full at 10,000 tons per annum, this item would represent a cost of production of $150 per ton; running at half capacity, $300 per ton; at one-quarter capacity, $600 per ton. In the case of a plant running a quarter of its capacity, the two items, depreciation and interest on investment, would amount to $860 per ton.

Mr. President, I do not expect from this hasty reading of these figures that the Senate can absorb them and realize their true significance; but those Senators who are sufficiently interested in this question, and who will take the trouble to examine these figures as they will appear in the RECORD, will, I know, be impressed with this extraordinary situation, which shows a hazardous business, requiring the highest degree of skill, extraordinary progress from year to year in introducing new processes and in making a more complete article, and in an effort to comply with ever increasingly severe Government specifications, and a condition clearly indicating that there is no such extraordinary profit as has been represented in the business, but, on the contrary, that the business is filled with hazard and possible loss and actual loss.

Up to the point which I just reached in giving these figures it will be noted that I have not included anything but the bare cost of manufacture. In previous investigations into this subject, particularly the last one, known as the Niles Board, in 1906, they reported the cost of manufacturing armor in a plant with a capacity of 6,000 tons per year as $244 per ton. Suppose for a 20,000-ton plant we should say that this item would be $220 per ton? This same board reported that a plant running at one-half capacity would increase its operating cost 20 per cent and at one-third capacity the operating cost would increase 30 per cent. Therefore, for a plant of the character which the Government proposes we have a manufacturing cost when running full of, say, $220 per ton; running half-full, $264 per ton; running one-quarter full, assuming a 40 per cent increase in the cost for one-quarter capacity, $308 per ton.

These figures are not realized by gentlemen ignorant of the business, who hardly know an armor factory from a haystack, who hardly know their location or the history of the industry, who hardly realize that this business has its black side, and that it is not altogether as bright as their imaginations picture.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I correctly understand the Senator that there are four armor-plate factories at present in the United States?

Mr. PENROSE. Three.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do they do any other work except the manufacturing of armor?

Mr. PENROSE. They are large establishments, which do other work; but the investment and the plant devoted to armor is used for no other purpose, and stands idle when the Government orders stop—$20,000,000 of investment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator state approximately the proportion of time that they are engaged in the manufacture of armor and the proportion of time that they are idle so far as that industry is concerned?

Mr. PENROSE. I should say, roughly speaking, that they operate 50 per cent of their capacity for a given period. I have no definite figures on that point. I think that conveys some idea of the situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that this investment of $20,000,000 is idle one-half of the time?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a pretty serious matter.

Mr. PENROSE. In the progress of the industry much of it is thrown out of commission and rendered useless, and new investments have to be made to replace it owing to the progress of the industry; but that, of course, applies to all the iron and steel industry. The profits of the iron and steel industry have often been made a matter of criticism. People have failed to realize the extraordinary scientific development in the processes of handling the iron and steel industry by which an enormous investment is rendered useless from year to year by reason of scientific invention and scientific progress. There is no industry among all the industries that has been capable of such extraordinary progress and development, owing to the ingenuity of man and the fertility of invention, as this industry; and when large profits are made they must be compared with tremendous losses, due to the machinery and apparatus of a preceding period being fit for nothing but the junk heap.

So that an actuary or an accountant could fairly figure out what would seem to be a very large profit in the iron and steel industry, or in any particular establishment engaged in some line of activity of that kind, and claim that it was fair and reasonable if you balance up the losses caused by the progress of the industry.

To these figures to which I have already referred, to obtain full cost, must be added what is known as administrative expense; that is, expenses incident to operating other than those charged directly to manufacturing operations. In a plant of this character we estimate that the indirect or administrative expense would amount to at least $150,000 per year; or, on a basis of a plant producing 10,000 tons per year, running full, half capacity, and one-quarter capacity, this item would amount to $15, $30, and $60 per ton, making the full manufacturing cost, respectively, $235, $294, and $368 per ton.

Another and very important item of cost, which it became necessary to reflect in the 1913 bidding for armor plate intended for the battleship Pennsylvania, was the requirement that the same should be manufactured under the terms of the eight-hour law. It was estimated that this additional obligation would increase the costs $34.65 per ton on the plant running full. Increasing this item 20 per cent and 40 per cent, respectively, for a plant running half and quarter full would be $41.58 and $48.51 per ton.

A summary of the above important items follows.

I ask to have inserted, if there is no objection, a table which has been compiled, which I have in my hand, showing the depreciation, interest on investment, manufacturing cost, administrative expense, increase of cost due to the eight-hour law, and full cost, all of which items have been briefly referred to by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

	Running full.	Running half capacity.	Running one-quarter capacity.
Depreciation	$65.00	$130.00	$260.00
Interest on investment	150.00	300.00	600.00
Manufacturing cost	220.00	264.00	308.00
Administrative expense	15.00	30.00	60.00
Increase cost due to eight-hour law	34.65	41.58	48.51
Full cost	484.65	765.58	1,276.51

Mr. PENROSE. Another argument which ought to be seriously considered regarding the Government ownership of a purely industrial proposition would be the question of the management of a plant of this nature. It is a well-known fact the Government has never been a producer, but always an assembler, and in entering the field of production it would of necessity require supervision of a character which certainly could not be obtained from the regular Government service. The Government has in arsenals and in other places been able to assemble materials already produced, but has seldom, if ever, to any large extent gone into the original basic manufacture of the original article.

I am not going into all the ramifications of this proposition. It opens up a field which I guess I could not get through with if I stood here on my feet until the gavel falls at 12 o'clock to-morrow, which I do not intend to do.

The question of the fluctuation of labor would be a serious one as to a Government plant.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is not going to occupy the time until 12 o'clock to-morrow, he said.

Mr. PENROSE. I expressly disavowed any such intention.

Mr. STONE. I have a confident assurance that the Senator is occupying quite a good deal of time in making a fine speech, no doubt. I wish to ask the Senator if the item to which he is objecting came from the conference in the way he desired, he being a member of the conference.

Mr. PENROSE. I had no particular desire in the matter one way or the other, Mr. President. I do not think I said a word during the discussion of this paragraph in the conference.

Mr. STONE. Just what I am getting at is to find out——

Mr. PENROSE. But certain statements were made regarding an industry which I felt it my duty to enlighten the Senate on. I am sorry that my speech does not interest the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. It is very interesting.

Mr. PENROSE. I have sat here in patience and meekness and listened to him for 12 and 15 hours, all through the night, only leaving when nature imperatively called me to get a meal or a little sustenance, and I have seen the gray daylight come into this Chamber with the Senator from Missouri still on his feet and still holding forth in an interesting and statesmanlike discourse. There ought to be reciprocity for me. I have been standing only for half an hour.

Mr. STONE. The Senator has a fine imagination.

Mr. PENROSE. I am stating the fact.

Mr. STONE. Hardly so. The Senator can not be serious as to that.

Mr. PENROSE. I will not say that I remember all the Senator has said, Mr. President; my recollection is not clear as to these details, but it is vividly impressed with the length of his remarks.

Mr. STONE. I still am curious to know whether the Senator is in favor of the conference report, particularly as to the matter which he is discussing, or whether he is against it.

Mr. PENROSE. I am kind of neutral. I do not care one way or the other. If the American Government wants to try an experiment which, in my opinion, is against the interests of government, it can go ahead and do it. But when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] gets up and deliberately makes a statement that exorbitant prices have been paid for armor, I thought it perhaps would interest some Senators, including the Senator from Missouri, to show that that is not a fact; that we are getting armor cheaper than any other nation in the world.

Mr. STONE. But the Senator was thoroughly prepared to respond.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course I was prepared on matters which I have to act on in a conference.

Mr. STONE. The Senator was thoroughly prepared to respond to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska long before they were made.

Mr. PENROSE. I had no idea of the intention of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. STONE. The Senator intended to make a speech. Is not that so?

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is in closer touch with the Senator from Nebraska than, perhaps, I am.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Pennsylvania intended to make a speech, whether the Senator from Nebraska spoke or not, I assume.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I did not intend to make any speech.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator from Nebraska furnished the Senator a delightful opportunity.

Mr. PENROSE. He furnished the match which caused the explosion, Mr. President. [Laughter.] Let the Senator from Missouri realize that if he was not listening to me he might be listening to some one else until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. Very likely.

Mr. PENROSE. Hoping that the effect of my remarks has not suffered a serious break by reason of the interruption of the Senator, I desire to say a few words on the projectile plant. Mr. President, if there ever was an ill-considered proposition it is the proposition for a projectile plant. The armor-plate proposition has the approval of some gentlemen, and I admit they are very intelligent gentlemen, and I know they are patriotic. I think their chief defect is the ignorance of the situation in an industry, but there may be some basis for it, because it has been investigated, committees have been appointed, it has been a matter which has been discussed for 15 years. But no one has up to this time ever suggested a projectile plant; there has never been an investigation by the Navy Department or any committee of Congress, and there never has been any estimate of what a projectile plant would cost. We simply have the ladle dipped into the bucket, and the money of the taxpayer poured out like water in a lavish and improvident way.

The same argument that I have already briefly referred to regarding an armor-plate plant would apply, of course, to the projectile proposition, except with this one difference, that the projectile industry is still in its infancy. It is in a more experimental stage than was the armor industry when it was first started in America. Specifications are being continually changed, as well as the development of the larger sizes of projectiles, the present service projectile—14-inch—only having been adapted during the last two or three years. As a concrete example as to what is meant by the undeveloped product, last year's contract for 14-inch projectiles was taken under new and very radically changed specifications. Not one of the manufacturers has been able to date to meet the required test. Under these conditions no price could be adequate. Five hundred thousand dollars was suggested for building the plant. A plant for an output of five thousand 12 or 14 inch projectiles per year would cost $2,000,000. Could there be a clearer evidence of improvident legislation based on no knowledge of the subject and with an admitted absence of any investigation by any department or official of the Government?

Mr. President, I desire to insert here a statement of prices paid by the United States Navy for armor plate and tonnage bought from the Bethlehem Steel Co., from 1887 to 1914, showing a steady decrease in price, showing that the last price of 1914—$425—as I have already explained, furnished the American Government with armor at a lower figure, by a very considerable amount, than any other nation in the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement of prices paid by United States Navy for armor plate and tonnage bought from the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Date.	Base price, class A.	Tonnage of contract.
1887	[1] $510.00	6,702.6
1893	520.00	3,562.24
1896	515.40	2,633
1898	400.00	3,964.47
1899	400.00	1,142.19
1900	420.00	18,588
1903	420.00	3,362
1903	420.00	5,986
1905	420.00	4,953
1906	346.00	[1] 1,824
1907	420.00	3,579
1909	420.00	3,137
1909	420.00	4,594
1911	420.00	2,257
1911	420.00	2,212
1912	420.00	5,022
1913	454.00	[2] 2,669
1913	440.00	2,602.4
1914	425.00	16,256

[1] Midvale entered armor business. Finds $346 too low price and immediately raises to Government established price of $420.

[2] 8-hour law into effect.

Bethlehem's annual capacity 10,000 to 12,000 tons.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything on this subject. It has been discussed so many years in the Senate and I have participated so often in the discussions that I had made up my mind to refrain from saying anything, notwithstanding I happened to have a few figures on hand which I had prepared as one of the conferees on the naval appropriation bill.

Still a final and additional argument can be furnished this year why the Government should not go into the very serious responsibility of spending unestimated millions for a projectile and armor establishment, and that is that we are in the experimental stage of modern naval equipment. Owing to the war in Europe it is clearly the thought of the conferees of the House and the Senate, as is evidenced by the increased force of submarines, which came spontaneously from the minds of the conferees without solicitation or argument, that perhaps we are on the verge of a radical alteration in naval strategy and in naval requirements; that perhaps the dreadnaught, with half its cost due to armor, may not be so much required in the future as the agile submarine, which has recently cut such a conspicuous and effective figure in the war zone in the seas around England, France, and Germany.

Be that as it may, it must be evident to every man of common sense that extraordinary lessons are to be learned and are being learned from the greatest conflict in the history of civilization, which is now going on upon the Continent of Europe. The American Government, it seems to me, can well afford to wait another year before spending ten, twenty, or thirty million dollars in the hazardous experiment of an armor establishment and a projectile establishment when a large part of the investment may be thrown back on their hands as useless by reason of radical innovations in naval science.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania just what compilations and documents he was reading from, who the authors were, who brought it so timely to his notice?

Mr. PENROSE. I compiled my figures here from reports of the Secretary of the Navy and in the cost of plants from the Niles Board, which I have already referred to. The total of the figures from 1887 to 1914 are a matter of public record. In fact, Mr. President, I have not made a statement in my brief remarks which is not accessible in the reports of the Secretary of the Navy to every Senator if he will take the trouble to read them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, it sounded very much like it might be a report that might have emanated from the Bethlehem Steel Works, or some one or another of those great concerns that have thrived in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on the fat and blood of the American people for years gone by. I recall, Mr. President, that some months ago a number of photographs of good magnitude, some 12 or 14 inches square, were presented in the Senate, wherein was demonstrated the fact that the armor plate used by the United States and bought from these great plants in Pennsylvania was tested down here at Indianhead and submitted to the highest explosive projectiles manufactured and invented by a Washingtonian, one Dr. Gathmann. These photographs demonstrated the fact that the so-called impregnable armor plate the Senator has just read to us about was punctured like pasteboard. I think the Senator from Nebraska, as well, spoke to me regarding it, and others. I remember seeing in the Washington papers afterwards, speaking of the bombardment of the forts at Liege, in Belgium, that these great fortifications had been demolished through these very high explosives and projectiles.

I am willing to recognize the splendid enterprise of Pennsylvania, but that splendid enterprise is stimulated always for a liberal amount of cash. It has no more earnest advocate than the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I think the Government plant would be of infinite good. I can not hold the idea with the Senator that it would be a great calamity and disaster to have the Government of the United States help to manufacture some of the necessities needed in the general industry and the welfare of the country, as well as in its defense and its protection. I believe it would be a most healthy thing to have the United States own its own and operate a Government plant under the heads of the Army and the Navy, or the Secretary of War alone, in order to hold prices down. I believe with a liberal and enterprising competitor on the part of the Government of the United States the prices of armor plate in Pennsylvania, instead of being $434 or $435 a ton, would be reduced very appreciably.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I trust this conference report will not be sent back. I am very much in opposition to the so-called Taylor system. I believe it is inhuman and un-American. I can not imagine how a representative in this body can stand up and defend the cursed system of measuring a man and making him a mere machine to satisfy the greed of an employer. It seems to me to be horrible, inequitable, and ungenerous, and uncharitable. If it must prevail, in Heaven's name let it prevail in private shops and do not let it prevail in the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] said that he believes 75 per cent of the employees of the Watertown Arsenal would vote in favor of the Taylor system. It is remarkable to me how his experience differs from that of my own. I have conversed freely with many men connected with these great plants and I have found but one man who has stood up in favor of this obnoxious system, this holding of a time watch over a laborer in satisfying the edict of his God to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, holding a stop watch over him as you would hold it at a horse race or in a pugilistic encounter between two pugilistic citizens. I think it unfortunate, and I trust that it may never be incorporated in any one of our bills.

Mr. President, as to the so-called "plucking board," I was one of those who voted in favor and who will continue to vote in favor of plucking the "plucking board." I want to abolish it and get rid of it. I have talked with very many Navy men, and I have not yet found one man who held up his hand in favor of that board or who voiced an argument in favor of the plucking system. I think it takes the manhood out of the average young man who may be engaged in the Navy. I do not approve of the argument that has been made that this board was necessary and that we should pass this legislation instanter because the "plucking board" did its plucking in June.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that this great country or the Navy or the Army will go to the "demnition bowwows" if there should be no plucking this June. I believe we can get along even without promotions this June and let the plucking board go. It is ungenerous and unwise, to my mind, and I believe generally in operation it is unwise and unfair. Then at a more deliberate moment, when we have more time, when we can meet together calmly and dispassionately and consider this subject, let this question of promotions be worked out in a way that may be just to all interests and which will be satisfactory and beneficial for the best welfare of our country.

I trust, Mr. President, that the Senate may concur in the conference report, and that no thought of returning it to the other House may be entertained.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am only going to take the time of the Senate for a few moments, for I realize the anxiety of Senators having charge of this bill, and in fact of all of us, to dispose of it and to get through; but it seems to me that I ought to say just a few words in reply to what the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has said.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, although he did not intend it, I am sure, in much of what he said made an argument in favor of the establishment of a Government factory for the manufacture of armor plate. He gave us a very good account, from his standpoint, of the trials and tribulations through which the armor-plate men must go, and how they risk all their property and their time in the investment in the armor-plate business, which is so hazardous, and so forth, bringing out the idea that the armor-plate people have only one customer in this country, and that therefore they must charge exorbitant prices if they are to make good financially; and whoever heard of their not making good financially?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I object to the Senator from Nebraska putting into my mouth what I never uttered.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not putting anything into the Senator's mouth.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senator is.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not even pretended to put anything into the Senator's mouth.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, the Senator makes the conclusion from what I said that these men were compelled to charge exorbitant prices because they had only one customer, and the whole aim of my——

Mr. NORRIS. I say, as a matter of logic, that they must do so or else they will fail financially in business.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the Senator use his own logic without using my name.

Mr. NORRIS. I am using my own logic, and I am using my own argument.

Mr. PENROSE. Do not quote me.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not quoted the Senator. I want to quote something reliable when I quote.

Mr. PENROSE. And I want to hear good logic.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, the Senator would not be able to recognize good logic if he heard it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment. We are starting in here again in violation of the plain rule of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it follows just as the night must follow the day that if men engage in business where they have one customer only, and have no continuous contract with that customer, and they can not deal with anybody else, they must necessarily, being dependent upon one customer, charge a price higher than they would charge if they had general trade in the business in which they are engaged. So that the Senator from Pennsylvania, in laying down very well the business of manufacturing armor plate, unconsciously and unintentionally makes an argument in favor of the establishment of a Government factory.

We must expect men who go into the armor-plate business to make money; nobody can complain of that. I am not finding fault with men who go into the armor-plate business getting all they can for their product. They must necessarily charge a higher price if they can only keep their establishment going a part of the time. It is on account of this peculiar nature of the business that the Government ought to make its own armor plate, and thus avoid the payment of exorbitant prices that now naturally must be paid.

The men who go into business of that kind, as I understand, have been successful. We know who those men have been. They are not paupers now, as one might think after hearing the plaintive tones of the Senator from Pennsylvania in their behalf; they are pretty well fixed. We all know who they are. They have been making money, they are making money now, and they are in no danger of going to the poorhouse.

Mr. President, we have appointed a joint committee. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who sits on the other side of the Chamber, is the chairman of that joint committee to investigate this very matter. He has now on his desk the report that that committee is ready to make, and he has told me since this discussion commenced that as soon as the report which is now before the Senate is finished he expects to make his report to the Senate; and, Mr. President, when that report is made and printed it will bear out not only all that I have said, but ten thousand times more.

Mr. President, there was in the testimony submitted to that committee plenty of evidence showing that there have been times during the years we have been buying armor plate of these factories when they have sold us inferior armor plate. An investigation by Congress has shown, through the report of the Secretary of the Navy, that fact. I want to read from the report of Secretary of the Navy Herbert, made in 1894. He said:

> I am informed upon authority which I believe to be good that about, or perhaps before, the time of the last contract of the Bethlehem company with Russia there was a meeting in Paris of the representatives of the principal, if not all, of the armor manufacturers of Europe and America.

After reciting some other facts, the Secretary says:

> These facts seem to lead to the conclusion that there is at least a friendly understanding or agreement among the principal manufacturers of the world that prices shall be maintained at about the same level.

Now, let us come on down to the present Secretary of the Navy—20 years in round numbers having elapsed—and see what he says about it. Speaking of the armor plate of the Pennsylvania, as to which there have been three bids by these companies all at the same figures, he says:

When we came to the armor we rejected all the bids and were then absolutely in a situation from which it appeared there was no relief.

That is the present Secretary of the Navy speaking. There was no relief. They were at the mercy of these three companies making armor plate, all of them located in Pennsylvania. Reading further from the Secretary's report, he said:

Though you can not establish it in black and white, there is no doubt of an Armor Plate Trust all over the world—

And so on.

In 1897 the Secretary of the Navy made an investigation of the cost of armor plate. He called to his assistance experts not only from the Navy Department, but from the armor-plate factories themselves. The board which he gathered together made an exhaustive investigation, and they reported the cost of a ton of armor plate, including labor, to be $167.30.

Lieut. Commander Rodgers, inspector at the Bethlehem Works, was requested to make an estimate, and he placed the cost of materials and labor at $178.59. Ensign C. B. McVay, inspector of ordnance at the Carnegie steel plant, was also requested to make an estimate, and he fixed the price of labor and materials at $161.54.

At that time Capt. W. T. Sampson, afterwards admiral in the Navy, made an investigation, and also Philip Hichborn, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, in this great work. He took the average of the three sets of figures and added thereto 10 per cent for loss by defects, and reported the cost of a ton of single-forged armor at $185.38 and a ton of reforged armor at $197.78.

These figures do not include all of the items, as I understand; there was no allowance made for overhead charges, but the estimate includes the cost of material and of labor.

Mr. President, in 1894, I understand, the Bethlehem Iron & Steel Co., one of the three companies that now supply the country with armor plate cheaper than they do anybody else in the world, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says, made the armor plate for Russia for two battleships at $249 a ton. Nobody supposes that they did not make a profit on that contract. What must be the profit when they charge us from $420 to $480 per ton?

Mr. President, I could go on and pile up the evidence here, it seems to me, beyond dispute that the prices are exorbitant; and I think we ought to expect to pay exorbitant prices. If we want to be economical, we will have to build our own armor-plate factory and make our own armor plate.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says if the Government does not buy armor from these three factories that they will be idle, and will run to decay and to rust. That is true; but they have made enough money on the Government contracts to make most of them millionaires. They have been paid for their plants many times over. They have gotten more than a reasonable price for their product. Otherwise they would be in the poorhouse instead of being millionaires. The taxpayers of the country have been compelled to pay not only for these plants, but a price for armor plate that, in addition to paying for the plants, has enabled them to pay dividends so large that nearly all the parties are now millionaires. As long as we must be held up this way it would be economy to build the plants and make our own armor plate. This course would relieve the country also of the enormous effort, which is nation wide, to artificially create a sentiment for increased Army and Navy expenditures by those who would make a financial profit out of such increased expenditure.

Mr. President, I do not intend, as I said at the beginning, to go further into this discussion. I want to call the attention of the country to the report of the joint committee that will be filed, that will be accessible to-morrow to Members of the Senate, bearing out, I think, a great deal more than I have even intimated in anything that I have said.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 21201).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report has been read and printed in the RECORD. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what becomes of the item relative to the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico?

Mr. OVERMAN. The House receded with an amendment which limited the traveling expenses of the commissioners to not exceeding $10 a day. With that exception it is about as the Senate adopted it.

Mr. SMOOT. But the same amount was appropriated?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; $5,000 less—$55,000 instead of $60,000. The Senator is asking me about the International Boundary Commission?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not mean the Gaines matter?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought the Senator was asking about the item relative to the International Boundary Commission.

Mr. SMOOT. I was.

Mr. OVERMAN. The House reduced the amount $5,000 on account of an attorney. The Senator will find that upon page 17 of the bill, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. And then amendment numbered 16, the compilation of Chinese treaties—did the House yield on that?

Mr. OVERMAN. The House yielded.

Mr. SMOOT. And also on the international conference on maritime law?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. The House yielded on everything in dispute except two items—the International Boundary Commission, the Mexican commission, and the appointment of a joint agency under an agreement between England and the United States to settle certain claims.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the conference of American financiers?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How about the interparliamentary union appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. We accepted that item. That was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say the conference of American financiers' provision went out?

Mr. OVERMAN. The project went in just as we passed it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the House yielded?

Mr. OVERMAN. The House yielded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I present the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 18, and 64, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the amount stricken out by said amendment and, on page 55 of the bill, after line 26, insert the following:

"For additional amount required for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, surveyors, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices until December 31, 1915, $315,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of lines 17, 18, 19, and 20, of the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence to employees while officially engaged away from their designated posts of duty, being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "per diem in lieu of subsistence pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS A. MARTIN,
LEE OVERMAN,
JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the report be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator in charge of the conference report to say that it is a complete agreement?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a complete agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. What was done with the mileage question?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That stands as it is now written in the law.

Mr. SMOOT. And the other two items as to which there was a disagreement—did the Senate yield, or did the House yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know which items the Senator is referring to.

Mr. SMOOT. There was an item about the purchase of lands in California.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was disposed of in a previous report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce on Senate bill 7738, and ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. How can the Senator object?

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it was a committee report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but how can the Senator object?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, it is after 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows it is, but there is not anything before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Absolutely nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know there is nothing before the Senate, but committee reports after 2 o'clock are certainly not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are not in order as against the unfinished business if there is any unfinished business; but——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us settle this other question first. The Chair can not see why a report, at least, can not be made.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, after the hour of 2 o'clock morning business is closed. No report of a committee can be made unless by unanimous consent. A motion can be made to take up a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will sustain the point of order. Without unanimous consent, it can not be taken up.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. I objected before, Mr. President, and I object now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I move that the report be received, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the report?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The report is from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, recommending the passage of a bill that will insert in section 20 of the interstate-commerce act the word "correspondence" in addition to the words "accounts and memoranda," so as to give the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction and inquisitorial powers to inspect the correspondence of corporations as well as their accounts and memoranda.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The report is either in order, or it is not. This is after 2 o'clock. I suppose it is after 2 o'clock of the legislative day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, there is not any doubt about its being after 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. The report is not in order except by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And there is not any doubt that it is not in order; but what harm it can do to have a report made, when they are constantly being made, the Chair can not understand.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there may be no harm in it. I do not know what the report is, or what the Senator proposes to do; but if he is allowed to make the report, it is clear that it goes over one day under objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Nevada has no desire to take it up and does not request that it be taken up, but that he simply desires to make the report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to make the report.

Mr. SMOOT. So that the Vice President may know my position, I want to state it. There have been two Senators objecting in the past to this. I have been requested in their absence to object to the report being received, and I carried out what I considered to be my duty, and I therefore object.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is a most amazing thing, it seems to me, that when there is no business whatever before the Senate a report from a committee can not be received and put upon the calendar. Now, it was claimed that unanimous consent was required for that, and objection was made. I then obtained the floor and moved that it be received.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not do that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Why not? There is no business whatever before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent. The Chair has done everything the Chair can do for the Senator from Nevada. If the objection is withdrawn, the report can be made and the bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. Then the Chair can not do anything further.

NATURAL OYSTER BEDS IN TEXAS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring) of March 2, 1915, I return herewith Senate bill No. 3362, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters along the coast and within the State of Texas."

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 3, 1915.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is a clerical error in the bill just returned by the President of the United States, and I want to have it corrected in order that it may be passed by to-morrow. I had the bill returned in order that the error might be corrected. It will take only a moment. I ask for the adoption of the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The concurrent resolution (No. 38) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 3362) "to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas" be, and is hereby, rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the words "and directed," in line 4 of the bill be stricken out and the words "in his discretion" substituted therefor.

LAWS OF PORTO RICO (H. DOC. NO. 1662).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 32 of the act of Congress, approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith certified copies of franchises granted by the Executive Council of Porto Rico, which are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War transmitting them to me.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 3, 1915.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On March 1, 1915:

S. 7402. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On March 2, 1915:

S. 6980. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 7213. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On March 3, 1915:

S. 5295. An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes; and

S. 6631. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poison in the consular districts of the United States in China.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19006) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOON, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. MADDEN managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2278. An act granting the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co. a right of way for its pipe lines and reservoir upon the Lincoln National Forest for the carrying and storage of water for railroad purposes;

S. 3878. An act to validate certain homestead entries;

S. 6981. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 7509. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 7555. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Suwanee River in the State of Florida;

H. J. Res. 366. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to use any allotment made under the provisions of an act approved October 2, 1914, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," for the improvement of East River and Hell Gate, N. Y.

OPERATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I rise merely to make a request. I have here on my desk some interesting and, I think, valuable documents furnished me at my request by the president of the Federal Reserve Board relating to the operation and utility of the banking and currency system, and also replying to some of the more current and usual criticisms of that system. I ask leave to have the data inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADVANTAGES OF NEW BANKING AND CURRENCY LAW.

1. The Federal reserve system has already resulted in a very great relief to the public, due to confidence that aid can be obtained when needed and to the recognition of the fact that banking has now been organized on a cooperative basis.

2. The rate of discount charged by city banks to their country correspondents has been materially lowered in the borrowing regions, inasmuch as the northern banks offering money in the market have found it necessary to meet the rates established by the Federal reserve banks and approved by the Federal Reserve Board, in order to avoid a transfer of business to the Federal reserve banks in the regions applying for loans.

3. The Federal reserve banks themselves have already extended accommodation to banks which were in need of such aid up to about $18,000,000, while they have stood ready to increase this amount of accommodation many times over if desired.

4. The Federal Reserve Board has taken important steps toward standardizing commercial paper, with the result that good paper throughout the country is in process of being rendered uniform and hence generally marketable, thereby insuring lower rates to actual borrowers.

5. The Federal Reserve Board has devised and will shortly establish a system of bank clearings which is expected to do much to remove the inequalities and excesses inherent in the present system of exchange.

6. The Federal reserve act has legalized loans by national banks on farm lands as security up to 25 per cent of capital, and has thereby assured to the farmers a resource of which they have already been making use, but which was not recognized by law.

7. By providing for the use of the acceptance principle the Federal reserve act has begun the work of establishing a discount market wherein bank credit will be estimated at its actual value over the risk, thereby aiding in the creation of a stable and uniform rate lower than could otherwise prevail and bringing our market into direct relationship with European markets.

8. The Federal reserve act has provided a currency absolutely elastic and available at the demand of the business community. The elasticity of the currency is already established by experience, and over $20,000,000 of it are in circulation.

9. The Federal reserve act has provided a means of supporting the credits of both the municipal and State governments and the National Government—the two former through the open-market provisions of the act, which have already enabled the reserve banks to take up the short-term securities of a number of municipalities and States; the latter through the provision which permits the Government of the United States to deposit with the new banks and permits the banks to deal in the securities of the National Government.

10. Above all the Federal reserve act has provided for genuine democratic control of the banking system, thereby enabling the small banks to exercise a decisive voice in the control of the underlying reserve resources of the Nation.

It has been suggested that the banks are subjected to hardship because of the necessity of depositing their reserves with the Federal reserve banks. This can be decided by considering the case of a country bank with $100,000 of deposits. Under the old system this bank would have had to keep 15 per cent reserve, or $15,000, of which 9 per cent, or $9,000, would probably have been deposited with a correspondent bank at 2 per cent interest, yielding a net return of $180. Under the new system this bank must keep 12 per cent reserve, which is ultimately to be held either in its own vault or in a Federal reserve bank. This leaves a margin of $3,000, which loaned out directly at 6 per cent would yield $180, or, if used as a reserve of 12 per cent, would sustain more than eight times its own amount in bank credits, or, in other words, would enable the bank to grant loans represented by deposit accounts to the amount of about $25,000, which at 6 per cent would yield $1,500 to the bank, assuming that the institution was able to find a demand for its credit in the form of loans to that extent.

The assertion frequently made that the reduction in reserve requirements does not help the banks, because they are obliged to keep funds with their city correspondents for exchange purposes, so that just as much is required as heretofore, is not true, since the banks can under the new clearing system keep their balances with the Federal reserve banks, as it was intended they should, thereby easily taking care of their collections, which will be made for them at cost.

CRITICISMS OF THE RESERVE SYSTEM.

There have been criticisms of the Federal reserve system, many of them emanating from banking sources, others instituted by persons with objects of their own to serve. I shall state them as frankly and as moderately as possible, and shall reply to each in due order.

There is complaint, first of all, because the Federal reserve banks are not paying their expenses and dividends.

No commercial bank during the first three months of its existence succeeds in covering its organization costs and its expenses. Several of the Federal reserve banks, however, are not only paying expenses but providing for their regular dividend charges. Others are amply covering their expenses but have not yet provided for dividends, simply because the period of seasonable activity has not arrived. There is no reason to doubt but that every bank in the system will, within a relatively short time, be not only paying expenses but covering its proportional share of dividends.

It is asserted that the banks of the system, and particularly the country banks, are subjected to hardships because of the necessity they are under of keeping a part of their reserves in the Federal reserve banks without interest.

The practice of paying interest on bank reserves, thereby diverting them from the natural channels and placing them at the services of speculation, has been one of the most injurious features of the banking system in the United States hitherto, and if it were true that the Federal reserve banks had eliminated this practice, even at the cost of some sacrifice to the member banks, the action would have been an amply worthy one. As a matter of fact, there has been absolutely no hardship to member banks as a result of the creation of the new institutions. So great a reduction was effected in reserves as much more than to offset the loss of interest occasioned by the requirement of a deposit with the Federal reserve banks. We may take the concrete case of the country bank with $100,000 of deposits. Under the old system this bank would have had to keep 15 per cent reserve, or $15,000, of which 9 per cent, or $9,000, would probably have been deposited with a correspondent bank at 2 per cent interest, yielding a net return of $180. Under the new system this bank must keep 12 per cent reserve, which is ultimately to be held either in its own vault or in a Federal reserve bank. This leaves a margin of $3,000, which, loaned out directly at 6 per cent, would yield $180; or, if used as a reserve of 12 per cent, would sustain ore than eight times its own amount in bank credits; or, in other words, would enable the bank to grant loans represented by deposit accounts to the amount of about $25,000, which, at 6 per cent, would yield $1,500 to the bank, assuming that the institution was able to extend its credit in the form of loans to that extent.

It is asserted that the Federal reserve system has helped to reduce the rates charged by member banks to customers since the Federal reserve banks have tended to make money easier and thereby to prevent member banks from getting as large a return as formerly. To this indictment the system must plead guilty. It was believed that one of its principal effects would be the reduction of rates of interest in those parts of the country where abnormal rates formerly prevailed, and that it would tend to place borrowers in a better position as customers at banks, thereby relieving them of the excessive rates of interest previously paid.

This change is beneficial rather than injurious to the banks of the community as a whole and affects only those institutions which have been in the habit of charging excessively high rates to the communities they furnished. The reduction in rates resulting from the establishment of the Federal reserve system has been highly beneficial thus far, and has been precisely what was aimed at by those who established it.

This leads me to a general observation concerning the working of the system. It is essentially a moderate and reasonable regulation of the banking institutions of the country. In the past they have been subject to practically no restriction whatever. It is now proposed to apply to them a little of the oversight that the community has deemed it wise to demand in the case of practically all other similarly situated businesses. The business of banking is of a quasi public nature, since the banks hold the resources of the community, and are thus properly subject to examination, inspection, and regulation. The Federal reserve act provides for these requisites in a moderate and conservative way. It contains nothing in the nature of of governmental supervision that can possibly be objected to by any reasonable student of conditions in the United States, and it will be the part of wisdom for banking institutions to accept the law and adapt themselves to its extremely reasonable requirements unless they are prepared to look forward to more severe action.

ADDRESS OF H. P. WILLIS, SECRETARY FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD, BEFORE CREDIT MEN'S ASSOCIATION, CINCINNATI, JANUARY 16, 1915.

No subject has been assigned me for this evening, but I shall discuss the "Federal reserve system; what it has done and what it must do."

The field to be covered is a large one, but I shall not trespass upon your time longer than is absolutely necessary to survey some of its principal features. Only about five months have elapsed since the Federal reserve system was fairly inaugurated by the induction of the Federal Reserve Board into office, and only about two months have elapsed since the reserve banks were opened. It is a traditional fact that "Rome was not built in a day," but a people constitutionally restless and desirous of quick results in education, business, and science alike expect and desire that a great transformation in banking and business practice shall be effected in little longer than that time. This may not be. The Federal reserve act has already passed through several distinct periods—one of bitter and unwarranted criticism, one of extravagant laudation, one of disappointment that it could not be called into existence instantly, and one of equal disappointment and criticism because its results were not yielded immediately upon the opening of the institutions. Yet it has already had important results. What these are I shall try to set forth.

The condition of affairs immediately after the opening of the European war is familiar to all. The stock and cotton exchanges of the country had closed, trade and commerce with Great Britain had been practically suspended, and large volumes of emergency currency and clearing-house certificates had been issued. It was under these conditions that the new board took office.

One of the earliest and most trying phenomena connected with the European war was the development of a highly abnormal foreign-exchange situation. This situation was essentially due to the suspension of gold payments by American banks and by the fact that a large current balance was due to Europeans, who, under ordinary circumstances, would have been willing to await the shipment of agricultural products from the United States in the autumn, but who were now in doubt as to the future course of international trade with the United States. Added to this was the embarrassment arising out of the sale of foreign holdings of American securities in order to get immediate funds. The reserve banks, had they been in active operation, would have been able to meet this situation with comparatively little difficulty. Investigation made by the Federal Reserve Board immediately upon its organization seemed to show that the current indebtedness of the United States to foreign countries was not in excess of $500,000,000, a sum whose maturity, of course, was spread over a period of several months. In the absence of the new banks, and in view of the fact that some weeks would necessarily be required for their establishment, it was deemed desirable to furnish a makeshift substitute for the cooperative effort which would have been available for the relief of the situation had the banks been in existence. It was therefore determined to suggest to a number of representative bankers the establishment of a joint gold fund to be used in providing exchange on Great Britain, and to have this joint fund developed at the earliest possible moment.

A letter was consequently sent out to the presidents of clearing-house associations throughout the country, under date of September 21, in which request was made for subscriptions to a fund intended to aggregate about $100,000,000. This letter had previously been considered and approved at meetings of representative bankers summoned to meet in Washington on September 4 and 19, respectively, and was, therefore, issued with their moral support. The answer to this invitation was prompt and effective, a total of over $108,000,000 being subscribed and rendered available.

It was almost immediately evident that the operation of this fund was proving decidedly beneficial, notwithstanding that only a comparatively small percentage of the amount subscribed was asked for, and that a still smaller percentage was actually used to furnish a basis for gold shipments. It seemed, however, during the 10 days immediately following the completion of the subscriptions as if there might be need for still further relief to the situation. Some of those who were closely connected with the administration of the gold-exchange fund brought the subject to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury, who extended an invitation to the British Government to send representatives to this country mainly for the purpose of considering the possibility of further adjustment, in the event that the United States did not succeed in liquidating its indebtedness to Great Britain by the natural movement of commodities within a reasonably early period.

The British Government designated Sir George Paish and Mr. B. P. Blackett, who proceeded to Washington and held conferences with the board. Subsequently another conference, attended by a number of representative New York bankers, was also held, and the situation was discussed in very great detail. Meantime, the establishment of a better understanding with reference to commodities to be considered as contraband and the more effective policing of the North Atlantic rendered possible the restoration of trade with European nations, and the development of the export trade proceeded with a speed which showed that current obligations of the United States to Great Britain and other countries would be liquidated at an early date without any necessity for further interference. By the time that the reserve banks were ready to open exchange sales on London had fallen to normal and there was, therefore, no danger that, when opened, the reserve banks might, as was for a time feared by some, find their gold rapidly drawn away from them in order to meet the requirements of the gold-export movement.

In another way it was deemed desirable that the board should help to facilitate the restoration of customary conditions in the financial market. Almost immediately after the outbreak of the war it was seen that, unless hostilities should terminate within a very much shorter period than anyone deemed likely, serious injury would be inflicted upon cotton-producing States. As is well known, the cotton crop is largely grown for export, about two-thirds of the total production of the United States being annually sold abroad. It happened that an unusually large crop had been planted and was approaching maturity at the moment of the outbreak of the war. This would, in any event, have depressed prices of cotton even under ordinary conditions.

The almost immediate closing of the cotton exchanges of the country was, however, precipitated by reason of the interruption to the movement of cotton, and the general understanding that, in view of the great area involved in the hostilities, it would not be reasonable to expect a normal demand for the staple to manifest itself. With the exchanges closed and with shipments of cotton interrupted, the price was unstable and abnormally low, many sales undoubtedly having occurred at 5 cents per pound. Inasmuch as the cotton crop is raised very largely upon credit, it was necessary to provide some means whereby the southern planter could be assisted to such extension of accommodation as he might require in meeting the obligations he would ordinarily have provided for by the sale of his crop in the open market. Various suggestions were brought to the attention of the board, one of them being that of Mr. Festus J. Wade, of St. Louis, who suggested both to the board and to the Secretary of the Treasury the establishment of a cotton loan fund somewhat similar in purpose and management to the gold-exchange fund. After very anxious consideration, the conclusion was reached that some measure of the sort would probably furnish relief to cotton growers, and would, at the same time, reduce the strength of the demand which would otherwise be brought to bear upon the reserve banks at their opening from those who desired comparatively long-term loans to enable them to carry their cotton. Various conferences were held with banking interests for the purpose of securing their cooperation and advice in regard to the matter. Ultimately the bankers of New York pledged $50,000,000 in subscriptions to the fund, provided that $50,000,000 more should be raised from other banks in noncotton-producing States. It was understood that to the $100,000,000 thus raised should be added $35,000,000 contributed by the bankers of the cotton-producing States under a special plan devised for that purpose.

Recognizing that in view of the urgent character of the situation regarding the establishment of the banks it was not possible to formulate in advance of their opening a complete set of regulations with reference to their conduct in all matters, it was determined to pass at the outset only upon those matters which were deemed absolutely essential to placing the banks in operation upon a basis of moderate and reasonable efficiency. It was felt that the regulations relating to discount operations and commercial paper in general were fundamental and that they should be granted first place in any scheme of organization which might be undertaken. The result was the preparation of a document addressed to all Federal reserve agents, sent to them as circular No. 13, in which the board set forth its views with reference to the character of operations that should be undertaken by the banks, particularly at the outset. In this it was recommended that the reserve banks confine themselves strictly to short-term, self-liquidating paper growing out of commercial, industrial, and agricultural operations, in the narrow sense of the terms, and that particular care should be taken not to discount or purchase paper which had been issued for the primary purpose of increasing the capital investment of any business. This circular was well received, and has governed the discount operations of the reserve banks up to the present time, though it is thought well to relax in some measure the restrictions imposed at the outset under this document.

It was deemed essential that so far as possible the cash to be paid into the banks at the outset should be drawn from the vaults of the contributing member banks. Inasmuch as the act provided that capital should be paid in gold or gold certificates, it was to be assumed that the bulk of such payments would, in any event, be made from the vaults of the member banks. Reserves, however, might, of course, be made in any form of lawful money, and the act itself had expressly provided that one-half of the reserve installments might be paid in the form of rediscounted paper. It was therefore necessary to appeal to the good judgment and spirit of cooperation of the member banks in order to induce them to abstain from establishing reserves through some means other than that of a direct deposit of cash from their own vaults and to pay in, so far as possible, the sums that were due from them to the member banks on reserve account in the form of gold or gold certificates. With this in mind, the board transmitted to member banks on October 28 its circular No. 10, in which banks were urged to make their payments in the manner already indicated. As a special inducement, reserve banks were authorized to pay the express charges upon sums thus sent to them by member banks. There was at no time any provision of law directing the member banks to abstain from drawing upon their correspondent banks for the means wherewith to make these payments, but it was believed that they would be willing to do so, and the events fully justified this confidence.

On Monday, the 16th of November, the date already fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the new banks opened their doors for business and the consolidated statement issued on the following Saturday showing the condition as of the previous evening indicates how fully the banks had complied with the suggestions thus made to them. The statement referred to shows that at the end of the first week's operations there had been paid into the reserve banks a total of $221,487,000, of which a very large percentage was either in gold or gold certificates. It should be added that, due to the cheerful cooperation of the member banks, this great transfer of funds was accomplished without the slightest danger to business and without any inconvenience whatever to the banking community.

With the system thus fortunately established, the question of a discount policy immediately became urgent. The board had been appealed to by the authorized representatives of the several banks for some 10 days prior to the official date set for the opening of the institutions to make suggestions to them with regard to their discount policy, for it was generally conceded that the adoption of a uniform, consistent policy to be pursued by all was practically necessary to the smooth working of the system. Under the provisions of paragraph (b), section 14, of the Federal reserve act, the Federal Reserve Board is authorized to review and determine the rates of discount to be charged by each Federal reserve bank, and this authority was interpreted to mean that suggestions might be made to each institution in advance with reference to the rate that would be acceptable to the board. The interpretation was seemingly assented to by all of the reserve banks, and in response to a telegraphic inquiry from the board each bank submitted its views with respect to the rate of discount properly to be applied in its region. Upon tabulation and comparison of these results, it was found that they varied comparatively little, the rates ranging from 5 per cent to 7 per cent. A study of the existing state of affairs convinced the board that at the start conservatism should be the guiding policy in establishing the first discount rates, and it was consequently voted to set the rates of discount at from 5½ per cent to 6½ per cent, with subsequent changes.

The important effect of the establishment of these rates of discount was to prevent accommodation from being asked by member banks except in those cases where there was a real need for it, since the rates were too high to encourage the borrowing of funds from the reserve institutions simply for the sake of undertaking new operations or of extending those already in existence. As was expected, therefore, the amount of accommodation applied for at most of the banks was small and increased but little subsequently, the maximum being under $3,000,000 for all of the banks of the system, while business later still declined from this figure, until on the 26th of December it stood at $8,552,000.

In order to understand the significance of these figures it is necessary to refer to another feature of the Federal reserve act and to study this feature in connection with the money market conditions prevailing at the time. Section 19 of the Federal reserve act provided for a readjustment of reserves upon a new and lower basis, cutting the percentage of required reserve in central reserve cities from 25 per cent to 18 per cent of outstanding demand deposits, with 5 per cent of outstanding time deposits; the required percentage in reserve cities from 25 per cent to 15 per cent of demand deposits and 5 per cent of time deposits; the percentage of reserve in country banks from 15 per cent to 12 per cent of demand deposits and 5 per cent of time deposits. This readjustment, by the terms of the law, took effect immediately upon the establishment of the new banks, i. e., on November 16. From the outbreak of hostilities in Europe there had been a difficult reserve situation in most of the financial centers, New York banks particularly being much of the time largely under their reserve requirements because of the heavy drafts made upon them by interior banks and by the public.

The change in reserve requirements, however, made a very material alteration in this condition of affairs, and released, not only in New York but throughout the country, a very considerable amount of funds which had previously had to be held by the banks in order to bring themselves within the requirements of law. Precisely what amount of reserves was thus released throughout the country has not been accurately estimated and probably can not be, owing to the fact that reserve accounts in the existing system of correspondent banks are so closely and complexly intertwined. It is, however, an undoubted fact that the release of actual cash was very large and that the release of lending power, as computed on the basis of reserves on the part of member banks, was correspondingly larger. Member banks were thereby enabled to extend loans to their customers very much more freely than they had previously been able to do, while at the same time they were able to grant lower rates of interest in due proportion. The prevailing rate of discount for prime commercial paper in New York at the opening in November was about 6 per cent, while other paper was considerably higher than that figure, and even more difficult conditions prevailed elsewhere. The opening of the reserve system enabled New York banks, in view of the very great relief given to them through the release of reserves, to reduce this rate largely, and within two weeks after the new banks had come into existence prevailing interest rates for the best paper went as low as 3½ and 4 per cent, while acceptances, which had been provided for by the Federal reserve act, were marketed at a still lower rate. In some parts of the South northern bankers were able to grant accommodation as low as 4 per cent and in considerable amounts. In view of the greater ease and material relief which was thus accorded, the Federal reserve banks were naturally not called upon to assist member banks with accommodation, such banks naturally refraining from asking aid when they were themselves fully able to meet the demands made upon them.

The opening of the reserve banks on November 16 not only released, as already seen, a large amount of bank funds and thereby rendered it possible to extend many loans, which otherwise could not have been carried by the banks, but it was also seen soon after November 16 that the existence of the cotton fund, as was the case with the gold fund, had done its work by stimulating confidence and leading to a more liberal extension of credit. With the cotton fund available for long-time loans, and with short-term credit much more freely extended by member banks in view of the reduction of national bank reserve requirements, it was possible for the reserve banks to open with full confidence that the work thus done in safeguarding the situation would relieve them from undue strain, while fully protecting the cotton producers who are willing to pay a moderate rate of interest in order to carry their cotton until such time as would enable them to realize full market value for it. In this case, as in that of the gold exchange fund, the help granted was largely that which comes from cooperative effort, and from the knowledge on the part of the community that there is a source of assistance that may confidently be looked to. In such situations the beneficial consequence of action taken can not be measured by the actual amounts that are loaned or the tangible results that are obtained, but are infinitely greater in their significance. The opening of the cotton exchanges, by reestablishing a definite market price for cotton, coupled with the upward tendency of that price in view of the increasingly strong foreign demands materially aided in facilitating the process of liquidation in the Southern States. Largely in consequence of these efforts, therefore, there has been little call for accommodation at the reserve banks intended to finance cotton directly.

One phase of the banking and currency situation deserves to be especially stressed for the light it throws upon the condition of the reserve banks, and the extent of the demands, present and prospective, to which they may be subject. As has been shown by the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report, an early phenomenon of the war was the issue by clearing houses in many cities of clearing-house certificates. Simultaneously therewith large quantities of emergency currency were issued under the provisions of the act of 1908, which had been amended and extended by the Federal reserve act, and which were still further amended by Congress on August 4 so as to overcome the freer issue of notes in the manner indicated.

It is not possible to state how large an issue of clearing-house certificates was put into circulation. The total amount of the emergency currency taken had aggregated about $380,000,000, but it is probable that the clearing-house certificates were issued to a considerably greater sum. The channels of circulation were thus clogged long before the end of the summer, notwithstanding the fact that large quantities of gold and gold certificates were withdrawn and hoarded either by banks or individuals. This condition of affairs made it certain that the reserve banks upon their organization would not be instantly pressed for the issue of reserve notes. Two factors combined to produce this result—the circumstance that many banks had placed their best paper with the national currency associations in order to protect emergency currency, and the further circumstance that the tax on this currency at the lower rate established by Congress would not for some considerable time be likely to approximate the rate of discount which every bank would have to pay to Federal reserve banks in order to get the rediscounts that would enable them to obtain the notes they needed.

Combined with these factors was, of course, the natural inertia which in all such cases tends to prevent the withdrawal of one kind of currency and the issue of another. Upon the organization of the Federal reserve banks, moreover, the urgent pressure for note accommodation passed away as quickly as it had come. Gold reappeared in circulation at an early date, and the retirement both of the clearing-house certificates and of the emergency currency was undertaken. In those cities where rates of interest on clearing-house certificates were very high, the reserve banks aided in the retirement of the certificates remaining in circulation. This was notably the case in New York.

The emergency currency itself immediately began to be retired by natural process, thus leaving in circulation not to exceed $8,000,000 to-day, February 18, 1915. It may be expected that with the lower rates of discount prevailing at the reserve banks, and with the continually heightening rate of taxation which the emergency currency has to pay, there will be a gradual conversion of such currency into Federal reserve notes, at least for that portion of the supply which may be regarded as needed for some time to come. Thus far there has been little of this conversion for the reasons already stated. Had the reserve banks been in operation at the beginning of August they would naturally have supplied the great volume of currency which was called for; but not having done so, a field of business which would naturally be theirs has been temporarily taken from them by reason of the fact that it was occupied by the clearing-house certificates and emergency notes in the way already indicated.

The Federal reserve act wisely provided in section 14 for the prosecution of business by Federal reserve banks in the open market, if the Federal reserve banks found it desirable to do so in order to keep their spare funds occupied. As has already been seen, the board did not believe that it was necessary at the outset to make immediate provision for the exercise of these functions, reserving them to a later date. As soon, however, as the first pressure connected with the establishment of the system had passed, the duty of investigating and preparing for such open-market operations was taken up, and the banks were, on December 18, given authority to purchase Government bonds within the limits of prudence as they might see fit. On December 23 copies of a tentative set of regulations relating to the purchase of warrants, revenue bonds, and the like by States, municipalities, and other political subdivisions were likewise transmitted. Drafts of regulations governing the purchase of acceptances in the open market have been prepared and will shortly be issued. Other open-market functions will be provided for as rapidly as possible. When this has been done, there will be ample occupation for all funds which the reserve banks can properly spare at times when their spare funds are not required in affording accommodation based strictly upon commercial or industrial demand.

But while the work which has thus far been done has been beneficial, I should not be meeting the requirements of this occasion were I to stop with a mere recital of facts which are now widely known, and, I believe, fully appreciated, at least by the thoughtful men of the country, and particularly by the banking public. As the President has said, our thoughts are now more of the future than of the past. We have left behind the controversial aspects of the Federal reserve system, we have passed through the critical period of organization, and we are face to face with the question, What shall we do with this system?

It is evident that there may be two ideas with regard to it. Indeed, both of these ideas are already expressed and have found urgent and able advocates. One of them is that the system is merely a form of insurance against panic, an emergency plan which may be called into existence whenever it is needed, and allowed to go out of use whenever the immediate call for it is over. It should be said that this is the conception of banking which has long governed, and that most of the reform plans of past years have been modeled upon the idea that what was wanted was simply a means of relief for hard-pressed banks which found themselves face to face with the necessity of getting aid or falling into disaster. I think it is no reflection upon the measure known as the Aldrich bill to say that it was upon this view that that plan was based; but as opposed to such an idea there are now many who believe that the banking system which has been established with so much difficulty and sacrifice is to be used constantly, and that its resources are to be employed for the purpose of making money cheap, affording a constant and unfailing supply of loans, and otherwise assisting to furnish ordinary resources for use in business. The advocates of this view are prone to speak of the plan as having been devised for the purpose of lowering rate of interest and of attacking what is known as the Money Trust. I confess that there has been a great deal of misunderstanding upon all these points, and that many expressions have been used by persons who should have been more careful in the use of language, which appear to afford some warrant for ideas of this kind. Every system and every cause suffers from the mistaken zeal of new converts, and the Federal reserve system is no exception to the rule.

The crimes which are traditionally committed in the name of liberty are often paralleled in business under the mistaken belief that they are to serve as benefits to the average man. If we examine the real nature of the Federal reserve system, I think we shall come to the conclusion that it is neither an emergency relief plan to be availed of only under extraordinary conditions, on the one hand, and that, on the other, it is not a system to be used for the purpose of affording loans on doubtful security or unsound paper. It is a segregation of the reserve funds of the country. Its resources are the great trust fund to be used for the purposes inherent in the trusteeship. Success in the administration of this trust will depend upon the degree in which its terms are understood and the conditions under which sincere and earnest effort is made in accordance with the terms of the law to administer it. I believe that the reserve system has been aptly compared by some one who was recently discussing the question to an extra dynamo which is kept in reserve in a power house for the purpose of carrying the peak of the load during the rush hours of the day. It is not a duplicate of existing machinery to be used when a breakdown has occurred, still less is it a machine to be called into use for constant service in conjunction with the other equipment of the plant. It is a mechanism which is regularly needed, but is needed under special and given conditions, which is treated differently from other mechanisms. The simile I have thus used implies, however, what I may call a Federal reserve dynamo, is subjected to actual working conditions and is in regular and constant working order. We can not throw it out of gear or allow it to lack lubrication, or keep it carefully housed but never in use if we expect the machinery to be of service when the time comes. Now, what does this imply?

In the first place, the Federal reserve system must get business. It must have a steady supply of business, and this for the very good reason that if its officers are not in the habit of doing business, they can not do business satisfactorily or readily when they are subjected to strain. Furthermore, if the Federal reserve bank is never actively in the market, it can not influence the market materially. It must be able to affect business by withdrawing from quite as readily as by enlarging its operations. The framers of the Federal reserve act fortunately foresaw this necessity and provided for it. While the act was so framed as to limit the direct discounting of notes to those presented by member banks, the act in its open-market section afforded an ample opening for all the business that the Federal reserve institutions might care to do. It allowed them to purchase in the open market bills of exchange and other items of commercial paper under the same circumstances and conditions as it would had they come to it from a member bank, except that these operations were operations of purchase and not those of discount with the proceeds left on deposit with the reserve institutions. The Federal Reserve Board has already recognized that the reserve institutions may employ a part of their funds to good advantage in such a way as to provide a revenue for themselves through this open-market power. It has issued regulations governing the purchase of warrants; it has indicated its disposition to open transactions in Government bonds, and it will shortly issue regulations relating to acceptances and to other forms of open-market transactions. Let me say here, with the utmost emphasis, that there will be ample employment for all the funds that Federal reserve banks can or ought to support, and that they will be able to employ these funds in such a manner as amply to provide for their legitimate expenses and for a reasonable rate of return upon the sums invested in them by the member banks.

To those who are disposed to suggest that the Federal reserve banks can not pay their expenses and dividends, I would simply say that the payment of these expenses and dividends is not a matter of power or ability, but is simply one of willingness or disposition. If we say, in round numbers, that the Federal reserve system has $300,000,000 in cash, and if we assume that the capital stock when paid in will be in the neighborhood of $60,000,000, it is evident that to pay 6 per cent on this capital stock would require the investment of but a small fraction of the bank's reserves in the warrants, bonds, acceptances, bills of exchange, and other forms of investment open to the banks through the open-market power. To invest it safely and wisely and to keep it so invested would, for the staff of men now engaged in operating the Federal reserve banks, be the work of but a small part of their time.

But I suppose there is no one here who would want to see the reserve institutions employ one-third or even less of their funds in such a way if that action meant they were to put out of their hands and into those of others the actual cash corresponding to the transactions. Were they to do so, they would become money lenders, loaning out the ultimate reserves of the country and getting them back as best they could. This would not be banking. It would be note broking or investment. I do not believe that this is the legitimate function of the Federal reserve banks. The open-market power is a valuable and useful one, and enables them to keep their funds employed, and, as I have already noted, to exert a useful influence at times when that influence is sorely needed and could not be exerted through the ordinary medium of rediscount operations. It must be evident, however, that the reserve banks can not be of first-class service to the community on this basis. They must receive funds as well as pay them out; they must be of actual beneficial use to their members, otherwise the members will not be satisfied with the mere 6 per cent they are to receive on their stock subscriptions.

How can this be accomplished? Very simply, I think, by merely following the well-marked lines of scientific banking. If you were to make me a present of $1,000, I should be pleased; but if you were to say to me in substance, "You may place this money in a bank, but you must never draw it out, and I will not permit you even to check against it or even to deposit an equal amount of checks corresponding to those you draw," I should form an entirely different idea of the value of the gift. In order to make the deposit of any material use, I must be permitted to employ it in my business or personal affairs. This is why the Federal reserve act provided for the clearing of checks for member banks. It was recognized that if the reserve institutions were ultimately to take over the reserves of member banks, except those carried in the vaults, they must also be prepared to handle the exchange transactions of the banks themselves. They were, therefore, empowered to receive checks and drafts upon their member banks and to charge them off against all such members. They were, it is true, directed to receive these checks and make the transfer at par, and ultimately to charge their members such sums only as would cover the actual expenses involved in the operations. Thus far the Federal reserve banks have not done this. At the outset, owing to the necessity of opening the institutions as early as possible, it was agreed that they should receive only a limited number of items. Subsequently Federal reserve banks began to receive checks upon all other Federal reserve banks, and still later three of the reserve institutions inaugurated, by consent of the Federal Reserve Board, a system of general clearance in all other districts, still retaining, however, substantial limitations upon this type of business. It is to be expected that before long the system thus begun will be extended, and that it will ultimately make its way to that complete application which the act contemplated.

In so doing it will render a great service to the business men, and, incidentally, to the great majority of bankers. That so large a transformation of existing banking practice will, to no small extent, involve inconvenience in many quarters, I am fully prepared to believe. No great business improvement ever occurred without some suffering. Every mechanical advance inflicts some hardship upon those who are using older mechanical appliances, or whose skill is rendered out of date as the result of the new methods that are thus applied.

That this is true in the case of the clearing operations seems to me very likely; but that this transformation will be of immense benefit to the banking and business community as a whole, far surpassing in its usefulness such incidental inconvenience as may be caused, I am equally positive. I do not need to insist before an audience of professional men upon the great advantage of clearance over collections. The labor-saving quality of the system is obvious, and there can be no doubt of the immense increase in the efficiency of money and bank credit under such a system. Who is there among you that would willingly go back to the older system of collection, abandoning the present clearing-house plan as applied to the various cities of the country? Why should it be considered unreasonable that the same advantages that have been realized there would likewise be realized by Federal reserve districts as a whole? The only logical answer that can be given to such a question is in the affirmative; and the only objection that can be made to proceeding with the work is that there are some difficulties in the way. A difficulty is something to be overcome, not something to be stopped; and in this case we are fortunate in having the assurance of the best transit men in the country that the clearing system of the Federal reserve act is amply feasible and easily to be introduced.

Do not think that I am placing too much stress upon this phase of the situation. If the clearing system were merely a means of introducing some labor-saving device I could hardly feel warranted in assigning to it the importance that I do. It is much more than that. Under the Aldrich bill as proposed, as under most of its predecessors, the proposal for relief was found in the issue of notes. These notes, by the terms of the Aldrich bill, would have been legal tender and would have been made available in member bank reserves. The Federal reserve bank notes are neither legal tender nor are they available in member bank reserves; but, on the contrary, every provision that could be thought of was made for their early and prompt redemption. They will be speedily redeemed and their volume will never be larger than that which is demanded by the needs of the community. The member banks which desire to build up their reserves must do so by securing book credits with the Federal reserve banks, and these book credits can be of service only as they are made available to the banks, i. e., only in proportion as they are rendered active, serviceable, and flexible by giving to the member banks the utmost liberty of action in drawing upon these deposits and in using them as a basis of their exchange operations. When that has been done it may truly be said that the check is an actual form of currency, paralleling the note, not only in its utility and serviceability but in its power to convey value at par throughout the length and breadth of the Nation. To give the Federal reserve act its true value, this system must be made effective and workable, for without it the act is nothing more than a torso deprived of its hands and feet. It will be a mere inert though living mass, incapable of active motion in the world of institutions to which it belongs.

I do not believe that the process of developing the Federal reserve system to its full stature and of making it a living force will be an immediate one. The problems it involves are too difficult; the tasks which must be performed are too involved and require too much change from existing methods to permit of their being hastily embarked upon or immediately carried through to success. Time will be required both for the complete working out of the clearing system and for the realization of the ideals in relation to commercial paper which the Federal Reserve Board has set before itself and to which ultimately, it is to be hoped, the system will approximate. In reaching this full measure of its stature, those who are engaged in developing the act must, of necessity, rely upon the banking community for aid and support. Unwise friends of the system have suggested that it could be carried through to success without such aid on the part of the bankers. That is not possible. No piece of machinery can be successfully operated without intelligence and sympathy on the part of the operator. A good machine in the hands of a poor operator is a failure, and a poor one in the hands of a good operator is often a success. This is quite as true in banking as it is in mechanics. To the bankers of the country, then, the Nation as a whole will look for the success of the Federal reserve system. The bankers can not stand aside even if they would and say that they are not responsible, or that the system has been forced upon them and that they are not in sympathy with it. They have, in fact, accepted it; have provided the resources for the establishment of the Federal reserve banks. They are deeply interested in the success of the system from a financial standpoint. Not to have it successful would be an incalculable disaster to the banking community.

It would put back the cause of banking reform many years. Neither can it be assumed that a partial failure of the system to produce its results would lead to the modification of the law along helpful or desirable lines; on the contrary, it would be likely to open the way to extreme, drastic, and unfair legislation, so much of which has from time to time been suggested. This in itself would be a disaster of tremendous proportions. The way to avoid it is to see that the new reserve institutions are amply and abundantly successful, and to permit them to remedy, so far as their power extends, the evils and shortcomings of American banking—evils and shortcomings which, I am sure, no conscientious banker would deny, but which the bankers have themselves been foremost in pointing out in years past.

Sympathetic and helpful promotion of the ends of the system is thus the dictate not only of patriotism but of self-interest. I believe it will be so considered by those who are recognized in their several communities as leaders. Recognizing you as among this number, and knowing how largely and how generously in the past both the bankers in this portion of the country and the representatives of the Credit Men's Association have cooperated in the effort to secure helpful improvements in banking legislation, I appeal confidently to you for consideration of the ideas I have suggested, and for the extension of that large measure of influence and support which you are so amply able to supply.

ABSTRACT OF SPEECH DELIVERED BY CHARLES S. HAMLIN, GOVERNOR OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD, BEFORE THE CHICAGO REAL ESTATE BOARD, CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 13, 1915.

The 12 Federal reserve banks, under the new banking system, were opened on November 16, 1914. Although barely 10 weeks have elapsed since their opening, much has been accomplished in the way of placing the operation of our banking system on a secure, firm foundation.

We can better understand what the new system is if we consider the conditions which existed under the old system, under which there were approximately 7,500 independent banks and 7,500 independent reserves. Although called reserves they could not in fact be used except in violation of law, and if at any time they happened to fall below the legal limit, the bank was legally required to suspend business until they were restored, and nothing but the forbearance of the Comptroller of the Currency could save the bank from being placed in the hands of a receiver in case the depleted reserves were not restored.

I have said that these reserves were all independent; there was, however, a certain interdependence caused by the deposit of a certain portion of the reserves with reserve agents in reserve cities, but this interdependence was one rather of danger than of security.

Furthermore, when the banks had performed their function of discounting notes, the notes discounted remained in the bank vaults, buried beyond hope of resurrection until maturity, and if a bank were to take these notes out of its vaults and rediscount them, such an act tended to make people distrust its condition.

In addition, the national-bank currency issued by the banks was chained to Government bonds. When contraction was necessary it was difficult to secure it; when expansion was needed it was slow and cumbersome, often taking effect only after the necessity had passed away. In fact these national-bank notes often increased when they should have decreased, and, conversely, decreased when they should have increased.

It was certainly a strange anomaly to link together the national currency, supposedly responsive to the needs of expanding business, with Government bonds representing war and other necessities of the past. Yet this is what the former system did; the extension of the trade and commerce of the twentieth century was indissolubly linked with the evidences of the destruction of trade and commerce of the nineteenth century. While there may have been some justification for this strange alliance in the nineteenth century, there is surely none in this twentieth century, and it is earnestly to be hoped that the method provided in the Federal reserve act for retiring the national-bank currency and substituting the new Federal reserve notes may prove efficacious.

The old banking system rested in effect upon the call loan. The bank had to have liquid assets, and the call loan was the only liquid asset. How liquid such assets were was seen by the panic of 1907, and again in 1914, when the closing of the stock exchanges took from such loans the only semblance of liquidity they had.

The dependence of our banking system upon assets which were liquid only when liquidity was not needed and which were unsalable at times when liquid assets were needed has resulted in a banking system which financial experts pronounce as one of the worst in the world and utterly unsuited to the financial needs of the United States.

The United States is entitled to the best banking system in the world, and I believe the Federal reserve system, just established, will fully meet its needs.

The extraordinary events just prior to the opening of the Federal reserve banks are familiar to all. The steady exportation of our gold, the unprecedentedly high rates for foreign exchange, the derangement of our export trade caused by the war, the constantly increasing balances against us on current international commercial transactions, the piling up of reserves by many banks throughout the country at a time when they should have drawn upon them, and finally the hoarding of gold by both banks and individuals, culminated in a condition probably the most ominous in the history of our country.

How our new banking system was able to meet this dangerous situation and how successfully we emerged from it constitutes an epoch in the financial history of the world. A slight study of the situation will reveal some of the difficulties and what was done to overcome them.

During the calendar year 1914 there was exported from the United States gold to the amount of over two hundred and twenty-two millions; during the same period there was imported over fifty-seven millions, the net exports amounting to about one hundred and sixty-five millions. For the same period the production of gold in the United States amounted approximately to ninety-two millions. The total stock of gold held by the Treasury, the banks, and in circulation on January 1, 1914, was estimated to be approximately one thousand nine hundred and four millions, while on January 1, 1915, it was estimated to be about one thousand eight hundred and fifteen millions, a decrease of eighty-nine millions.

When it is considered that the United States was able to export one hundred and sixty-five millions of gold in the calendar year and yet reduce its total gold by only eighty-nine millions, a decrease of only 4.6 per cent, some idea of the strength of the United States in gold holdings and gold production will be conveyed.

Certain unusual relief measures were also undertaken and successfully accomplished, which, in connection with the operations of the Federal reserve system, turned the tide and brought about confidence in place of fear and financial stability in place of unsound monetary conditions.

Among these measures was the deposit by the Secretary of the Treasury of crop-moving funds of about $37,000,000 in banks in different parts of the country, all of which was promptly returned, together with over $267,000 in interest. In addition, the Secretary of the Treasury issued and shipped to various banks about $380,000,000 of Aldrich-Vreeland emergency currency, of which all but about $50,000,000 has already been redeemed. This latter measure of relief was made possible by the Federal reserve act which amended the so-called Aldrich-Vreeland Act by lowering the tax imposed upon the notes and increasing the limit of issue. The redemption of these notes was also facilitated by the Federal reserve notes.

These measures gave much relief to the situation, but much was left to be done to place our finances on an absolutely sound basis.

A careful investigation into the international indebtedness of our people abroad showed that our current indebtedness was about $500,000,000, all payable in gold. To take care of this situation pending the revival of our export trade, a gold fund of over $100,000,000 was subscribed by the banks, national and State, in the reserve cities. This fund quickly demonstrated the desire and ability of our people to pay all their foreign obligations, properly payable in gold, in that metal, and this, too, in face of the fact that a large indebtedness owed us from abroad could not be liquidated because of the moratorium in England and other foreign countries.

As the result of the opening of the Federal reserve system and of these relief measures, confidence quickly took the place of uncertainty and little gold had to be shipped out of the country. In a comparatively short space of time our increasing exports took the place of gold, which otherwise must have been shipped. Foreign exchange fell to the importing point and our country became a creditor instead of a debtor.

In order to relieve the situation in the South, a cotton fund of $135,000,000 was subscribed, so that the agriculturists who were producing cotton were enabled to make long-time loans based on cotton security. As was the case with the gold fund, but little of this fund was used, but the fact that it existed was a powerful incentive to a restoration of confidence and it accomplished its work successfully.

The establishment of the Federal reserve system has been, as I have said, a potent cause in our financial recovery, and it is well to point out upon what theory the system is based and what it has already accomplished.

In the first place it established lower reserve requirements, thus releasing an enormous amount of cash as a basis for future credit operations. It mobilized a material proportion of the reserves of the banks in the Federal reserve banks, thus furnishing a fund from which banks could be assisted in rediscounting commercial paper. Thus commercial paper, which previously had to be held in the vaults of the banks until maturity, can now be used as a basis for rediscounts at Federal reserve banks, and this paper has now become a liquid asset, far more liquid than the call loan on the stock exchange.

An elastic note issue was also provided for secured by a 40 per cent gold reserve and by commercial paper up to the face value of the notes issued. Thus we have at hand a really elastic currency rising and falling in response to the needs of agriculture, commerce, and industry. Acceptances in the import and export trade are also permitted to be discounted by Federal reserve banks, and the member banks for the first time were authorized to accept bills drawn upon such transactions.

It can be stated with confidence that under the Federal reserve system we shall see no more financial panics. The member banks no longer need to keep a dollar in excess of their lawful reserves. They can even check against and withdraw their reserves deposited in the Federal reserve banks, under regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, which latter board can suspend any and all reserve requirements of the act when deemed necessary.

Under the Federal reserve system the member banks have to furnish the capital for the Federal reserve banks and deposit a material part of their reserves in said banks. Every dollar of this amount is held in trust for agriculture, commerce, and industry of the United States, and is forever removed from the call-loan market. In addition, every dollar deposited by the Government with the Federal reserve banks, over and above what is checked against for paying Government debts, is impressed with a similar trust for the same purposes.

The transfer of capital and reserve deposits was made by the member banks without the slightest trouble and without the slightest confusion in business. Many feared that these transfers could not be accomplished without calling in loans and otherwise injuring legitimate business, but this fear was quickly dispelled when it was found how easily and simply the transfer was made. The Federal Reserve Board requested the banks to make these payments, as far as possible, out of their own vaults and also, as far as possible, in gold, and the banks cheerfully complied with this request, so that at the present time a very large proportion of the assets of the Federal reserve banks consist of gold or gold certificates.

Up to the present time very little recourse has been had to the Federal reserve banks by the member banks, the amount of discounts and the issue of Federal reserve notes being very small. There is no necessity, however, at the present time for such assistance on the part of the Federal reserve banks except in certain portions of the country, but within a few months, undoubtedly, these banks will be drawn upon to a very large extent by the member banks.

The fear has been expressed that the Federal reserve banks will have difficulty in earning enough money to pay their expenses and the dividends on their capital stock. I believe this fear to be groundless; but if it were not groundless it would not mean that the Federal reserve system is a failure. The founders of the system established these banks, not to make money but to serve as helpers of the member banks, and through them to insure to the people of the United States security, stability, and reasonable rates for advancements and accommodations, through discount and open-market operations.

How far the system has already gone in helping the people of the United States will be seen from the fact that just prior to the opening of the reserve banks the rates on commercial paper in the large financial centers were 6 per cent or over and very difficult to obtain, while in other parts of the country they were much higher. At the present time, however, these rates have declined at least 25 per cent, and everything points to more nearly uniform rates of discount over the whole country.

Much has been said about the true function of the Federal reserve banks. Some claim that they are purely emergency banks, while others seem to feel that they are ordinary commercial banks which should at all times compete with the member banks. Neither of these extremes, however, represent the real function of the Federal reserve banks. Their duty is not alone to meet emergencies, but, so far as possible, to prevent emergencies from arising, and while ordinarily they do not and are not intended to compete with commercial banks, yet occasions may arise where such competition, through the exercise of their open-market powers, will be necessary for the protection of the people of the United States. It is often said that the Federal reserve banks are bankers' banks, but this is true only to the extent that they deal primarily with the member banks. Their true function, however, as above stated, is to protect the interests of the people, acting through the banks primarily, but whenever necessary acting outside of the banks.

The power of fixing the discount rates which has been vested in the Federal reserve banks, subject to review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, is a power which must be exercised for the benefit of the whole people, and the final responsibility for its exercise rests with the Federal Reserve Board.

From time to time complaints are heard as to the operation of the Federal reserve banks. Some bankers claim that they lose interest on reserve deposits in Federal reserve banks, which prior to the establishment of the system were deposited with reserve agents; also that they lose interest on the capital of the reserve banks furnished by them. A slight reflection, however, will show that these complaints are more imaginary than real, for the lower reserves established under the act has released a very large amount of cash, and this cash would sustain banking operations which will produce a profit far above any possible loss of interest on their capital or reserve deposits.

It should not be forgotten, moreover, that the stockholding banks are entitled to 6 per cent interest on their investments for the capital of these banks, and, as I have before stated, I do not doubt but that this interest will be earned.

Complaint is also made as to some of the regulations which have been issued by the Federal Reserve Board, especially those relating to discounts of commercial paper. It has been the constant effort of the Federal Reserve Board to simplify its regulations, and new regulations have been issued covering commercial paper which I believe will do away with many, if not all, of the objections heretofore raised. The board appreciates that the custom of merchants must be cautiously changed, and should not be subjected to a sudden disarrangement.

Another important question which is before the board is the admission of State banks into the Federal reserve system. Complaint has been made that the State banks once having joined the system can not withdraw. On the other hand, it is pointed out that the system established is a national system, and that such a system could not exist if its integral parts at any time could withdraw at will.

The question of regulations to be enacted on the matter of admission of State banks has already given rise to many differences of opinion. Some of the national banks contend that the State banks should divest themselves of all powers not given to national banks as a condition of entering into the system. On the other hand, many of the State banks claim that they have the right to enter the system with all their powers, except those which are expressly cut down by the Federal reserve act itself.

The Federal Reserve Board is fully conscious of the importance of the task assigned to it, and it is giving careful attention to all the problems which have arisen, with a view to carrying out the system loyally, not only in form but in spirit.

I believe that the system will be of the greatest advantage to the people of the United States, and will establish the United States on a solid foundation, which will in the near future make it the center of the world's financial exchanges.

PURCHASE OF STEAMER "DACIA" (S. DOC. NO. 979).

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], to which there was no objection, prompts me to make a request. The case of the steamer Dacia which has recently been taken into port by the French Government and about which there seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding is bound to become a question of some importance in this country. I said during the course of the speech of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] a few days ago all that I had to say about the purchaser of the Dacia, whom I have known for some time, but I have a complete statement from Mr. Breitung giving his entire connection with the Dacia purchase, and I am going to ask leave to have it printed as a public document. I believe that it will be very useful and that it is an eminently proper thing to do. I prefer that request, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I join in the request of the distinguished Senator from the State of Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I have examined the papers, and I am sure they will be of great interest to the general reading public. It is not to be overlooked that in a controversy of this character, particularly when it becomes the subject of diplomatic negotiations, public opinion is a factor that may well be reckoned with. I am unable to say, for want of information, anything about the transaction other than as appears from these papers, but they are certainly very persuasive that the transaction was an ordinary transaction, a purchase and a complete and bona fide sale. I am sure the information given will be interesting to the public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 966).

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word about the report. I think the committee of conference are to be commended for the work they have done. They had a very difficult task to adjust the differences between the two Houses on the naval bill, and I feel very sure that they have followed the lines that were practicable, and that if we disagree to the report now we imperil all the legislation involved in the bill. I certainly hope that the work of the conferees will be approved.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, on January 26, addressing the Senate on the naval appropriation bill, I used the following language:

> It would be little short of a crime for the Naval Committee, and for the Congress, too, if we rushed the construction of battleships until we know what lessons the war will teach and show to be wise.

Continuing, I said:

> It does seem to be time for Congress to go slow in expending these tens of millions of dollars because of some supposed necessity.

In pursuance of the policy that we ought to wait until the rivals, the British and German fleets, meet in battle, I introduced an amendment, which went into the bill in practically the same shape in which it was written. I would never have consented for the item providing for two battleships this year to have gone into the bill at all had not the Secretary of the Navy given me assurances that he would not let any contracts and would endeavor to have the plans so drawn as to make a battleship unsinkable, if possible.

With this assurance I was content, and the amendment proposed by me and adopted by both Houses orders a report to Congress at the next session on the best type of warship without limitations as to kind or cost. It would be far wiser to build 6 or even 10 of the right kind of war vessel than increase those that may be demonstrated to be useless if the development of the submarine continues. If it is ever proven that a submarine capable of 30 knots speed on the surface can be built, the days of the battleship are numbered.

I am unwilling to have the program on the increase of the Navy go to the country without this explanation and final word.

The strongest possible reasons exist for this opinion, as shown by Senator Chandler's letter. We already have under construction or authorized seven great sea monsters ranging from 28,000 to 33,000 tons displacement.

These superdreadnaughts will cost, all told, $100,000,000, and the contract for one has not even been let yet. Two more in the present bill make nine, and therefore the Secretary of the Navy is very wise not to hurry. It seems to me from conditions as they are now and the developments brought about by the European war that it may be considered wiser next winter when Congress reassembles, if we build any great war vessels at all, to build those with great speed and high-power guns—not less than 30 knots, perhaps 35, with 15-inch guns, perhaps 16-inch. Such ships could either run or fight, as circumstances might show to be wiser. One hundred millions' worth of ships that may be considered junk in 12 months from now is enough for even a rich country like this to own. I ask that the Secretary may read the following letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

JANUARY 27, 1915.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to thank you for the wisest advice upon Army and Navy yet given in or out of Congress. The professional naval or military official can never be trusted to judge wisely upon professional matters. Britain was misled by this class and adopted the dreadnaughts, which rendered most of her navy useless. Germany followed much later, after dreadnaughts had been developed. Thus Germany's naval forces soon began to rival Britain's. The British have hundreds of warships practically obsolete, and had to begin building new dreadnaughts to keep equal with Germany. Now, our country is liable to make the same mistake. There is no need of haste. Gen. Kitchener believes the present war is to be a long one. Our Republic to-day occupies an unrivaled position. The richest of all nations and the most prosperous, with a hundred millions of educated people, alert and vigorous beyond those of other nations, no enemy in sight, and one can scarcely be imagined. To build a great Navy or increase the Army would, in my opinion, be folly only equaled by one who declined to walk outside without a lightning rod down his back because once there was a man struck by lightning. The danger of war upon our country is not greater, unless our military and naval caste alarms other nations by foolishly enlarging our engines of destruction before we know which or what is to prove the errors of the foolish nations now rapidly exhausting their resources both in men, money, and credit.

With congratulations upon having proved yourself the wisest adviser of your country, I am,

Very truly, yours, ANDREW CARNEGIE.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I dislike to ask the indulgence of my brethren so often, but a sense of duty impelled me to ask to have read, so that it may get in the RECORD, the letter from Andrew Carnegie relating to the naval building program. I have mislaid this letter, and received a copy only this evening by wire. This letter speaks in such high terms of my poor services as a Senator that I feel obliged to briefly comment on some matters relating to it. I almost blush to be the instrument of its publication on account of this praise.

In the report of the armor-investigating committee which I presented this morning, and which will be published as a public document, will be found that when the committee was at Pittsburgh, at the Carnegie Steel Works, in the examination of Mr. Dinkey, the president of the company, facts were brought out which did Mr. Carnegie no credit. Quotations were made from a speech I delivered in the Senate on March 1, 1897, in which I criticized Mr. Carnegie very severely. He must have known of this criticism, and yet he wrote the letter just read at the desk, showing that he bears me no malice. He and I both are getting old and must soon appear before the Great Judge, and I do not want to do any man any injustice. I felt it to be my duty to bring out the facts as they were found to be in the first armor investigation with which I ever had anything to do, in 1897, as I feel it my duty to say what I am saying now.

Andrew Carnegie is a very remarkable man—one of the most remarkable of our time. He made his millions by reason of the tariff and his canny Scotch intellect, and, unlike most rich men, he has tried to do his fellow citizens what service he could by very liberal donations for the founding of many noble institutions and by liberal contributions to charity.

In early life he was obsessed on money making; he now seems to be obsessed on money giving. He is spending large sums of money in behalf of universal peace, hence his opposition to battleships and all things warlike. The letter which I have just had read shows him to be a very wise and far-seeing man of affairs, a great statesman, in fact. His mind is as clear and alert as ever, and I am very glad to have my ideas on warship construction, the need of increasing the Navy only wisely, and not building more dreadnaughts now indorsed by such an authority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

DISTRICT ORGANIC-ACT COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as members of the commission authorized by the District of Columbia appropriation act to be appointed for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the financial and political relations of the United States of America and the District of Columbia Mr. CHILTON, Mr. SAULSBURY, and Mr. WORKS.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the act of July 27, 1868, and by section 2 thereof, it was provided that one of the directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb should be a Senator appointed by the President of the Senate. The term of the Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS, of California, expires upon to-morrow. He does not return to the Senate of the United States. The Chair accordingly designates and appoints Mr. SHAFROTH as such director of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb to fill the vacancy.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16136) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, and Mr. LENROOT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20643) granting pensions and increase of pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21089) granting pensions and increase of pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations of various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7362) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain lands to the State of Utah and to accept relinquishment from the State of Utah of certain other lands in lieu thereof.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 3362) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto, in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 380) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4180. An act to validate title to certain town sites in the State of Montana;

S. 7212. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 2642. An act authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy;

H. R. 16510. An act to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service for their services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, to extend to certain of such officers the thanks of Congress, and for other purposes;

H. R. 20975. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes;

H. R. 21121. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., authorized by an act approved June 17, 1914; and

H. R. 21328. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the following concurrent resolution (No. 56) of the House of Representatives, reported favorably thereon and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the journal of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1915, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION (S. DOC. NO. 988).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 568), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the seventeenth report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, for the year ended October 11, 1914, transmitted to Congress, pursuant to law, by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, be printed as a Senate document, together with accompanying illustrations.

THE LOBBY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 569), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the time by which the Committee on the Judiciary was instructed to report to the Senate on the investigation by a subcommittee thereof authorized under Senate resolution No. 92, Sixty-third Congress, first session, being a resolution instructing them to investigate the charge that a lobby is maintained to influence legislation pending in the Senate, which was heretofore extended by resolutions of June 6 and June 26, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, extended so as to permit the said subcommittee to conclude its investigation and the committee to make its report to the Senate in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress; and that the authority granted under resolutions of August 9, 1913, and October 8 (calendar day, October 12), 1914, for the incurring and payment of expenses is hereby extended for the same length of time, so far as it relates to the said investigation and report.

FUR SEALS (S. DOC. NO. 980).

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that a report on the fur seals and other life of the Pribilof Islands in 1904, by Wilfred H. Osgood, William Preble, and George H. Parker, be printed as a public document, with illustrations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STEAMSHIP LINES IN AUSTRALIA (S. DOC. NO. 968).

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a copy of an article on the proposed government-owned steamship lines in Australia, being a report of debate in the senate of the Commonwealth Parliament November, 1912, and also a copy of an article on the government-owned steamships in Western Australia—"Revenue and expenditure." I ask that the papers be printed as one document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

COST OF ARMOR-PLATE PLANT (H. DOC. NO. 1620).

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call up the conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and ask for its adoption.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not until I get the conference report up.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to make any speech; I do not want to do anything except to make the report referred to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] from the committee to investigate the cost of an armor plant.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit the report of the committee to investigate the cost of an armor plant for the United States, made pursuant to a provision of an act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and ask that it be printed.

The report was ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE COST OF AN ARMOR PLANT FOR THE UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1915.

The committee appointed under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1914, begs to submit to Congress the following report, to wit:

The law under which the committee acts is as follows:

"A committee is hereby appointed, to consist of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, and one naval officer, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the cost of erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel, capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy, at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant. Said report shall contain the estimated cost of a plant and site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of twenty thousand tons, and also a plant having an output of ten thousand tons, and also an itemized statement of the estimated cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee, payable upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee."

The committee subdivides its report into two parts, with two appendices, as follows:

Part I: Containing the estimates of cost of an armor plant and site sufficient to accommodate an armor plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons, and also a plant having an output of 10,000 tons per year, with itemized statement of estimated cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each.

Part II: Estimated cost of production of face-hardened armor made in the 20,000-ton plant, when working at full capacity, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of this plant, also the estimated cost of production of face-hardened armor made in the 10,000-ton plant, when working at full capacity, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of this plant.

Appendix A: Containing the hearings of the committee.

Appendix B: Containing the minutes of the committee.

PART I.

In making the estimate of cost of an armor plant having a 20,000-ton capacity and of an armor plant having a 10,000-ton capacity all available sources of information have been consulted; namely, the Bureau of Yards and Docks; many manufacturers of machine tools, cranes, gas producers, and cars; naval inspectors of ordnance stationed at the works of the various armor makers; engineers employed by steel makers; the files of the Navy Department; and previous congressional reports and investigations.

It is not considered that these estimates are sufficiently accurate to enable the erection of such a plant to be proceeded with. It is thought that they are made with as great accuracy as was possible under the circumstances, and sufficiently so to enable Congress to make the first appropriation, should it be the will of Congress so to do after its examination of this report.

In these estimates the production of the special-treatment steel plating for the tops of turrets and conning towers, as would be necessary to keep pace with the production of thick armor, has been considered, but the manufacture of all special-treatment steel required by the Navy each year on a similar basis has not been considered, for the reason that the committee finds that a plant for the production of special-treatment steel for protective deck plates and similar purposes will have an annual capacity ten times as great as will be required. It is not possible to construct a rolling mill capable of rolling the size and quality of plate desired with a less annual output. If such a plant were erected its entire organization and machinery would be idle for 47 weeks in the year.

Owing to the lack of the necessary engineering and designing skill, it has not been possible to lay down this plant accurately and to place in the various buildings the various pieces of machinery in exactly the same way that they would be installed, and therefore it is probable that many items would have to be added in the shape of machinery, tools, and general equipment which it is impossible to anticipate.

Ten per cent has been added to the estimates for constructive work, buildings, and machinery in order that any unforeseen contingencies would be covered; but even then, before proceeding with the erection of a plant a well-known consulting engineer, familiar with this class of work and with the laying out of a factory, should be consulted, and carefully drawn plans and designs of all buildings and necessary machinery should be made before the construction could be proceeded with. There are certain features in regard to the plan and detailed arrangements of such a plant which only engineers and metallurgists of high repute could pass upon.

Estimates were first prepared for the 20,000-ton plant, and the 10,000-ton plant estimate has been patterned therefrom. The price of the land necessary for the plant and certain other items are so indefinite as to be only the roughest approximation. The location and local conditions will bear largely on the cost of the various buildings and the installation of the machinery therein. The committee calls attention to the fact that the Government now owns, at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, ample land for the erection of an armor factory and, therefore, no land would have to be bought. Philadelphia is an ideal place for the erection of such a plant, as it is accessible both by deep-water transportation and railroad facilities, is near coal and iron, and has a fine labor market. However, the Navy Department itself will select the location and construct the plant, if Congress orders one, and the committee only mentions that no expense for land will be necessary. Besides, the navy yard has facilities for assisting in the construction of this plant which will largely reduce the expense of erecting it.

The capacity of the 20,000-ton plant has been based upon completing 20,000 tons of armor; that is to say, the armor for two battleships and the necessary ballistic, experimental, and shell test plates usually required during the course of a year.

No estimate for the manufacture of any special treatment steel is made, except that required for the turret and conning tower tops, as has been explained previously.

For the production of 20,000 tons of finished armor plate per year about 70,000 tons of ingots would have to be cast, and as the open-hearth plant would be shut down on Sundays and holidays there could be no casting on Saturdays, owing to the fact that no stripping would be permissible on Sundays, and the plant would be able to average only 250 days per year, which means that 280 tons of armor ingots would have to be cast each day.

Each open-hearth furnace would be out for repairs eight weeks per year, or the five would have a total of 40 weeks of idleness. Thus we can reckon on an output of about 85 per cent of the total capacity of five furnaces.

Considering the average weight of plate and the number of plates installed on each of the newest design of battleships, if this plant is to produce the armor for two battleships, there will have to be presented for forging, cementing, reforging, treatment, hardening, and bending two plates per day, and there must be completed in the machine shop an average of five plates every three days.

OFFICE BUILDINGS.

The office building contemplated will be a two-story brick building, fitted for offices on the lower floor, with a drafting room, blue-print room, and photographic room, with vaults for tracings and files on the second floor. In this office would be the administrative and designing force of the plant. The equipment of the office building would consist of desks, chairs, stationery, typewriters, adding machines, etc., necessary and proper for a completely equipped office building, ready to commence work in a plant of this size. The estimate given for the equipment of this office building is necessarily very indefinite and has been made large in order to cover everything, including equipment for foremen's and leading men's offices in the various buildings.

PHYSICAL AND CHEMICAL LABORATORY.

This building will be a two-story brick building, fitted for physical laboratory on the lower floor, with chemical laboratory on the upper floor. The equipment will consist of the necessary instruments and material for the conduct of the work at an armor plant of this size, including a complete microphotographic and examination equipment.

TOOL HOUSE.

This will be a one-story structural steel building, with corrugated steel covering, for the purpose of housing wheelbarrows, shovels, picks, crowbars, and other tools used in the yard.

BRICK SHED.

This will be an open shed, with a raised concrete platform, the frame to be of structural steel, the roof to be of galvanized steel. On the platform, under cover, will be stored refractory brick, large quantities of which will have to be kept in stock for the repairs of open-hearth and treatment furnaces.

CARPENTER SHOP.

This building will have a pitched roof, concrete floor, with steel floor beams; will be fireproofed, will be heated, lighted, and equipped with the necessary plumbing. It will have two stories, and the equipment will consist of workbenches, vises, wood lathes, planers, wood saws, joiners, band saws, molding machine, rip and cross-cut saws, and sanding machine, with shafting, belting, and pulleys for driving the above.

BLACKSMITH SHOP.

This building will be one-story high, with an earth floor; pitched roof, of galvanized steel. The equipment will consist of forges, anvils, and one automatic steam hammer; the idea of this shop being to dress the tools used in the machine shop and around the armor plant, and to make minor repairs.

STOREHOUSE.

This building will be a two-story brick building, with a pitched roof of galvanized steel; will have a concrete floor, steel floor beams; will be fireproofed, and its equipment will consist of shelves, counters, desks, and necessary arrangements for keeping complete account of all stock.

LOCOMOTIVE HOUSE.

This building will be sufficiently large for housing locomotives and steam cranes, and will be fitted for making the necessary repairs to this rolling stock.

ELECTRIC POWER PLANT.

This plant will be contained in a brick building, with structural steel frame and galvanized-iron roof, and will have the necessary turbo-generators, piping, auxiliaries, switchboard, air compressors, etc.

BOILER PLANT.

The boiler house will be a brick building, with galvanized-steel roof, and will contain 20 boilers, with automatic stokers and necessary stacks. Over the boilers will be fitted reinforced concrete coal bunkers, and underground will be the necessary ash-handling machinery.

OPEN-HEARTH PLANT.

In the open-hearth plant will be made all of the steel from which the armor is to be fabricated. The raw material used will be pig iron and scrap, with the necessary nickel, ferrochrome, ferromanganese, etc., required. The building will be one story, with a monitor in its center, the frame of the building to be of structural steel, which will be covered with galvanized steel. It will be fitted with crane runways and will be constructed on such levels as to best accommodate the 5 open-hearth furnaces and the 10 accompanying gas producers. The charging floor in front of the open-hearth furnaces will be laid with tracks for two electric charging machines and for the necessary charging bogies. In the rear of the furnaces, at a lower lever, will be two casting pits, in which the ingots will be cast. Estimates have been made for a heavy crane capable of handling the largest ingots and ladles used in connection with pouring the ingots.

No estimate has been made for the making of sand molds, as it is contemplated that only metal molds will be used, and they will be purchased from some manufacturer of high-grade castings rather than manufactured in the plant. Estimates have been made for the necessary gas mains and coal and ash handling machinery in connection with the gas producers, these producers to be located in a lean-to attached to the building.

FORGING AND BENDING SHOP.

The building will be a flat roof with monitor, fitted with the necessary crane runways. In this building will be located three 14,000-ton capacity presses capable of forging and bending the thickest and heaviest armor known or required.

In the armor plants of domestic manufacturers the forging and bending presses have heretofore been of the hydraulic type, the use of which type necessitates a very high-powered pumping engine. After consultation with the manufacturers of the steam-intensifier type of forging press, the committee is informed by them that it is entirely practicable to use this type of press for the forging and bending of armor, and they state that such presses are used abroad, but none of them have been used in this country, and if it is found that they can be used satisfactorily they will be cheaper than the hydraulic press. This estimate contemplates the use of the steam-intensifier type of press. Should the Government decide to build an armor plant, this matter should be one for the most careful investigation by the engineers employed for the design and layout of the plant; and should it be decided that it would be safer to follow the design of presses used in existing armor plants in this country, these estimates would have to be increased by about $750,000 for the 20,000-ton plant and $500,000 for the 10,000-ton plant.

This shop will also contain ingot-heating and car-bottom plate-heating furnaces for the heating of ingots and plates preparatory to forging, reforging, and bending. The gas producers required for these furnaces will be located in a lean-to on the cementing and tempering shop.

A very large number of dies and tools are required in this shop, which could not be given in the form of an itemized list in the estimate, but are lumped into one general item.

CEMENTING AND TEMPERING SHOP.

This shop will be a one-story, flat-roof and monitor building, structural steel frame covered with galvanized steel, in which the armor plate will be carbonized and heat treated and finally water hardened. It will contain a large number of car-bottom plate-heating furnaces and water-hardening sprays, piping, and reservoirs required for tempering. In a lean-to will be located the necessary gas producers for this shop and for the forging and bending shop. Estimates are made for the gas mains and coal and ash handling machinery for the gas producers. The location of the pumps to supply hydraulic pressure throughout the plant is contemplated as being in this building. This hydraulic pressure will be required for the withdrawal of car bottoms from furnaces, for the opening of the various furnace doors, operation of valves, etc.

MACHINE SHOP.

The machine shop will be a brick building, one-story, flat roof, with the necessary crane runways. This building will be built in two spans, and will be heated and well lighted in order that machine tool work may be done in comfort at all times. The shop will contain the machine tools for finishing armor plate, and will be supplied with cranes for its handling. There will also be the necessary surface plates for the erection of the armor before it leaves the shop. The estimate for this equipment was more accurately and readily prepared than for any other part of the plant, as the makers of the tools were consulted and actual estimates obtained.

PART II.

The estimated cost of face-hardened armor made in the 20,000-ton and the 10,000-ton plants, when working at full capacity, is made up as follows:

(a) An estimate has been made of the probable number of employees required for plants of these sizes, with their daily or annual rates of pay. The national holidays, summer half holidays, and 15 days' annual leave due to each Government employee has been considered. With this in view, the total annual pay roll has been computed, which has been divided between 20,000 tons and 10,000 tons of armor, which are to be the respective productions of the plants, giving the cost of labor per ton of armor in such plants. In this cost of labor per ton of armor is included the labor of repair and maintenance, as the men who perform this work are included in the annual pay roll of the plants.

(b) The rates of pay have been obtained by ascertaining what men of similar rating receive at similar plants and by consulting the wage schedule of the navy yard, Washington.

(c) The metal per ton of plate has been obtained by taking the standard practice for making up a charge of nickel chrome alloy and charging the price per ton which prevailed during 1913 for the material. The cost of metal per ton is the same for both plants. The furnace losses, pit scrap, rejected ingots, have been obtained from actual practice. The amount of finished plate produced from ingots at the forge has been obtained by actually ascertaining the respective weights of ingots at forge presented by one company and comparing it to the number of finished plates produced by that same company. In obtaining the cost of the metal in a ton of plate credit for pit scrap and nickel scrap plates and ingots has been given at the same rate at which this material is charged into the furnace charge, the labor necessary for cutting this material up being already included in the pay roll.

(d) The maintenance and repairs per ton of armor has been obtained by estimate and is thought to be fairly accurate. The price of the coal used is the contract price for coal for the Navy for 1915; the other estimates have been obtained by observation and investigation. The 2 per cent of installation cost for upkeep of plant and buildings is for the extensive overhauls of furnaces and upkeep of the buildings and materials necessary to keep the plant in first-class condition, other than those small repairs which are necessary to keep in a going condition. This percentage is less than has ever been used in previous estimates, but is thought to be sufficient.

(e) By adding the four parts mentioned previously, the total cost per ton of armor has been obtained, which is the production cost only. No allowances is made for depreciation, fire losses, or Navy Department administration.

The following estimates for armor made in the 20,000-ton and the 10,000-ton plants, respectively, are made on the assumption that the Government will require sufficient armor each year to keep these plants going at their full capacity. Should these plants not be kept going at full annual capacity the cost of the armor produced would be increased, and should there not be in any one year occasion for the manufacture of any armor, the cost of maintenance for this year would have to be distributed over the production cost for several years, thus increasing the average cost of the armor produced in the plants.

Just how much this increase in cost of armor would be, due to the fact that the plant is not working at full capacity can not be foretold, but it would vary, due to the specific circumstances under which the plant might be operated for that year.

Summary of probable cost of armor in a 20,000-ton Government armor plant when operating at full capacity.

	Component.	Amount per ton.
Exhibit A	Labor per ton (pay roll)	$71.92
Exhibit B	Metal per ton	107.14
Exhibit C	Repairs and maintenance (a)	40.72
	Maintenance of plant (b)	10.33
	Total	230.11

Summary of probable cost of armor in a 10,000-ton Government armor plant when operating at full capacity.

PROBABLE PAY ROLL FOR 20,000-TON AND 10,000-TON ARMOR PLANTS.

The wages per day are based on the wages now in force at similar plants and at the Naval Gun Factory.

The number of per diem employees is based on three eight-hour shifts, Sundays and holidays excluded. The pay table shows the total number, but does not divide them into shifts. Employees work 284 days a year, but are paid for 313 days. It is estimated that 145 employees would work on Sundays in the 20,000-ton plant and 94 in the 10,000-ton plant, as the power plant must be in operation and one shift in the open hearth must be coming on at 4 p. m. to start a melt for tapping on Monday.

The committee invites attention to the great difficulty of making a close estimate of the cost of manufacturing armor in the absence of experience in such manufacture. The committee has been unable to procure from those engaged in the manufacture of armor any definite information to aid them in arriving at its cost. The above report, therefore, is made as a result of investigation by the committee in person, aided by the inspectors at the armor plants and the officers charged with the cognizance of armor in the Navy Department, and from all other sources of information obtainable.

Respectfully submitted.

B. R. TILLMAN,
Chairman Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.
L. P. PADGETT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.
JOSEPH STRAUSS,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

APPENDIX A.

ARMOR PLANT FOR THE UNITED STATES.

[Hearings before a special committee of the Congress of the United States, Sixty-third Congress, third session, pursuant to a provision of the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1914.]

Committee to investigate the cost of an armor plant for the United States.—Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, United States Senate, chairman; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress; Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, United States Navy.

PREFACE.

The committee submitted a series of prepared questions to those officials of the various companies who were in a position to know the correct answers, and the questions submitted and the replies elucidated are herewith given. It will be seen from these replies that, in general, no information could be had from the armor-plate manufacturers which would tend to throw any light on the cost of their product. Where answers were refused the refusal was generally based on the plea that the answer would disclose business secrets which would be advantageous to their rivals at home and abroad. The committee does not believe that a frank disclosure of the costs would work any harm to any of the firms, so far as furnishing an advantage to their rivals is concerned.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE,
Pittsburgh, Pa., Tuesday, November 24, 1914.

The committee met at 9.40 a. m. at the office of the Carnegie Steel Co., Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding.

Present: Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member Congress; Rear Admiral J. Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee; Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy; Mr. J. B. Knight and Mr. E. S. Theall, assistants to the committee.

There were also present Mr. A. C. Dinkey, president of the Carnegie Steel Co.; Mr. James J. Campbell, Mr. R. H. Watson, Mr. L. R. Custer, and other officials of the Carnegie Steel Co.

STATEMENT OF MR. A. C. DINKEY, PRESIDENT OF THE CARNEGIE STEEL CO.

Mr. A. C. Dinkey, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name and occupation?

Mr. DINKEY. A. C. Dinkey, president of the Carnegie Steel Co.

The CHAIRMAN. Have any newspaper men outside wanted to get in here?

Mr. DINKEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Haven't shown any inclination or desire to get in?

Mr. DINKEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If they apply, I wish you would give orders that they be admitted, for we want the hearing to be public.

Mr. DINKEY. Yes, sir; I will give that order right away.

[Mr. Dinkey left the room for a moment, and upon his return said: "That is arranged for. If anybody comes here at all, they will be shown in."]

The CHAIRMAN. We have prepared a list of questions before we left Washington, and I have asked Admiral Strauss to act for the committee in propounding these questions for the committee.

Q. How much does it cost your company, f. o. b., to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A–1? That is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges.

Mr. DINKEY. I think it would be greatly against the interest of the Carnegie Steel Co., both as regards the armor makers abroad and in this country, to expose in a public record our costs.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you be willing to keep the question under advisement and answer it in writing later?

Mr. DINKEY. The idea that I had in mind was that even if you asked me to put the answer in writing I would have difficulty with it, if the answer was to be a part of a public record.

The CHAIRMAN. We are obliged to make a report to Congress of what we find, and therefore, if you want to guard any secrets, you had better not tell us any secrets either in writing or orally.

Mr. DINKEY. That was the idea I was trying to convey, that even in writing we would have difficulty with the answer if it were a part of a public record.

Q. In calculating costs do you take the annual output of a single year or of a term of years, and do you make any allowance for rejections and ballistic failures?—A. Our regular cost system is based on a calendar year's work, and, of course, it includes all expenses.

Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. I would like to record the answer to this question to be in harmony with my answer to the first question as to costs.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dinkey understands, of course, that the stenographer will furnish him a copy of this hearing before it is made public and given to Congress, so that he will have the opportunity to amend his answers or make any corrections that he sees fit.

Mr. DINKEY. Yes; because I do not have facility in framing my answers in very good English, and I would appreciate the opportunity of looking them over.

Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. That is a part of the original question as to costs.

Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat.—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the cost of forging?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this, for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. Eighteen thousand eight hundred and thirty-one gross tons.

Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching the forge?—A. Five hundred and twenty-four gross tons.

Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. Eighteen thousand three hundred and seven gross tons.

Q. How many tons of ingots were rejected during the forging?—A. None.

Q. What scrap allowance was made for those rejected during forging?—A. None rejected.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not have any idea that you have kept any record.

Mr. DINKEY. We do not take weights before and after forging.

Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons sets forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded? That is, how many tons?—A. Four thousand seven hundred and forty-six gross tons.

The CHAIRMAN. Admiral, right here I think we ought to have it from the beginning.

Admiral STRAUSS. We do, sir. That is all embodied in the questions.

Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment, in tons?—A. There are no weights taken before and after carbonizing.

Q. What was the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. None.

Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

The CHAIRMAN. I would imagine, Mr. Dinkey, that a good many of these questions, instead of being refused answer on account of the unwillingness of the company to expose its secrets to the world, would better be answered by saying that the records of the company were not kept sufficiently accurate for you to reply. We are asking a good many questions which you can not answer because the company did not think it worth while to keep a record of these things in the books.

Mr. DINKEY. I am obliged to you, Senator, for the thought. It was going through my mind that some of these questions are impossible to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Not because you do not want the world to know, but because the company has not taken the precaution or did not feel it necessary to keep itself informed on these matters.

Admiral STRAUSS. Of course there are some of them that your original answer would have to apply to.

The CHAIRMAN. And we will leave it to his discretion what he will say about those, and which ones he will leave because he does not know, and which he will leave because he does not want the world to know.

Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton without machining?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in the answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.

Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Two thousand one hundred and seventy gross tons rejected. I do not think it proper to give the amount of allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps we are suggesting a new method of bookkeeping for you.

Mr. DINKEY. A new method of accounting might enable us to answer more of your questions, but be of little value to us as a manufacturer.

The CHAIRMAN. We feel compelled to probe as far as we can to get the facts. You understand our position.

Mr. DINKEY. Certainly. You come into the thing new, and we have all this history of armor making back of us.

Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. No discard.

Mr. PADGETT. Can you give us a general estimate from your experience in the manufacture of armor—a reasonable estimate?

Mr. DINKEY. As a matter of practice no discard is made at this point.

Mr. PADGETT. The best guess you can.

Mr. DINKEY. Answered by preceding reply.

Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. Eleven thousand three hundred and ninety-one gross tons.

Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. One thousand one hundred and fifteen gross tons.

Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. Ten thousand two hundred and seventy-six gross tons.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Six thousand two hundred and sixty-seven gross tons.

Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining? If so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Two hundred and twelve gross tons were rejected. I do not think it proper to give the amount of the allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. Right there, I think it desirable that I, as chairman, should ask you this question. In what way have you arrived at the cost of this armor to the factory upon which to base the charge to the Government for it?

Mr. DINKEY. That will start me answering the first question as to costs.

The CHAIRMAN. I feel it is my duty to find out why you charge the Government so much, and if we can not make it cheaper than you are selling it to us.

Mr. DINKEY. I can only answer in general terms, that my judgment is that the prices we have been asking are only fair and reasonable prices.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any agreement, implied or expressed, between you and the other manufacturers of armor as to what prices shall be charged the Government?

Mr. DINKEY. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not meet and combine instead of competing?

Mr. DINKEY. No, sir; not even a suggestion of meeting and combining.

The CHAIRMAN. You know there are only three armor manufacturers in the United States?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You know, further, that when the Navy Department first went into this armor business, some twenty-odd years ago they had to get the Bethlehem Steel Co. to make it in this country rather than buy it abroad, and the Bethlehem Steel Co., as I recall the facts, stated that in order to enter into the manufacture of armor they would have an extraordinary expense to incur and they would have to charge such and such a price for the armor if they made a contract with the Government, in order to reimburse themselves. The Government agreed to that price, in fact paid for the increased appliances, hammers, steam press, and all that sort of thing, and yet the price remains way up yonder—did not come down after they had provided at the Government's expense in the first contract for all these new appliances which they required in order to make armor at all. That is a matter of official record in Washington.

Mr. DINKEY. I have no information with respect to the original contract with the Bethlehem Co. I do know, however, that the armor Bethlehem started to make is not to be compared, as to quality or cost of production, with the armor we are now furnishing.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know the origin of the contract with Carnegie?

Mr. DINKEY. I have no direct information. I understand, however, that the chief difficulties were serious delays in delivery.

The CHAIRMAN. And they had to get another factory?

Mr. DINKEY. That would help the situation, but chiefly with respect to delivery. The original contract, as I understood it, was divided at the same price that the contract was given to the Bethlehem Steel Co.; that is, the department offered the Carnegie Steel Co. the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s price if they would take a portion of the armor that had already been given to Bethlehem. That may be incorrect, but I am speaking merely from general information on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. You are familiar with the fact, of course, that the Navy Department had to penalize Mr. Carnegie because of the failure to deliver the armor according to contract, and that President Cleveland remitted that fine?

Mr. DINKEY. Is it necessary to answer that question?

The CHAIRMAN. I think it absolutely necessary that it should go in, because it is a very important fact in this investigation.

Mr. DINKEY. I just wondered if you thought it was material to put that in. As far as my own knowledge goes, I really do not know anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we can not save the record that fact; no, sir. We can bring it out better by going back and putting in the official documents which would prove it, and I think we will do that, Mr. PADGETT, when we get back to Washington.

Mr. PADGETT. If it becomes necessary, we could put them in.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is very important that the fact should be brought out officially, and I want to say for the information of the committee that the full history of the fine and its reduction from 15 per cent to 10 per cent by President Cleveland is found in House Report ——, Fifty-third Congress, second session, 1893-94, volume 5. That volume is devoted almost entirely to an investigation ordered by the House of Representatives.

The charges against the company as a result of this investigation, as reported by the committee were printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 23, 1894, on page 8638, and are as follows:

"First. The plates did not receive the uniform treatment required by the specifications of the contracts. In many cases the treatment was irregular and in other cases it was practically inefficient. The specifications of the contract of February 28, 1893, required that each plate should be annealed, oil tempered, and again annealed, the last process being an annealing one.

"Second. False reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made by the Government inspectors. This was in violation of paragraph 95 of the circular concerning armor-plate appurtenances, dated January 16, 1893, which was made a part of the contract. Paragraph 95 says:

"'The contractor shall state for each article in writing the exact treatment it has received.'

"The specifications of the contract of November 20, 1890, paragraph 164, say:

"'A written statement of work and contractor's tests to be commenced and in progress each day must be furnished to the chief inspector.'

"Third. No bolts received the double treatment provided for in the specifications of either contract. A report of a double treatment, however, was made to the Government inspectors.

"Fourth. Specimens taken from the plates both before and after treatment to ascertain the tensile strength of each plate were stretched without the knowledge of the Government inspectors, so as to increase their apparent tensile strength when actually tested.

"Fifth. False specimens taken from other plates were substituted for the specimens selected by the Government inspectors.

"Sixth. The testing machine was repeatedly manipulated by order of the superintendent of the armor-plate mill so as to increase the apparent tensile strength of the specimens. These specimens were juggled in measurement so as to increase their apparent ductility.

"Seventh. Various specimens selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated without their knowledge before they were submitted to test.

"Eighth. Plates selected by the Government inspectors for ballistic test were re-treated with the intention of improving their ballistic resistance, without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. In one case, at least, the conclusion is almost irresistible that the bottom of another plate was substituted for the top half of plate A 619 after it had been selected by the Government and while awaiting shipment to Indian Head. Upon this ballistic test a group of plates containing 348 tons, valued at about $180,000, were to be accepted or rejected. In three cases, at least, the plates selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated in this manner without their knowledge. These ballistic plates represented 779 tons of armor, valued at over $410,000. The groups represented by these three plates had all been submitted for premium of $30 per ton if they passed a more severe test than required for acceptance.

"Ninth. In violation of the specifications of the contract, pipes or shrinking cavities, erroneously called blowholes, in the plates were plugged by the contractors and the defects concealed from the Government inspectors. These cavities, in some cases, diminished the resistance and value of the plate.

"Tenth. The inspector's stamp was either duplicated or stolen, and used without the knowledge of the Government inspectors.

"Eleventh. The Government inspector in inspecting bolts was deceived by means of false templets or gauges."

Then follows a list of the items made under oath by C. M. Schwab, superintendent of the company and a stockholder, practically admitting all the charges.

As a result of this report the House passed a joint resolution directing that certain plates be taken off of our ships and tested, authorizing their replacement, the cost to be deducted from the appropriation for armor and armament. The resolution never came to a vote in the Senate, but was pigeonholed and allowed to die.

In a speech which Senator TILLMAN delivered in the Senate on March 1, 1897, which was three years after this investigation by the House, during the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, he caused to be read to the Senate by the Secretary the charges which were reported by the committee of the House. The following is an extract from his remarks at that time after exposing the failure of the passage of this resolution:

"Why was not that resolution passed here and those plates taken off? Why? Why? Here is a list of the ships of our new Navy—our boasted new Navy, the one we love so, and that we pet so. This is only a partial list of the ships the plates on which were confessed to have been plugged up, or not tempered, or some other thing which would weaken them and make them worthless, and not according to contract."

Four on the Monterey, 6 on the Monadnock, 8 on the New York, 4 on the Amphitrite, 3 on the Terror, 3 on the Oregon, 3 on the Olympia, 6 on the Indiana, 4 on the Massachusetts, and so on.

The result of this speech and exposure was that by a large vote the Senate refused to pass the appropriation for armor, and no armor was bought at all for the Government until the Spanish-American War came on. The naval appropriations that year contained a limitation on the price of armor—$300 per ton. The Armor Trust, of course, did not bid.

The next year, 1898, the naval appropriation bill contained a limitation fixing the price at $400 per long ton, including cost of nickel. In 1899 the limitation as to price was $300 per long ton, including royalties, and forbidding contracts for the hulls of vessels until the contracts for armor of such vessels were made.

In 1900 the Secretary of the Navy was limited in the price. The appropriation bill gave $4,000,000 for the purchase of armor, and the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to procure armor of the best quality for any and all vessels still unprovided for, giving him permission to make contracts at a "price which in his judgment is reasonable and equitable; and in case he is unable to make contracts for armor under the above conditions, he is hereby authorized and directed to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor, and the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory." The Secretary did obtain armor at what he considered a "reasonable price," and no armor factory was built. Hence our present predicament.

Later I will furnish a list showing the contracts for armor since 1902.

The list referred to is as follows:

Contracts let during fiscal year—	Amount.
1903	$4,720,080
1904	6,807,102
1905	3,223,412
1907	2,552,382
1908	3,969,400
1909	3,970,303
1910	5,493,464
1911	5,804,508
1912	6,573,612
1913	3,742,217
1914	3,490,088
1915	10,462,992
Total for 12 years	60,746,560

Q. Now, Mr. Dinkey, how much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, and supply of tools?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operation?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original as to costs.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Five thousand nine hundred and nineteen gross tons.

Q. What do the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. I do not think it proper to answer for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. I do not think it proper to answer for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class B shipped plates?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. This refers to bolts, nuts, etc., which we do not manufacture.

Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture, and separate from depreciation?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. What does this maintenance mean? To what is it applied?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor? How has this been arrived at?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid and how proportionately divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

The CHAIRMAN. You could not furnish that information?

Mr. DINKEY. I do not think I ought to.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think it would be very interesting for the outside world to know just how much the Steel Trust was able to pay its employees as compared with men of equally high intelligence and ability outside.

Q. How much did the insurance charges on your armor plant amount to?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. How much taxes are chargeable to armor plant?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears to me that the way this investigation is going we will have no report to make at all. We are really getting little or no information and, evidently, must rely on other sources for the facts upon which to base our report.

Admiral STRAUSS. In regard to this question, "How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?" is not such a charge part of the public records, the municipal records?

Mr. DINKEY. Our records have not subdivided the cost of taxes on the Homestead Steel Works so as to give us what proportion is properly chargeable to the armor department.

Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund?—A. I do not think we have that subdivided. We charge nothing to armor for pension fund, but we do charge a rate for protection of casualty to employees while they are sick and away owing to injuries.

Admiral STRAUSS. Insurance, then, you would call it?

Mr. DINKEY. You could call it a provision to take care of that expense.

Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reason set forth in the answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. What is this depreciation and how has it been arrived at?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in the answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. I do not think it proper to answer for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the original question as to costs.

Q. The remainder of this sum of money which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. I do not think it proper to answer for the reasons set forth in the answer to the first question as to costs.

Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. This question is answered later.

Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. It does not include depreciation replacements.

Q. In reckoning your profits, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. I do not think it proper to answer this for the reasons set forth in answer to the first question as to costs.

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to ask a question, please. In 1897 Mr. Schwab appeared before the committee that was investigating at that time and he stated:

"It is a very difficult thing to fix the price of any article in which quantity and quality do not enter. Quantity and quality are the two essential things in fixing the price of any article. Quantity is, as I have pointed out to you, especially important. We have only made 2,000 tons per year at the bare cost of 50 per cent higher tonnage. I am prepared to say that if you will give us 3,000 tons of armor per year, as estimated, we will give you a rebate of $50 per ton upon every ton over that quantity. If you will give us 3,500 tons of armor per year, we will give you a rebate of $100 per ton for every ton over that quantity."

Now, in connection with that statement that was made there, the last contract that was awarded was for 25,000 tons, divided, I believe, between two concerns. There were 25,000 tons awarded, two-thirds of it going to the Bethlehem Steel Co. and one-third to the Midvale Steel Co. I wanted to ask you what would be a reasonable reduction on the basis of 16,000 tons to one and 8,000 tons to the other, in comparison with the rebates or reductions, as stated in the answer of Mr. Schwab?

The CHAIRMAN. Proposed to be given.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; proposed to be given.

Mr. DINKEY. I think Mr. Schwab ought to answer that. He had, of course, some particular thing in his mind when he made that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Schwab isn't in America just now?

Mr. DINKEY. I think he is. He has just landed.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to ask if you would give any expression of your opinion if they could not have reduced the price reasonably below $425 a ton on getting so large an order?

Mr. DINKEY. My judgment is that they could not; $450 per ton is a reasonable price for the quality of armor now demanded by the United States Government.

Mr. PADGETT. In 1894 Mr. Frick was testifying before a committee, and he testified:

"When we went into the manufacture of armor we had a rolling mill, which is a very extensive mill, I think probably the largest of its kind in the world. In addition to that, not including the ground, we purchased a larger piece of valuable ground. We spent $2,600,000, so I think that you can safely say we have invested in the manufacture of armor $4,000,000."

Then a question was asked:

"But since you have begun the manufacture you have put in this machinery, or, rather, since you accepted this contract you have put in this machinery?"

And then a question was asked:

"That would account in a great measure for the $3,000,000 expended for the plant. If you had known exactly what you would have required, it might be that the plant would not have cost so much?"

Answer:

"I believe that the plant could be duplicated for somewhat less, but not very much less. In 1906 the Carnegie Co. estimated its total investment in armor plant at $5,905,425."

This estimate includes $4,730,425 as the actual cost of construction in armor plant since its commencement, as shown on the books of the company, and added $1,175,000 as the allowed cost of the land occupied. Now, since that time can you state what the company has paid in to increase the plant of the company, not paid out of the profits of the company?

Mr. DINKEY. Well, of course, I can say what has been added since 1906. I can tell you what has been added to our factory equipment since 1906, if you leave out "not paid out of the profits." Of course, the profits are in the profit and loss account, and they do not stand in a separate fund; they stand in one fund.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask you to put in a statement of what you have added to the capital of the company since 1906.

Mr. DINKEY. Instead of capital can you make it what we have added to the factory; what additions have been made to the factory?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DINKEY. Because we have not changed our capital account. We do not change that, but I can put in what additions have been made to the factory.

Admiral STRAUSS. Do you mean what additions have been made in buildings and machinery?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes; new equipment, if any. A few tools have been bought, and I think there are some extensions to the treating shop. There are quite important extensions to the treating shop.

Admiral STRAUSS. You say that is not charged to your account of capital invested in the production of armor?

Mr. DINKEY. No; that part of our bookkeeping is not changed. You see, the Carnegie Steel Co.'s capital is a fixed amount.

Admiral STRAUSS. I mean to your investment in the armor business proper.

Mr. DINKEY. It is set up against our investment account; yes. And the investment account and additions to the property are the same thing, the two items are the same.

Admiral STRAUSS. You say you propose to give these additional investments?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. By items?

Mr. DINKEY. I will subdivide it so that it is legible to you. I think I will put it "Extensions to the treating shop" and "New tools," and then I will show what they are and will add them to the 1906 figures.

Admiral STRAUSS. Will you give your additions of furnaces?

Mr. DINKEY. We will give the number of furnaces and the cost per furnace in such a way that you can see the cost per furnace. I find that, as stated by Mr. PADGETT, we reported in 1906 that we estimated our total investment in our armor plant and auxiliary facilities up to December 31, 1905, as being $5,905,425, which included the sum of $450,000 for about 30 acres of land used for the plant, the balance covering buildings, furnaces, presses, and all other tools and appliances.

Since that time we have expended for additions (not replacements), $220,121.44, made up of the following items:

Press shop—manipulator		$7,779.21
Extensions and additions to carbonizing shop		121,099.70
Additions to machine shop:
Two milling machines	$47,331.25
One pit planer	18,274.64
One boring mill	4,859.85
One 125-ton crane	21,076.79
		91,542.53

This brings our total investment, at the present time, up to $6,125,836.44. It appears from the foregoing list of additions that we have not added any furnaces since 1906. Considerable additions have been made to the general facilities of the plant, such as cars, stocking tools, etc., which are employed only a portion of the time in the process of armor making. No portion of the amount of these expenditures is included in the above statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dinkey, it would appear to be the case that the system of bookkeeping does not admit of any analysis of the cost of armor, and I am afraid we would never get at the real facts, even if we should have full access to your books or have an expert go through them.

Mr. DINKEY. I think you would have difficulty in using our figures to any advantage to yourselves; I think that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. You realize that our duty to the people is diametrically opposed to your ideas of your duty to the Carnegie Steel Co., the Steel Trust, as it is called. You feel bound to protect your employers or your bosses, whoever they are, and we feel bound to protect our bosses who have sent us here. To that extent the two interests are opposed.

Mr. DINKEY. Of course a natural opposition is there; at the same time I am not conscious of interposing greater objections than seem to be necessary under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you be willing for a naval expert accountant to go through your books?

Mr. DINKEY. I would not be willing.

Admiral STRAUSS. Mr. Dinkey, do you think that your system of bookkeeping properly accounts for everything—every cost that should be allotted to the production of armor—in such a way as to permit you to give an intelligent bid for armor? That is, do you know yourselves exactly what that armor costs, including your material, labor, shop overhead, and all administrative and depreciation expenses?

Mr. DINKEY. Of course, I think it does, within a proper meaning of that question; I think it does.

Mr. PADGETT. Returning to the question I asked a while ago about the increase to your investment or to the enlargement of your plant, etc. Will you state whether or not it was paid out of the amount that was set apart as depreciation to the plant or whether it was paid out of the general profits?

Mr. DINKEY. In an informal way I will say that these funds are not kept separate; they are paid out of the general funds of the Carnegie Steel Co.

Mr. PADGETT. Do you charge up as an item of cost in the manufacture of armor a per cent or an item known as depreciation of plant?

Mr. DINKEY. We have a heading. Our system is not to charge directly into the individual costs an item of depreciation. We deduct that from the profit and loss. But we do, of course, reckon with that factor whenever we are estimating to arrive at a total cost for selling purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Along the same line can you state, since you commenced the manufacture of armor, whether the aggregate of the amount that you have charged as depreciation of plant is more or less than the amount that has been expended for the extension and improvement of the plant?

Mr. DINKEY. I find it impossible to answer this question.

The CHAIRMAN. When did the Midvale people commence to make armor?

Mr. DINKEY. About the year 1906.

The CHAIRMAN. I recall that up to the time that the Midvale people came forward with their bids the Government considered itself helpless and had to pay whatever Carnegie and Bethlehem charged them.

Mr. DINKEY. I have no information as to the situation in which the Government considered itself to be.

The CHAIRMAN. There seems to have been no difficulty whatever, because you had the Government in your power and could compel it to accept your price or go without, and the idea I have is that the only protection the Government can have is to build an armor plant of its own, the same as we have built a powder plant. It may be that the European war will demonstrate that armor is no longer needed at all.

Mr. DINKEY. We never considered that the Government was in our power. Our necessities as sellers were greater than the Government's necessities as a buyer. If the European war does so demonstrate, that will dispose of the whole question.

The CHAIRMAN. We will quit building battleships, but it will not dispose of you, because the Steel Trust will be here when I am dead and gone, and perhaps when you are dead and gone. You declined a little while ago to allow us to send a naval expert accountant to go through your books. Does not the law give the Department of Commerce that power now?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Has anybody investigated this plant before?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There have been a number of investigators from the Navy Department on the job at different times. You will remember the Alger Board was down there. One time they followed our figures up to that time as to investment in armor plant. Then there was the Niles Board, and they got a lot of information.

Mr. DINKEY. Then McLean, afterwards McLean & McVay. Before an armor contract is let the question of the quality of the armor to be supplied is always a feature of the discussion. The Government does not find itself so helpless with respect to pushing up the quality required. The Government is not in a helpless position by any means. A seller has to sell just as much as a buyer has to buy. I have to find customers.

The CHAIRMAN. Provided you keep on making armor. But if you turned your plant to some other purpose——

Mr. DINKEY (interposing). No; that is not true, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You have got some appliances down there that are needed only for making armor?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes, sir; and they can not be used for anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. And therefore they would be a dead loss to you if the Government should go into the manufacture of its own armor. The Government is helpless, so far as the price of armor is concerned, when there are only three makers of it, and they are working in combination, charging whatever price they agree upon.

Mr. DINKEY. The three are not in collusion.

The CHAIRMAN. You say so, but we think they are. I hope you are telling the truth.

Mr. DINKEY. I can tell you now that they are not in collusion, and I do not know how I can make you believe that I am telling the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that Carnegie did not get any of this last contract would indicate that somehow or other the cogs had slipped and the machine did not work well. Do you know just why you did not get it? Are you willing to tell?

Mr. DINKEY. I tried hard enough to get it, but could not. I tried to meet the Secretary's views, and I did revise my bids after he asked us to, and I did not make them sufficiently low, I imagine.

Mr. PADGETT. Upon that question, however, the contract was awarded to the other two, with the stipulation that they could sublet part of the contract, and you are not out of the game yet.

Mr. DINKEY. The deliveries required are faster than the plants that have the contracts will be able to make them.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore they will have to come to you, because you are the only other man that can help them out. Don't you see that you have got the Government in your power?

Mr. DINKEY. I do not think I have.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Government can only get from certain factories its armor, and nobody else can supply it, it seems to me that the Government is utterly helpless.

Mr. DINKEY. Look at the other side. These tools are useful only for Government work. If the Government does not buy, they stand idle.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the exact cost of that class of tools?

Mr. DINKEY. Approximately $5,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you supply that estimation?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes; practically all the equipment which we call the armor department is useful only for making armor.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you not adapt it to some other manufacture?

Mr. DINKEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be a dead loss to you, then, if the Government should go into the manufacture of its own armor?

Mr. DINKEY. We would have to tear it out and throw it away and find something else to put up on that ground.

Admiral STRAUSS. We have a number of questions prepared as to the cost of plant. You just stated that you would give us some information. I would like to put these questions for such answers as Mr. Dinkey will give.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to ask a question. Would you object to informing the committee as to the total amount that you pay per annum to your foreman of the armor department?

Mr. DINKEY. The heads of the departments? I would rather not. I think we ought not to do that.

Mr. PADGETT. The superintendent of the armor department. I was not interested in any other case, just the armor department.

Mr. DINKEY. I would like to tell the committee if I could tell them for their own information but not a part of the record.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course, you can understand that from our standpoint the item of salaries is one to be considered by the Government in connection with the question of the advisability or nonadvisability of establishing a plant, and also as to the cost of armor—what we would be expected to pay the men who performed certain duties in the manufacture of armor.

Mr. DINKEY. Yes; this item of salaries is one that you will want to be accurately informed about.

Mr. PADGETT. And for that reason I was asking the question.

Mr. DINKEY. I would not like to make a public record of these salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it require any special skill?

Mr. DINKEY. Oh, yes; most of these men have spent their lifetime at it.

Admiral STRAUSS. What is the capacity of the company's plant for armor in tons per year?

Mr. DINKEY. Approximately 10,000 gross tons.

Admiral STRAUSS. How much has this plant cost the company to date, for buildings and machinery?

Mr. DINKEY. This question has been answered.

Admiral STRAUSS. This sum to include all buildings and all machinery and equipment now installed, exclusive of site?

Mr. DINKEY. This question has been answered.

Admiral STRAUSS. How many acres are now occupied by your plant, including space for stock and coal storage?

Mr. DINKEY. About 30 acres.

Admiral STRAUSS. I would like to ask you what does your plant for the production of special-treatment steel plates cost you? How much have you invested in that department?

Mr. DINKEY. It is almost impossible to separate the cost. More than half of the course of manufacture required for the production of special-treatment plate uses the common tools of the Carnegie Steel Co.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand you, there is no mystery or very great expense attached to it other than ordinary?

Mr. DINKEY. The first part of it is right. There is very little mystery, but there is a whole lot of expense.

The CHAIRMAN. We are concerned with both the mystery and the expense.

Mr. DINKEY. There is very little mystery. Of course, that word is not proper to use in connection with manufacturing steel. There is no mystery at all; just plain skill and expensive material.

The CHAIRMAN. When we first began to look into this armor business, 20 years ago, nickel was considered a very important and necessary ingredient.

Mr. DINKEY. It was. That came out immediately upon the——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Nickel is still used in its manufacture?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes, sir.

TLe CHAIRMAN. And afterwards Harvey came in with some patents?

Mr. DINKEY. And improved the armor that was being bought at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. That is still used, the Harvey process?

Mr. DINKEY. That process is still used, except as another process has been added to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Improving even that?

Mr. DINKEY. Improving even that.

The CHAIRMAN. So you use both?

Mr. DINKEY. All three of them are represented in the present armor; the nickel which was originally used, and the Harvey, which was put on top of the nickel, and the Krupp process, which is put on top of the Harvey. All three of them are combined in the present armor.

The CHAIRMAN. Are any of these patented?

Mr. DINKEY. They all were patented, but I think they expired by limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, the Government could use any or all of them without any additional expense?

Mr. DINKEY. I think the processes that were patented at that time are now public property. I think that is true.

Admiral STRAUSS. How many men are employed in your armor department?

Mr. DINKEY. Approximately 750 men.

Admiral STRAUSS. How many shifts are worked?

Mr. DINKEY. Three shifts.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Dinkey, could you give us a reasonable estimate of what would be the additional cost of a plant capable of manufacturing special-treatment steel, in addition to a strictly armor-plate plant? In other words, if the Government should establish an armor-plate factory, how much additional would it cost to add a plant that would make special-treatment steel of 1½ inches and then 3 inches in thickness?

Mr. DINKEY. I will give you what I will consider a reasonable estimate.

Mr. PADGETT. Of what that additional would cost?

Mr. DINKEY. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I should be glad if you would.

Admiral STRAUSS. And what the total capacity would be per annum.

Mr. DINKEY. Just let me explain some of the difficulties there. I mentioned a little while ago that to make special-treatment plates we used in the early stages of its manufacture, clear up until it becomes an actual plate ready for tempering, the common tools of the Carnegie Steel Co., and you can not use anything else. A plate mill in which these plates are rolled has a capacity of 15,000 tons a month. Well, it can not be a smaller plate mill. So whatever the Government will need to buy—say, 8,000 or 10,000 or 12,000 tons of these plates per year on a two-ship program or a three-ship program—you could not build a plate mill with a capacity of less than 15,000 tons a month, and the tools would be standing idle the rest of the year. It would roll less than a month all you could possibly use on a three-ship program in any year.

The CHAIRMAN. That answer would seem to indicate that it would be preposterous for the Government to go into the manufacture of special-treatment steel. It could buy the plates and treat them in its own plant?

Mr. DINKEY. It could do that, and it would be a more practical thing to do. It is almost impracticable to add a special-treatment plant to an armor plant.

The CHAIRMAN. But assuming that it would, I wanted you to give us what that additional cost would be.

Mr. DINKEY. After careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to set up an estimate that would be of any practical value.

The CHAIRMAN. You can not make special-treatment steel unless you treat it like armor?

Mr. DINKEY. You can not; that is the finishing process.

The CHAIRMAN. But you can make it out of regular plate steel, and plate mills are plentiful. We can buy plate steel almost anywhere and treat it afterwards if we had an armor plant to treat it in.

Mr. DINKEY. That would be the more practical proposition.

Admiral STRAUSS. In consideration of the fact that some of these questions as submitted, and perhaps some more that will be submitted, will have to be answered by others than Mr. Dinkey, it has been suggested that the other gentlemen who are here to testify be sworn and their answers sent by mail.

STATEMENT OF MR. LOUIS R. CUSTER.

Mr. L. R. Custer, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. CUSTER. Louis R. Custer.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your official connection with the Carnegie Steel Co.?

Mr. CUSTER. Superintendent of the armor-plate department of Homestead Steel Works.

Q. How much does it cost your company, f. o. b., to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A–1; that is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges?—A. I have nothing to do with matters pertaining to costs and never see the cost records.

Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration?—A. I do not know.

Q. In calculating costs, do you take the annual output of a single year or of a term of years, and do you make any allowance for rejections and ballistic failures?—A. I do not know.

Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. I do not know.

Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat.—A. I do not know.

Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the cost for forging?—A. I do not know.

Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. I do not know.

Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. Eighteen thousand eight hundred and thirty-one gross tons.

Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching the forge?—A. Five hundred and twenty-four gross tons.

Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. Eighteen thousand three hundred and seven gross tons.

Q. How many tons of ingots were rejected during the forging?—A. None.

Q. What scrap allowance was made for those rejected during forging?—A. None rejected.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. We do not take such record.

Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. I do not know.

Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. I do not know.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded—that is, how many tons?—A. Four thousand seven hundred and forty-six gross tons.

Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. I do not know.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment, in tons?—A. No record kept.

Q. What was the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. None.

Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton without machining?—A. I do not know.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.

Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Two thousand one hundred and seventy tons. The usual scrap allowance was made, but I know nothing about the amounts so allowed.

Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. None.

Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. No such discard.

Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. I do not know.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. Eleven thousand three hundred and ninety-one gross tons.

Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. One thousand one hundred and fifteen gross tons.

Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. I do not know.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. Ten thousand two hundred and seventy-six gross tons.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Six thousand two hundred and sixty-seven gross tons.

Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining; if so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Two hundred and twelve gross tons rejected. Usual scrap allowance made, but I do not know the amounts of such allowance.

Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, and supply of tools?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operations?—A. I do not know.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. I do not know.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Five thousand nine hundred and nineteen gross tons.

Q. What do the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. I do not know.

Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. I do not know.

Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. I do not know.

Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class A–2 shipped plates?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class B shipped plates?—A. I do not know.
Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. We do not make it.
Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. I do not know.
Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture, and separate from depreciation?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does this maintenance mean? To what is it applied?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor? How has this been arrived at?—A. I do not know.
Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid and how proportionately divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. I do not know.
Q. How much did the insurance charges on your armor plant amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is this depreciation and how has it been arrived at?—A. I do not know.
Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge what is done with this money?—A. I do not know.
Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation, and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. I do not know.
Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of the armor?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. I do not know.
Q. The remainder of this sum of money which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. I do not know.
Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. I do not know.
Q. In reckoning your profit is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant, or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. I do not know.

STATEMENT OF MR. RALPH H. WATSON.

Mr. R. H. Watson, being duly sworn, testified as follows:
The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?
Mr. WATSON. Ralph H. Watson.
The CHAIRMAN. What is your official connection with the Carnegie Steel Co.?
Mr. WATSON. Assistant general superintendent of Homestead Steel Works of Carnegie Steel Co.
Q. How much does it cost your company, f. o. b., to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A–1? That is, material, labor, and shop-overhead charges?—A. I do not have access to the records of cost of the manufacture of armor. Such records are kept in the general offices of the company in Pittsburgh. I am, therefore, unable to answer the question.
Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration?—A. I do not know.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded; that is, how many tons?—A. Four thousand seven hundred and forty-six gross tons.
Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. I do not know.
Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.
Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment in tons?—A. We do not keep a record of it.
Q. What was the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. None.
Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton without machining?—A. I do not know.
Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.
Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Two thousand one hundred and seventy gross tons. The usual scrap allowance was made, but I do not know the amount.
Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the fuel for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. No discard is made after reforging.
Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. No discard made.
Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. I do not know.
Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. Eleven thousand three hundred and ninety-one gross tons.
Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejections?—A. One thousand one hundred and fifteen gross tons.
Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. I do not know.
Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. Ten thousand two hundred and seventy-six gross tons.
Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Six thousand two hundred and sixty-seven gross tons.
Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining? If so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Two hundred and twelve gross tons were rejected during the process of machining. Do not know the amount of allowance made for the rejected material.
Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, and supply of tools?—A. I do not know.
Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operations?—A. I do not know.
Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. I do not know.
Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Five thousand nine hundred and nineteen gross tons.
Q. What do the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. I do not know.
Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. I do not know.
Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. I do not know.
Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the cost per ton of class A–2 shipped plates?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is the cost per ton of class B shipped plates?—A. I do not know.

Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. We do not manufacture class C armor.

Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. I do not know.

Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture, and separate from depreciation?—A. I do not know.

Q. What does this maintenance mean? To what is it applied?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor? How has this been arrived at?—A. I do not know.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionately divided, so as to include the armor plate.—A. I do not know.

Q. How much did the insurance charges on your armor plant amount to?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is the depreciation and how has it been arrived at?—A. I do not know.

Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. I do not know.

Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation, and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. I do not know.

Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. I do not know.

Q. The remainder of this sum of money which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. I do not know.

Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. I do not know.

Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. I do not know.

STATEMENT OF MR. JAMES J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. James J. Campbell, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. CAMPBELL. James J. Campbell.

Q. What is your official connection with the Carnegie Steel Co.?—A. I am the auditor and assistant secretary of the company, and as auditor am in control of all of the company's accounting.

Q. How much does it cost your company, f. o. b., to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A–1? That is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges.—A. I am not permitted by the policy of our company to give out such information.

Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration?—A. As this is a detail of our costs, I can not state, for the reason given in answer to the preceding question.

Q. In calculating costs do you take the annual output of a single year or of a term of years, and do you make any allowance for rejections and ballistic failures?—A. We make monthly costs of our armor ingots produced, and at the end of each calendar year make up yearly costs of same, taking cognizance of any annual adjustments which could not be worked into the monthly costs. From ingots forward we carry the manufacturing expenses in suspense until the armor plates are finally finished, at which times (monthly) we make costs for the finished plates, which also include the costs of the ingots used in the process. We try to include in these costs all items (whether debits or credits) which properly relate thereto.

Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat.—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the cost for forging?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. Eighteen thousand eight hundred and thirty-one gross tons.

Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching the forge?—A. Five hundred and twenty-four gross tons.

Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. Eighteen thousand three hundred and seven gross tons.

Q. How many tons of ingots were rejected during the forging?—A. None.

Q. What scrap allowance was made for those rejected during forging?—A. None rejected.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. This is also a detail of costs; however, we have no accurate line on what the oxidization and scale is at this point in the process.

Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. As this is a detail of costs I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected what percentage was discarded? That is, how many tons?—A. Four thousand seven hundred and forty-six gross tons.

Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment in tons?—A. This is also a detail of cost. However, I would state that we have no accurate account of the oxidization and scale in this step of the process.

Q. What was the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. None.

Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton without machining?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one gross tons.

Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Two thousand one hundred and seventy gross tons. The allowance made therefor is a detail of our cost which I am not at liberty to reveal.

Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. None.

Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. No discard made.

Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. Eleven thousand three hundred and ninety-one gross tons.

Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. One thousand one hundred and fifteen gross tons.

Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. Ten thousand two hundred and seventy-six gross tons.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Six thousand two hundred and sixty-seven gross tons.

Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining? If so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Two hundred and twelve gross tons. The allowance made therefor is a detail of our cost which I am not at liberty to reveal.

Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much does the machine scrap amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, and supply of tools?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operations?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Five thousand nine hundred and nineteen gross tons.

Q. What do the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class A-2 shipped plates?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class B shipped plates?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. I understand that class "C" covers bolts, nuts, etc., I would state that we do not manufacture this class.

Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. We do not have a segregated working capital for this department of our business; but our estimate is that it requires about $1,200,000, operating as we have been in recent years. In this connection, it must be understood that the process for making heavy cemented armor covers a period of about eight months—from the making of the ingot to the shipping of the group; and, although the Government makes partial payments at various stages of the process, 10 per cent of the price of the last group is withheld until six months after the last plate is placed on the vessel, provided that this final 10 per cent shall not be withheld more than nine months after the shipment of the last plate.

Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture, and separate from depreciation?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What does this maintenance mean? To what is it applied?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor? How has this been arrived at?—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionately divided so as to include the armor plant.—A. As this is a detail of costs, I can not state, for the reason already given.

Q. How much did the insurance charges on your armor plant amount to?—A. This is also a detail of costs, but, as a matter of fact, we carry our own risks and figure a provision accordingly.

Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. This is also a detail of costs. We have to estimate the amount of taxes applicable to our armor plant because the local tax assessments are made in such a way that armor-plant facilities are mixed up with other facilities at our Homestead Works.

Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund?—A. This is also a detail of costs; but we do not charge anything for pensions. We only charge a provision, based on our experience, to take care of our liability on account of accidental injuries to employees—which comprehends not only compensation for partial or total disability, but also the payment of wages to and surgical and hospital care of the injured while off duty because of accidents.

Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant?—A. Under our practice we do not charge depreciation as an item of our manufacturing costs. We provide for depreciation through our general profit and loss account, and this provision is made with reference to all our plants and facilities as a whole, and not as to units or classes of equipment. Of course, when we come to estimate selling costs for any particular product we must approximate a fair rate of depreciation applicable thereto.

Q. What is this depreciation, and how has it been arrived at?—A. Having in mind the answer just made, I would state that we consider that our so-called selling costs for armor should include a charge for depreciation based on a rate of 6 per cent per annum on the cost of the plant and facilities, exclusive of cost of site, considering fully the character and risks of the business.

Q. After a year's operations, within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. As already stated, we do not set aside depreciation funds specifically on the armor plant.

Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. Depreciation funds in a going business like ours are used to replace worn-out facilities in kind or to ultimately return to stockholders exhausted investments.

Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. As already explained, we do not charge into our costs for depreciation.

Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. I can not tell just how much has been charged off to general depreciation funds which have been provided for all property, for renewals and replacements of the armor plant. The armor plant was owned and operated up to 1900 by the old Carnegie partnerships, i. e., Carnegie, Phipps & Co. (Ltd.), to July 1, 1892, and then by the Carnegie Steel Co. (Ltd.), whose books of account are not in our present corporation's possession. I do know, however, that none of these expenditures for renewals and replacements have been added to capital account.

Q. The remainder of this sum of money which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. Any unexpended allowances made for general depreciation for all property have not, as yet, been used for amortizing any of the original investment. But we claim that good business principles and practices permit us, when estimating our selling costs, to include therein always the recognized fair rate of depreciation applicable to such plants, so long as we maintain our plant efficiently and sufficiently, without regard to any amounts which may or may not have been set aside from profits or otherwise for amortization.

Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. In the armor plant and auxiliary departments required and used for armor making, there has been invested, up to October 31, 1914, $6,125,846.44, including a value of $450,000 for 30 acres of land.

Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. It does not include cost of any replacements, so far as I can determine from records now available.

Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant, or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. We do not calculate our profits in this manner. Differences between selling price, proceeds, and shop or manufacturing costs are carried to credit of our general profit and loss account, and all overhead expenses and taxes and general depreciation, etc., are charged to general profit and loss.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE,
South Bethlehem, Pa., Wednesday, November 25, 1914.

The committee met at 2.15 p. m. at the office of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding.

Present: Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, Rear Admiral J. Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee. Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy, Mr. J. B. Knight and Mr. E. S. Theall, assistants to the committee.

There were also present Mr. E. G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Mr. W. F. Roberts, general superintendent of the Lehigh plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Mr. F. A. Shick, comptroller and auditor of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee prepared before we left Washington, considering all the phases of the manufacture of armor and in pursuance of instructions in the law, a list of questions which Admiral Strauss will propound to you as he did to Mr. Dinkey, president of the Carnegie Steel Co.

STATEMENT OF MR. E. G. GRACE, PRESIDENT OF THE BETHLEHEM STEEL CO.

Mr. E. G. Grace, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name, and what connection do you have with this company?

Mr. GRACE. E. G. Grace, president of the company.

The CHAIRMAN. President of the Bethlehem Steel Co.?

Mr. GRACE. Yes, sir; president of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much does it cost your company to produce a ton of K. C. armor, f. o. b., class A-1 armor, including material, labor, and shop overhead charges?—A. We would prefer not to answer. We consider the cost of armor as confidential information, and the character of information which we would not want to make available for our competitors. We believe that we have developed processes in our method of manufacturing armor which are unique and unusual, and not known to our competitors. Such conditions are naturally reflected in costs, and are the development of our many years of experience in the manufacture of armor, and constitute a very valuable asset as stock in trade. We understand the object of your investigation to be to obtain information relative to armor-plate plant and armor-plate manufacture, to the end of the possible building and operating of an armor-plate plant by the United States Government. In the event of this coming to pass, we would look upon the United States Government as a more serious competitor than the ordinary competitor, on account of its position of controlling the purchases of armor. We must also bear in mind that we are at all times subject to foreign competition, operating under widely different conditions than confront us in this country. Unquestionably, information of the character requested in the above question would place our present and possible future competitors in a position of decided advantage over us.

Q. Has this cost been reached by taking the annual output of a single year, or of a term of years, and making allowance for rejections and ballistic failures?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat.—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost for forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. Eighteen thousand and ninety-four and thirty-seven one-hundredths tons.

Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching the forge? What was the total number of tons rejected before coming to the forge?—A. Same as first question.

Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. Eighteen thousand and fourteen and forty-five one-hundredths.

Q. How many tons were rejected during the forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What scrap allowance was made for those rejected during forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. Same as answer to first question.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded—how many tons?—A. We will attempt to give you the approximate yield of finished plate from the ingot. I think that is the way we can get it.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the percentage of armor plate shipped and delivered to the Government, or delivered to the Government and the material you started out with?

Mr. GRACE. This phrase would cover it with us: The percentage of yield of shippable material in our armor-plate practice. We would be glad to give you the average of that. It varies considerably.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give us the total you start with?

Mr. GRACE. We will give you the yield of good armor plate from the ingot.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give us the weight of the ingot you start with?

Mr. GRACE. Yes; the weight of the ingot. I will give you the percentage of yield of good armor plates from those ingots. For instance, if we had 8,000 tons of ingots cast last year, I will give you the percentage of shippable armor, approximately, out of those ingots—40, 42, or 43 per cent, whatever it may be. [Later.] Our yield of shippable armor for 1913 was about 41 per cent.

Admiral STRAUSS. What allowance is made for the metal thus discarded?

A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Twelve thousand four hundred and thirty-four and seventy one-hundredths tons.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment, in tons?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What was the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton without machining?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-five and four one-hundredths tons.

Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. About 25 to 30 per cent.

Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. You mean by that all kinds of treatment?

Admiral STRAUSS. Treatments of armor; that would not include your first treatment of the ingot.

A. Twelve thousand four hundred and thirty-four and seventy-one hundredths tons.

Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Seven thousand two hundred and sixty-nine and twenty-two hundredths tons.

Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining? If so, how many tons and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. The cost of the machined scrap, or the weight?

Admiral STRAUSS. The weight.

A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, supply of tools?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operation?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced, ready for shipping, but not f. o. b. and jacked up?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Seven thousand two hundred and seventy-seven and twenty-nine one-hundredths tons.

Q. What do the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. We will supply that as to method. [Later.] The cost of each of these items is kept as to total, and is distributed to cost of armor plate on the basis of service rendered.

Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year? By power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be. And how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class A–2 shipped plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class B shipped plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. We have no definite working capital against any one of our particular products, but would estimate the amount of working capital required for the manufacture of armor to be $500,000, including its inventories.

Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum; that is, the armor plant and all that belongs to the production of armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture and separate from depreciation?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor; how has this been arrived at?—A. We make no division.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionally divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. We haven't such a thing.

Q. How much did the insurance charges on the armor plant amount to?—A. We make no attempt to distribute them.

Mr. PADGETT. Referring to the question before the last, with reference to the statement of salaries paid to those engaged in the manufacture of armor. You say you have no list?

Mr. GRACE. I must have misunderstood the question. We have no division of the salaries as against armor.

Admiral STRAUSS. The question was, "Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionally divided, so as to include the armor plant."

Mr. GRACE. We would want to say "no" to that.

Mr. PADGETT. That was the reason I asked the question, because it occurred to me that it could be taken both ways.

Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. We make no division of that.

Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund?—A. No direct charge against any of the products of the works.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to ask a question right there. In fixing the selling price of armor do you put that in as one of the elements of cost?

Mr. GRACE. We would put it in; yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Would you state what you put in for that?

Mr. GRACE. No; we would not want to tell that, because it is a part of the cost of armor.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I understand.

Mr. GRACE. In an estimated way.

Mr. PADGETT. You mean you do not keep it in your books, but you put it in as one of the component elements in fixing the price?

Mr. GRACE. In arriving at the selling price, naturally, just the same as we would do on any other of our products. We reflect in our own way an estimated amount for the overhead of that particular product. We would not want to give that information on armor.

Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant?—A. None, direct.

Mr. PADGETT. Just on that point. In fixing the selling price you put that in as one of the elements—the depreciation of your plant—in fixing the selling price?

Mr. GRACE. We reflect in our price an estimated amount, or our own idea of the amount, overhead charges, local taxes, insurance, and all those things which are not carried directly against any one product, but which we use our own judgment in distributing.

Mr. PADGETT. And you do distribute them in fixing the price?

Mr. GRACE. In our mind we have a certain idea of what that would be, but it does not show in our books anywhere.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, as to what that proportional part is, you decline to answer?

Mr. GRACE. Yes; I would not want to say.

Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. There is really no money set aside. It is a matter of a book entry.

Mr. PADGETT. What do you do with that book entry to counterbalance?

Mr. GRACE. I will refer that question to the auditor.

Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation, and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. We will endeavor to give our method of handling our overhead and depreciation charges when we get your direct questions. I think that will make it simpler for you because we have no objection to explaining our method of handling our accounts. [Later.] Our general administrative and selling expenses are charged monthly to our general profit-and-loss account and are not distributed against any individual products. The matter of depreciation is decided at the end of our fiscal year, and a lump sum is set aside to cover depreciation and obsolescence on our entire properties.

Q. Since the erection of your armor plant, what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. That, of course, we do not have. We have never distributed that way.

The CHAIRMAN. What have you spent for repairs to your plant for manufacturing armor since I was here?

Mr. GRACE. That I would not know.

The CHAIRMAN. You pointed out where you had rebuilt entirely a good part of it.

Mr. GRACE. Yes; but there are certain items which you would call repairs and extensions to plant which were not legitimate repairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind supplying the Government an estimate of an up-to-date armor plant?

Mr. GRACE. I would not want to do that; but I would be entirely willing to state in a general way what I think an armor plant could be built for, for the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state that now?

Mr. GRACE. I think $1,000,000 for 1,000 tons of output. My judgment would be that a 10,000-ton plant would cost approximately $10,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. And would that mean that a 20,000-ton plant would cost $20,000,000?

Mr. GRACE. No. That is the reason I stated cost for a plant of 10,000 tons capacity as a basis, for in creating a larger plant there would be many items which would not have to be duplicated for the increased capacity.

Admiral STRAUSS. What is the capacity of your plant?

Mr. GRACE. From 10,000 to 12,000 tons a year, on the present character of armor.

Admiral STRAUSS. How much money do you estimate, if you care to answer that question, that you have invested in your plant exclusive of the site?

Mr. GRACE. In the neighborhood of $7,100,000.

Admiral STRAUSS. Why, then, would it cost the Government $12,000,000 to duplicate your plant?

Mr. GRACE. To begin with, our plant is built at cost; there is no profit in it. Our plant has been, in the main, created by ourselves and built at our cost, which you could not duplicate in a contracting proposition. If our plant has cost us over $7,000,000, you would not have to add much of a contractor's profit, which they would insist on having from the Government, to bring it up to $10,000,000 or $12,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind indicating whereabouts in the United States you think would be the best place for the Government to construct a plant?

Mr. GRACE. Bethlehem.

The CHAIRMAN. You want your rival right at home?

Mr. GRACE. We want him where we can watch him.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind stating why?

Mr. GRACE. Good labor conditions, and the Bethlehem Steel Co. would furnish you your pig iron very cheaply.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you want a customer as well as a competitor?

Mr. GRACE. We want a customer as well as a competitor. Speaking seriously, now, we believe that this territory—Bethlehem, Philadelphia—is very well located for a steel industry, and your shipyards are primarily on the eastern coast, where the armor will be consumed.

Mr. PADGETT. You speak of this section; do you include Philadelphia in the Bethlehem region?

Mr. GRACE. Yes. If you ask me personally, I should say Bethlehem, but Philadelphia is a good location for any geographical reasons that one could give. I think, maybe, our labor conditions are possibly better than at Philadelphia; but outside of Philadelphia you get possibly as good labor conditions as you get here. I certainly think you want your armor plant, if you build one, in the East, where you can assemble your raw materials cheaply and where you will have your shipyards, your consumers, near at hand.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind telling the committee what salaries these gentlemen in here are receiving, including yourself?

Mr. GRACE. I would not want to tell you that.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind telling the committee what your foremen of the shops receive?

Mr. GRACE. I would not want to give you that information, because it has a direct bearing on labor conditions and on resulting costs; and it would be a difficult matter for me to supply it in any event, for the reason that our men are paid a nominal salary and participate in the profits. Every man you are talking to here has a certain salary and participation in the profits of the company, so your salary list would not be representative.

The CHAIRMAN. How many graduates of the Naval Academy or ex-naval officers have you in your employ?

Mr. GRACE. We will be glad to supply that, and I hope to get some more. [Later.] We have 11 United States naval graduates and ex-officers in our employ.

The CHAIRMAN. All that I have ever seen are very fine gentlemen.

Mr. GRACE. They are very fine gentlemen. I will also supply you the number from West Point, if you like. [Later.] We have one United States Army graduate and three ex-officers in our employ.

Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. Approximately $7,100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. And you think you have a fine one?

Mr. GRACE. We have a pretty good plant; it needs some improvements to it. I pointed out to you when we went through the shops where we have to make a large expenditure to increase our bending facilities. We are not ashamed of our plant as compared with our competitors, nor of its product, either.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not boasting, you are just conscious of your own worth and do not mind claiming it?

Mr. GRACE. I will take every opportunity to advertise it.

Q. Does that sum include the cost of the land?—A. No.

Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. We have no absolute book records of the total investment in armor-plate plant. First, because many of our records showing the detail cost of various items were destroyed in the office fire in 1906; and second, because in a plant like ours, where an armor-plate plant is one of the departments served by auxiliary departments, such as transportation, electric stations, and the like, it is necessary to divide on our best possible judgment and distribute on our best possible judgment the investment in such auxiliary departments. With the reserves that the statement is based on our best possible judgment we consider the investment in our armor-plate plant (exclusive of working capital and inventories) to be $7,128,705, which represents the value only of land, buildings, machinery, and equipment which are now actually in the plant and in operation and does not include the value of any machinery or equipment which has been scrapped or dismantled.

Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. No; we make no division of our total profits.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever figured out the relative expense connected with the armor factory and the general plant?

Mr. GRACE. We have estimated what the value of our armor plant is, in figuring the price of armor—what we should get as being the right price for it. We have made our own estimate in arriving at the price which we asked for armor, but in our accounting we do not have such a thing, because we have a general expense for all the parts of the company.

Q. How many acres are now occupied by your plant?—A. Find it impossible to give accurate answer to this question on account of our auxiliary departments serving generally other departments as well as the armor-plate department.

Mr. PADGETT. Just a moment, please, before we get away from that. In 1906 the figures furnished by the Bethlehem Steel Co. to the committee that was investigating the matter was $5,625,000 for armor plant alone. That appears in House Document No. 193, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, on page 30. And I was going to ask you to state, when you made your answer, the items that you have added since 1906 to run it up to $7,100,000.

Mr. GRACE. In other words, we will see if we can connect this statement with our present situation. That is what you want. We will see if we can coincide those two dates. Whether we can or not I am not sure, but I think we can. But whatever we supply will be, from the best of our knowledge, correct as shown on our books to-day. We will give you from our records the amount of money which we have at this date invested in the armor-plate plant. That, after all, seems to me is what you want, and that would be better even than mere hearsay of this character.

Admiral STRAUSS. I would just like to go back to that question—I do not know whether Mr. Grace said he would tell us or not—and that is, how he arrives at the cost; what method he employs in arriving at a proper selling price for the armor.

Mr. GRACE. I could only cover that in a broad statement of this kind, that we estimate our costs, including what we would consider in our judgment belongs to the armor-plate department. We would arrive at an estimated cost of output upon which we would base our judgment for selling price, but that would absolutely have to be an estimation.

The CHAIRMAN. What percentage of your business is the manufacture of armor?

Mr. GRACE. Well, Senator, that varies so much with the amount of work which is given to us by the Navy Department. For instance, the last two or three years we have had armor-plate contracts amounting to 2,500 or 2,600 tons of armor a year. We have had 5,000-ton contracts; we have had 8,000-ton contracts. So it varies absolutely with each year.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, what I was arriving at was this: What dividend did the company pay?

Mr. GRACE. There is no objection to stating that. We are paying 5 per cent on the preferred stock.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the capital stock?

Mr. GRACE. Thirty millions—fifteen millions preferred and fifteen millions common stock. From 1907 to 1912, inclusive, we paid no dividends. In 1913 and 1914 we paid 5 per cent on the preferred stock. We have never paid any dividend on the common.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you say the capital was?

Mr. GRACE. Thirty million—fifteen million preferred and fifteen million common.

Mr. PADGETT. You stated that last year the price of armor was $440 a ton, I believe?

Mr. GRACE. That was our contract for the last year's armor—for the base, class A–1 armor.

Mr. PADGETT. This year the contract is $425, isn't it?

Mr. GRACE. That is the contract price for that same class of armor.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, last year you had a contract for about how many tons of armor?

Mr. GRACE. Twenty-six hundred tons from the United States Government.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, this year you have a contract for how much?

Mr. GRACE. For 16,000 tons.

Mr. PADGETT. A little over 16,000 tons?

Mr. GRACE. Between 16,000 and 17,000.

The CHAIRMAN. If your capacity is only 12,000 tons, you will have to get some help to make 16,000 tons.

Mr. GRACE. To meet the conditions of delivery required by the specifications we will have to get help.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask you if the reduction of $15 per ton is a sufficient reduction and a reasonable reduction in the price, considering that last year you had 2,500 tons and this year you have got 16,000 tons, or more than enough to run at your full capacity; and I ask that in view of the statement that was made by Mr. Schwab in 1897 when he said: "I am prepared to say that if you will give us 3,000 tons of armor per year as estimated, we will give you a rebate of $50 per ton for every ton over that quantity. If you will give us 3,500 tons of armor per year, we will give you a rebate of $100 per ton for every ton over that quantity." That is what Mr. Schwab stated. Now, do you think that $15 was a fair and a reasonable reduction or rebate on the quantity between 2,500 tons awarded under the contract last year and 16,000 tons this year?

Mr. GRACE. Irrespective of Mr. Schwab's comments there, which I understand are not put in your direct question to me——

Mr. PADGETT (interposing). I am putting it as a basis.

Mr. GRACE. Of course, I would not comment on Mr. Schwab's statement. Conditions were very different. He was speaking for the Carnegie Steel Co. and not the Bethlehem Steel Co., but if you want me to answer your question whether or not $15 represented a proper reduction on account of tonnage between the price of 1913 and the price of 1914, and that is the real question from your standpoint, I will do so. As conditions are to-day, Mr. PADGETT, I could not comment on Mr. Schwab's statement because I do not know his conditions. He was talking for the Carnegie Steel Co., then.

Mr. PADGETT. What I am trying to get at is this: If for 3,500 tons he would reduce it $100 a ton over that amount, when you run from 2,500 tons up to 16,000 tons, can not the Bethlehem Co. reasonably afford to reduce it more than $15 a ton?

Mr. GRACE. If you will ask me the question, I am ready to answer it from our standpoint as to comparative prices but I could not, naturally, connect it with that statement of which I know nothing.

Mr. PADGETT. I will put the question in this way: Leaving out the statement of Mr. Schwab, and saying that if you had a contract last year for 2,500 tons at $440 per ton, and this year you are given 16,000 tons, bearing in mind that one is a small quantity and the other is a very large quantity, could you not afford to make a reduction of more than $15 per ton?

Mr. GRACE. Not below the price of $440, because $440 was not a sufficient price for 2,500 or 2,600 tons of armor.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Schwab was then getting $500 or $600 per ton?

Mr. GRACE. I imagine he was.

Mr. PADGETT. The price was $500, I believe?

Lieut. Commander BLOCH. In 1896 it was $550; in 1898 it was $400.

Mr. GRACE. Mr. Padgett, you are going on the assumption that $440 was a proper and a fair price for a small tonnage of armor. This company can not make 2,500 tons of armor a year for $440 a ton without losing money. I am willing to state that.

Mr. PADGETT. You mean that it costs $440 a ton to make armor?

Mr. GRACE. Our company, with its investment to-day in its armor-plate plant, could not take and run our plant at $440 a ton and make money. We would lose money if we did.

Mr. PADGETT. With your other business?

Mr. GRACE. I am talking about the armor.

Mr. PADGETT. But if you had some foreign business?

Mr. GRACE. The United States is our only sure customer. What we have been able to get in the foreign trade has only been within a couple of years, and that has been a fortune of war.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say that you could not afford to make armor at $440 a ton?

Mr. GRACE. No; I did not mean that. We can not make 2,500 tons of armor with our present armor-plate capacity and make any return on our plant as profit; we would show a loss on the basis of $440 a ton.

The CHAIRMAN. Your capacity is about 12,000 tons?

Mr. GRACE. But we only got an order for 2,500 tons from the United States Government last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Whose fault was it that you got no more last year?

Mr. GRACE. We could not get it. The Secretary wouldn't give it to us, I suppose.

I am just showing that we can not make a reduction along the lines of Mr. Padgett's suggestion, because $440 is not the proper basis to start with; it is not correct; it is not a proper selling price for this tonnage of armor.

Admiral STRAUSS. Would you consider the orders of the United States Government, as supplemented by the Army and foreign Governments, as being a sufficient basis to reckon your selling price of armor, and would you consider that in fixing your selling price?

Mr. GRACE. It would add nothing tangible to add our foreign business.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you had a contract for 12,000 or 15,000 tons a year.

Mr. GRACE. We are willing to talk that any time. Then we would have assurance of continuous operations and could plan accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Give us a basis for the talk.

Mr. GRACE. If there is any committee created or given power by Congress to negotiate with the Bethlehem Steel Co. to fill its plant for armor for the next 10 years, we will talk and talk definitely.

The CHAIRMAN. And you will see that the Government does not build its own plant?

Mr. GRACE. We will be entirely willing to make prices lower for a capacity of 10 years in our plant than we can afford to make to-day. There would be no use of my saying so if it wasn't true.

The CHAIRMAN. How much lower?

Mr. GRACE. I would have to figure.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you figure on it and answer later?

Mr. GRACE. If we are put in touch with the proper authorities, with the understanding that they will make such a negotiation, yes, we would be glad to go into it. If the United States Government would come to us as a customer and will give us a contract for 100,000 tons of armor, to be delivered in the next 10 years, we will give you better prices and be very glad to negotiate it.

Admiral STRAUSS. And would the price under those conditions be substantially lower than the present price?

Mr. GRACE. Yes; it would be, because we would have an assured business.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you willing to state to the committee how much?

Mr. GRACE. I would not.

The CHAIRMAN. After you figure?

Mr. GRACE. No; unless the power is invested in some one to conduct such negotiations, and conclude contract if satisfactory basis can be reached. That would be like sending the president of a company to negotiate with an office boy who could not close the transaction whether he wanted to or not. But if you will empower the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, if the Secretary of the Navy will give him that power, we will then see if we can not close a contract with him on a satisfactory basis. The Secretary doesn't have to close if he doesn't get a satisfactory price, but you have Congress empower the Secretary of the Navy to contract with the Bethlehem Steel Co. for 100,000 tons of armor, to be delivered in 10 years, and we would be glad to negotiate with the Secretary of the Navy to see if we can not satisfy him on price. We manifestly could afford to make armor at a less figure under those conditions. That is assured business; it isn't a gamble like it is to-day. This is the first real armor-plate order we have had for some time, the one we are getting this year. We have the same conditions in our gun manufacture, where we have installed this big plant which we have had no work for; Congress hasn't appropriated for it, and the Government has its own big gun shops. We are in the same identical position with reference to our gun plant, and we have sought other fields, and we have been, in a measure, successful. This year is the first year we have gotten a really sizeable order in either guns or armor from the Navy Department for some time.

Mr. PADGETT. Are there any other questions?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Grace, have you ever read up on the records of the company the origin of the manufacture of armor at Bethlehem?

Mr. GRACE. Yes; I am familiar with it in a general way. Naturally, I would be expected to be.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that first contract?

Mr. GRACE. We started manufacturing armor in 1891. That was when we made our first armor. And we have made an average of about 4,500 tons of armor a year for the period of 22 years. That includes everything we have made.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know the amount of the first contract?

Mr. GRACE. No; I do not remember. If it is of interest to you we can give it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. It is of interest. I am under the impression—I could prove it if I had the documents—that for the first contract with Bethlehem the price agreed on included the estimated cost of the improvements to your works—that is, to your works here—as a general iron-works in order to make armor at all.

Mr. GRACE. Well, I do not know enough about it for that.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no place in the United States that could make armor at all—that was equipped to make it. The Secretary of the Navy, in looking around, picked out Bethlehem as the most likely company to engage in the making of armor, and after talking it over the Secretary induced the superintendent or the manager at that time to enter upon the construction or the manufacture of armor plate, and they agreed on a price. The price included the cost of the betterments to your plant that were necessary to enable them to make armor.

Mr. GRACE. I could not say yes or no to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any records that will show it?

Mr. GRACE. No; because the records of our company were destroyed in 1906, except just a few of our records. But you take our situation and history to-day, and that would be impossible; that is, the investment which I know of personally and the extensions made to our plant could not have been reflected in our selling price of armor. You take the selling price, just for quick figuring, at $400 a ton of armor. One year we have been getting no armor, but last year we got 2,500 tons. This, at $400, just for multiplying quickly, would be $1,000,000. The total value of the contract selling price would be about 15 per cent on our investment of $7,000,000; nothing for depreciation or anything else, if it were all profit.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, as the records were burned, it isn't worth while to talk about it.

Mr. GRACE. It seems to me that you would have it in your own files in Washington if such an understanding existed. Your department in Washington would have it. Your correspondence in the Navy Department would show it. I know that at one particular time we were asked to double our capacity of plant. That is in more recent years and was during Mr. Roosevelt's Presidency, at the time when he started on his new naval program. We were practically commanded, or requested, to double the capacity of the plant at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Digging down in my memory for some other ancient history, I recall very distinctly that the Carnegie Co. were induced by a subsequent Secretary, or the next Secretary of the Navy, to enter into the manufacture of armor plate, too, because the Government felt that it would be better to have two competing companies than to be subject to the exactions of one; there was a monopoly. Therefore, contracts were given to Mr. Carnegie—the Carnegie Steel Works—for armor.

Mr. GRACE. Yes; Bethlehem was in before Carnegie started.

The CHAIRMAN. And then, instead of competition, we believe—and when I say "we" I mean, of course, the Government—there was combination. And that combination held the Government up and exacted whatever price it saw fit until the Midvale Steel Co. came forward and made its bids, which were very much lower than either Carnegie's or Bethlehem's.

Mr. GRACE. And then they raised their price.

The CHAIRMAN. Bless God, all three of you have combined now.

Mr. GRACE. They raised their price because experience showed to them, after they got into the business, that they could not afford to sell at the price they started at; no question about that. We have no agreements with Carnegie or Midvale to maintain the price of armor or we wouldn't sign the affidavit that we sign with every contract.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no understanding, implied or expressed, verbal or written?

Mr. GRACE. We have no agreement with anybody as to the price of armor; it is nobody's business except the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s. We have nobody to answer to or for. No question about that. You remember as well as I do that at one time, after an investigation, Congress legislated for the price of armor, which they considered fair and satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. And that was $400 a ton in 1898?

Mr. GRACE. I think that $420 was the price finally placed. That price maintained for some years. It was the policy of the Navy Department to divide the armor among established concerns. Congress had legislated this price and we automatically quoted the price that Congress legislated. We kept on that way and we got one-third of the armor. Of course it was the policy of the Navy Department to keep occupied all three investments which they had caused to be made. I believe that is right and proper, and I think we should do it to-day. I do not think they have any business putting Bethlehem or Carnegie or Midvale out of business. I do not think that is the right policy for national preservation. If the Government is not satisfied that it is getting a correct and proper price for armor, it seems to me the logical thing for it to do is to investigate the industry, which you are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Yet we can not get at the bottom facts.

Mr. GRACE. Yes; you have your experts.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you be willing to allow an expert from the Navy Department go through your books?

Mr. GRACE. No; certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. How are we going to get at the facts if you refuse to tell us?

Mr. GRACE. Just like we would estimate to go into a new industry. In the last few years we have gone into the projectile business, and we made estimates. Your people have made estimates. Admiral Strauss, I presume, has made estimates—I know his predecessors have—of the cost of a plant. You have full reports on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Every one of them varies.

Mr. GRACE. Not widely. All the way back to Admiral Niles, up to the estimate of Admiral Twining, they are very close, just as near as anybody has come—just as near as our own returns will be. They are not the same. You take the armor which was made by certain manufacturers on this year's contracts, the Arizona, that we are making now, I presume the cost of that armor, as compared with the armor for the Pennsylvania, was at least $50, if not $100, a ton higher. I am not stating that as knowledge, but as estimation; as belief.

The CHAIRMAN. As an experienced manufacturer, you would not say that if the Government built its own factory it would get armor cheaper?

Mr. GRACE. No, sir; I do not; nor as good.

The CHAIRMAN. Admiral, that seems to be a reflection on the Bureau of Ordnance, that they can not manufacture as good armor as these private establishments.

Mr. GRACE. It would be a reflection on us, Senator, if, after 15 or 20 years we could not make it better than a new establishment just starting in. The United States gets the best armor that is made in the world to-day. I am satisfied about that. And they are getting the best shells. We know, because we have been in competition with the foreign manufacturers' products on the other side. We have shot our shells and we have shot at our armor, and we know. No, Senator, it is a serious problem with us. We have got to get armor; if it's only a thousand tons we had better take it at the best price we can get, because we get that much return on our investment. It might not be ample, but that investment, that equipment, isn't available for anything else. We can not go out and apply that to commercial manufacture; we depend on the United States Government for our customer; it must be one class of product and nothing else; we can not make engines or guns in the armor plant; it is for armor plate and nothing else. If the United States erects an armor plant we might just as well go out of the business, so far as the United States Government goes.

The CHAIRMAN. If you see the consequences to the private manufacturer of armor if the Government does go into the business of manufacturing its own armor, it would seem to me that you people who make the armor ought to get together and determine just what you will do, and let us know.

Mr. GRACE. Let the United States Government do as some of the foreign Governments do—make a contract for armor plate that calls for a tonnage, like the English, like the German. The English plants are assured for years ahead full-capacity production, and the English Government paying in the face of that $50 or $75 more a ton than the United States is paying, and these plants have been running full for years. That should have some bearing on the whole situation, it seems to me.

The CHAIRMAN. We can not get you to open up your books and let us see what that armor costs.

Mr. GRACE. No; I have stated my reasons for that. I do not think we ought to be called upon to do that. We have been investigated, and I think that Admiral Strauss's department has a very close idea of what it costs to make armor. I should expect that they had. I have seen some reports published that would indicate that whoever made them up got information somewhere. I believe we make armor cheaper than anybody on account of our conditions on some things.

The CHAIRMAN. Cheaper than Midvale or Carnegie?

Mr. GRACE. I think we make armor cheaper than either Midvale or Carnegie. I do not know; that may be because I am so proud of our own establishment here and think that we are better than they are; but there are a number of reasons why we should make armor cheaper than they.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind stating some of them?

Mr. GRACE. We control our own power. Our power must be cheaper than theirs. We have cheaper labor than either of them. I think we have a better plant than either of them.

Admiral STRAUSS. Carnegie has its own power, its own natural gas?

Mr. GRACE. But I think likely they pay more per unit for their power than we do, and they use some bituminous coal in their armor plant. We get all our power from the waste gases; that is, the driving power, not the heating power in the armor factory. The electric power and steam power for driving plant, I presume, is cheaper than Carnegie's or Midvale's. Then Midvale again would be handicapped in cost as against raw material. We do not have the same advantage over Carnegie, but we do have it over Midvale.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the capacity of the Midvale Steel Co.'s works?

Mr. GRACE. In armor? I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the capacity of the Carnegie Works?

Mr. GRACE. I should imagine about 10,000 tons per year. I should imagine we are 2,000 or 3,000 tons a year higher than they are in capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. And you do not know what the Midvale capacity is?

Mr. GRACE. No; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any estimate of Midvale in your own mind?

Mr. GRACE. Well, I should say from 6,000 to 7,000 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, all three of you could not make more than 20,000 tons?

Mr. GRACE. Oh, yes; we could make 25,000. We can make the armor for three ships, requiring about 24,000 or 25,000 tons.

Mr. PADGETT. Twelve and nine would be twenty-one and six would be twenty-seven. Say, conservatively, 25,000 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. I have asked you all the questions I wanted. I haven't got all the answers I would like to get.

Mr. GRACE. I want to answer them frankly. I have tried to tell the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't doubt that.

Mr. GRACE. And if I have made any mistakes, I will be glad to correct them.

Mr. PADGETT. Senator, if you are through, I would suggest that you swear the superintendent of the armor plant and the auditor now, and when we send the transcript of this hearing we will send the same list of questions to each one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. And you think that will cover their written reply?

Mr. PADGETT. We will send the same list of questions to the superintendent of the armor plant and to the auditor, and each one of you will make your own individual responses. They may be the same answers or they may not be the same answers. We will submit the same questions.

Mr. GRACE. They are bound to give the same information, because the information will all come from our records.

Mr. PADGETT. And I presume the others will decline to answer the questions, just as Mr. Grace has declined to answer them, but we wanted to submit these questions to more than one person, not just grouping the answers to one set of questions, but we will have three sets of questions; they will be the same questions submitted to three individuals, and each individual will answer for himself upon his oath.

(Accordingly the chairman administered the oath to Mr. W. F. Roberts, general superintendent of the Lehigh plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., and to Mr. F. A. Shick, comptroller and auditor of the Bethlehem Steel Co.)

STATEMENT OF MR. W. F. ROBERTS.

Mr. W. F. Roberts, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

A. W. F. Roberts.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your official connection with the Bethlehem Steel Co.?

A. General superintendent Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much does it cost your company, f. o. b., to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A–1; that is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration expenses?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Has this cost been reached by taking the annual output of a single year, or of a term of years, and making allowance for rejections and ballastic failures?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost for forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching forge?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How many tons were rejected during the forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What scrap allowance was made for these rejected during forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded? How many tons?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment, in tons?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What were the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, transportation, amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton; no machining?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining; if so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. Same answer as to first question.

Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, supply of tools?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operation?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What do the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class A-2?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class B?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture and separate from depreciation?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does this maintenance mean; to what is it applied?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor; how has this been arrived at?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionally divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much do the insurance charges on the armor plant amount to?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant; what is this depreciation; how has it been arrived at?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation, and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much, if any of this sum of money, has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. The remainder of this sum which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount which has been put into the armor plant, or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

STATEMENT OF MR. F. A. SHICK.

Mr. A. F. Shick, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. SHICK. F. A. Shick.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your official connection with the Bethlehem Steel Co.?

Mr. SHICK. Comptroller and auditor, Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. How much does it cost your company f. o. b. to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A-1; that is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionately divided, so as to include the armor plant?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. How much do the insurance charges on the armor plant amount to?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant; what is this depreciation; how has it been arrived at?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. Same as to first question.
Q. The remainder of this sum which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. Same as to first question.
Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.
Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant, or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. Same answer as made by Mr. E. G. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel Co.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE,
Philadelphia, Pa., Friday, November 27, 1914.

The committee met at 10.45 a. m. at the office of the Midvale Steel Co., Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding.

Present: Hon. L. P. Padgett, Member of Congress; Rear Admiral J. Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee. Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy, and Lieut. Commander H. E. Cook, United States Navy; Mr. J. B. Knight and Mr. E. S. Theall, assistants to the committee.

There were also present Mr. W. P. Barba and Mr. J. B. King, representing the Midvale Steel Co.

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM P. BARBA, MANAGER OF THE MIDVALE STEEL CO.

Mr. W. P. Barba, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please tell us who you are and what position you hold with the company?

Mr. BARBA. William P. Barba, manager.

The CHAIRMAN. Manager of the Midvale Steel Co.?

Mr. BARBA. Manager of the Midvale Steel Co.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the capitalization of that company?

Mr. BARBA. Nine million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. How much is watered stock?

Mr. BARBA. None.

The CHAIRMAN. All solid investment? Where is that stock owned?

Mr. BARBA. It is owned chiefly by the two estates, the estate of Charles J. Harrah owning a majority and the estates of John Sellers and William Sellers owning the minority portion of that stock.

The CHAIRMAN. What dividends does it pay?

Mr. BARBA. It paid 3 per cent during the year just closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything carried to profit and loss?

Mr. BARBA. Well, of course, there is a small addition to the surplus. The books for the year 1913–14 which closed on October 31, that being the end of our fiscal year, are not yet made up, but the dividend rate was reduced that year to 3 per cent from 4 per cent, which we paid the year before, so you see there is not very much allotted to surplus in that year or we would not be reducing the dividend rate.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the company any debt?

Mr. BARBA. No funded debt of any sort, only the one issue of stock—it is neither common nor preferred—and there is no funded debt.

The CHAIRMAN. Its financial conditions are entirely satisfactory?

Mr. BARBA. Its financial conditions are entirely satisfactory. Of course, we have the regular obligations which are necessary in carrying on a business of this magnitude.

The CHAIRMAN. How long has this company been engaged in the manufacture of armor for the Government?

Mr. BARBA. Since 1903.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you here then?

Mr. BARBA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know about the origin of the bid that the Midvale Steel Co. made?

Mr. BARBA. At that time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBA. No, sir; I was not in touch with that branch of our work at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Who does know? Who would be the one to interrogate on that one point?

Mr. BARBA. You mean the original bid?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBA. I think that Mr. Petre, who was manager at that time, would be the man.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he here?

Mr. BARBA. He retired from the service of this company in March of this year and is now living in Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. He is not in this country at all?

Mr. BARBA. No, sir. He reached an age which he thought entitled him to retire from any further active work.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other man who was in the employ of the company who had anything to do with that contract?

Mr. BARBA. I think the president, Mr. Harrah, would know, but Mr. Petre was the active man. In this company the manager is the active man for the general work of the company.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Mr. Harrah in town?

Mr. BARBA. No; he is in New York; he is most of the time in New York; he is over here occasionally.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, will your books or your correspondence show the origin of that bid—why you made that bid?

Mr. BARBA. Will you let me ask you exactly what is meant by "the origin of the bid"?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I wanted to know why you entered into competition with the other two firms. What was the inducement?

Mr. BARBA. I think my general knowledge will enable me to answer that question to your satisfaction. This company was the original and pioneer ordnance manufacturer for the United States Government, we having begun our ordnance work about 1880, when no one else was engaged in it, and we were not manufacturing armor alone of all the ordnance supplies required by the Government. We were manufacturing guns and projectiles, and ship and engine forgings, all of which were required by the Navy, but we were not manufacturing armor; and naturally we wanted to extend at that time our activities toward the supply of all ordnance materials, and we tried for several years to make a successful bid for armor before a plant was erected. I remember that our original bid contemplated beginning delivery in 26 months, during which time we hoped to be able to erect a plant that would enable us to begin delivery of the comparatively small sizes of armor which were required for the purposes of the Navy at that time; and, after making several bids without success under those conditions, we did begin the erection of an armor-manufacturing plant.

The CHAIRMAN. Without having any contract at all?

Mr. BARBA. Without having any contract at all; and we went right on bidding, and finally, when the Mississippi and Idaho were let, we were allowed a portion of the armor required for those ships. Our plant was then practically completed, and we had made experimental firings at Indianhead, I think, in the winter of 1903.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it generally believed among those who were in the business of armor making that armor making was very profitable?

Mr. BARBA. We naturally thought that we would make a profit, or we would not have spent all those millions of dollars that we did.

The CHAIRMAN. Didn't you believe that Carnegie and Bethlehem had a good thing, and therefore you wanted to share in it?

Mr. BARBA. Unquestionably.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the character of the first bid?

Mr. BARBA. You mean the prices?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBA. Would you let me send for a memorandum on that? I want to be accurate.

The CHAIRMAN. We want you to be entirely accurate, because we want to get at the facts, so as to be able to report to Congress just what, in our judgment, the policy of the Government ought to be. You know it is contemplated now that the Government shall build its own armor-plate factory, in order to be free from the hold-up which we believe is now being followed by the combination that is robbing the Government and charging excessive prices.

Mr. BARBA. I have prepared a memorandum, Senator, which is still in very rough form, thinking that you might want to ask me exactly that line of questions, what our bids were at the different periods when we bid successfully and unsuccessfully for armor, and just as much of that memorandum as you like you can have, either as a reply to this question or to any others you may want to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Later we will submit a series of questions prepared by the committee, and probe as deeply as you will allow us to go. We have been very unfortunate in our previous efforts to get at the bottom facts by unwillingness of the companies to expose their secrets to their competitors at home and abroad, and the general answer has been, "I do not know," or, "I am not willing to tell," and therefore we have all retired gracefully, and bowed our thanks, thankful for what we got, although it was little or nothing. Now, we want you to open up and tell us all about this matter, because you realize that if the Government enters into its own armor manufacture itself it will destroy your business in that respect, at least.

Mr. BARBA. Unquestionably.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, you will make no more armor, and it would be very unfortunate for the company as well as ourselves if we (meaning the Government) were to manufacture our own armor because it would be much better if we should have the manufacturers supply the Government at a reasonable price; instead of combining they should compete, but we have found that they would not compete and we believe are in a combine. We may be wrong. Will you open up your books and let us see whether you are in the combine?

Mr. BARBA. You go ahead with your questions and I will answer them faithfully.

The CHAIRMAN. Another question right there. Would you be willing for the Navy Department to send an expert bookkeeper over here and go through your books?

Mr. BARBA. Certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

Mr. BARBA. These books are our private property. They are the basis of our business.

The CHAIRMAN. Hasn't the Government the power, under the Department of Commerce, to send an expert?

Mr. BARBA. And keep matters confidential; yes. Mr. Daniels refused to keep these things confidential when we were asked to furnish them, and we said we would give them if they were kept confidential.

The CHAIRMAN. He couldn't afford to huggermugger behind the curtain and appear to be acting in collusion with you, therefore he had to be open.

Mr. BARBA. You are still more open than he.

The CHAIRMAN. We do not want you to answer anything that you are not willing to answer, and we would not probe in that direction; but you say you are willing to give us all the facts, and when I ask you if you would be willing to let an expert from the Navy Department come here and go through your books, you say, "No."

Mr. BARBA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, how are we going to get at the bottom facts and understand really what armor costs you, except to take your word for it?

Mr. BARBA. Is it essential that you should know what armor costs us? It appears to be essential for you to know what armor is going to cost the United States to manufacture.

The CHAIRMAN. And how are we going to find that out except by going to those men who are now manufacturing armor and finding out the truth?

Mr. BARBA. Your officers who are stationed in the works, particularly in these works, have access to the whole manufacturing with the exception of some work which we ask them to retain as confidential, having reference to our processes, etc. Estimates have been made from time to time by these officers, whom you have stationed here to inspect the integrity of the work we manufacture. I say that these officers have made estimates and returns to the department of what, in their judgment, constitutes the cost of armor as manufactured at these works, and presumably the same at other works. These figures have been published. Were we to disclose the books of the company in the way that you propose, it would be no more possible to avoid disclosure of what those books show than has been the case in the past when presumably confidential reports were sent in to the department, and we wish to protect ourselves against that condition, much as I personally believe it to be to the interest of this company to tell you what armor costs us to manufacture; because I firmly believe that if you knew what it cost this company to manufacture armor under the present specifications it would be the strongest possible deterrent in the purpose of the Government, as expressed in the last naval act, to build its own plant.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if we could feel satisfied that the Government is not suffering from a combination and was actually getting competition, I do not have any idea that the Government would build any armor factory at all, but we found that the reduction in the cost of powder was so great when the Government went into its manufacture, that we feel that if the Government makes its own armor it will get an equal reduction there.

Mr. BARBA. I really know nothing about the manufacture of powder, except the debates in Congress have shown the prevailing prices and the present prices of the manufacture of powder, and the reports of Admiral Strauss show what the powder costs him to manufacture at Indianhead. I know little of the overhead costs of the plant required for powder, but I do know from our close touch with the manufacture of armor and gun forgings and the finished guns, and the discussions that we have had on these subjects in the Navy Department, in the Bureau of Ordnance, from time to time during the past years, that the Government does not manufacture its present lines of manufacture on the same lines that a commercial concern is compelled to follow. We are in competition with the world on our commercial lines of manufacture, and we know.

The CHAIRMAN. Right here, do you make armor for other Governments? Has this company had foreign contracts?

Mr. BARBA. Just one; for the Italian Government.

The CHAIRMAN. For what battleship?

Mr. BARBA. The San Marco and the San Giorgio.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it the same type of armor that you are manufacturing for the United States?

Mr. BARBA. Practically. We made a bid of $455.70 per ton for 2,100 tons for the Italian Government and were awarded the contract, and in addition to the gross sum we received about $15,000 more on that contract for some peculiarities of the specifications, which reimbursed us for the scrap which was cut off, such as the holes in the port plates, like the one you saw in the shop this morning. The Italian Government paid for that material, as well as the shipped plate, so that while the contract price was $455 per ton, we really received more than that. The date was approximately 1906–7.

The CHAIRMAN. What does your present contract with the Government amount to?

Mr. BARBA. The amount?

The CHAIRMAN. The amount of armor plate that you are manufacturing.

Mr. BARBA. Let me define that a little more closely. You mean the contract that you saw them manufacturing out there this morning for the Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. The last one Admiral Strauss gave you.

Admiral STRAUSS. The very recent one.

Mr. BARBA. The very recent one will be for the armor for one ship, the Mississippi, amounting approximately to 8,500 tons, and at a base price of $425 per ton.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that your bid, or were you compelled to lower that a little?

Mr. BARBA. We were compelled to lower it from the original figure of $436. The Secretary had two or three conferences with us and asked us to revise our bid, which we did, and we finally offered the Secretary a letter containing a sealed bid—that is, a nondisclosed bid—and in that letter we advised him that we would be glad to take the armor for one ship, which was our capacity at this time, at the lowest prices which any competitor offered him at this time, and he thereupon wrote us offering us that armor at $425 a ton, our bid having been revised from $436 a ton to $427 a ton, and we accepted the armor for one ship at a base price of $425 per ton.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you kept your books in a way to find out for your own satisfaction just what armor plate costs you?

Mr. BARBA. We believe we have. We aim to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell us?

Mr. BARBA. The cost as disclosed by the books I must decline to, much as I should like to give it, and I believe it would be a useful thing, but we are advised by counsel to reserve the disclosure of our costs upon our books. That is a matter entirely private to the higher officers of this company.

The CHAIRMAN. You say the papers and correspondence in relation to the first contract are not here, or are here?

Mr. BARBA. Unquestionably we have those papers on file.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you be willing to allow our expert examine those?

Mr. BARBA. You mean the papers comprising the bids?

The CHAIRMAN. Why did Midvale bid? That is what I want to know. Will that correspondence show why you bid?

Mr. BARBA. The original correspondence, Senator? In that case there is no correspondence except that we replied to the Government's invitation to bid and introduced a bid. Probably I do not understand the purport of your question.

The CHAIRMAN. What I am really after is to get at the facts which led this company to go in and bid for armor plate when Carnegie and Bethlehem seemed to have the business so tightly gripped that it was not worth while. I was on the Naval Committee at the time and I remember hearing a rumor rather than any direct information that Midvale would bid, and it finally did bid and got a contract because it was lower than the other two, and then President Roosevelt, of his own volition, and without any authority of law, divided it up and gave Bethlehem and Carnegie part of it, you only getting one-third of the original contract.

Mr. BARBA. In the original contract which we secured?

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to know the amount of armor and the price Midvale bid. I can get that in the Navy Department, of course.

Mr. BARBA. This original contract given to Midvale was for armor for the Mississippi and Idaho. There were about 16,000 tons required, and Midvale was awarded a little over one-third of that armor, having bid for class A $398 per ton; Carnegie's and Bethlehem's bids at that time were alike at $420 per ton. This was in October, 1903.

Mr. PADGETT. The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies were required to come to your bid, I believe.

Admiral STRAUSS. How much was that, 5,000 tons?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. Was it profitable to the company to manufacture that 5,000 tons at $398 per ton?

Mr. BARBA. Being an initial contract, it certainly was not, because we had everything to shake down, all kinds of difficulties to meet. Mr. Padgett's question, as to whether Bethlehem and Carnegie received their armor at the price at which we received ours, should be answered negatively. The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies were awarded their proportions of armor at their prices, their average being, plus royalties, $450.60 per ton as against an average price of $397 bid by Midvale, which asked no royalty, so that one-third of the Mississippi and Idaho armor was placed with us at $397 net, and two-thirds were placed with Bethlehem and Carnegie at $450.60 net.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were the facts as disclosed by the official records?

Mr. BARBA. So far as we can get them; yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. Are you not mistaken in saying that this 16,000 tons was for the Idaho and Mississippi?

Lieut. Commander BLOCH. The armor for the Vermont, Kansas, and Minnesota was advertised for at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did it take you to produce that 5,000 tons?

Mr. BARBA. I can not answer that accurately, but if you will leave the question open I will supply it later. (Further answer to question 54: About two years.)

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell the committee how much money you had invested in your armor plant when you started to produce that armor?

Mr. BARBA. I can only speak from general knowledge, and would not like this answer to go down as an accurate statement. The general knowledge I have handed to me by the conversations with Mr. Petty, my predecessor, at different times, showed that we had approximately $3,000,000 in cash laid aside for the purpose of building this armor plant, and that the construction required all of this three million and practically two million more at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you mean to say that you spent $5,000,000?

Mr. BARBA. At that time, and have extended the plant very materially since.

Mr. PADGETT. What time was that you speak of, that you expended $5,000,000?

Mr. BARBA. 1903.

Mr. PADGETT. I have before me House Document No. 193, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, "Cost of Armor Plate and Armor Plant," the report of the committee that was investigating it, in which, on page 30, appears the following:

"The Midvale Co. furnished the board with general figures as to the cost of its armor plant, omitting any details of how this cost is made up. The statement of this company shows that it has expended on its armor plant somewhat in excess of $3,500,000, but explains that the amount is not accurately stated because of the transfer to armor plant of certain tools installed previous to its entering the field of armor making, and to the further fact that certain other tools that might fairly be classed as armor plant are not exclusively used in that plant. The company further states that this estimate does not include the value of the ground occupied or interest on the construction investment, but does take account of the cost of designing and superintendence."

Now, in 1903, I understand you to have stated that you had expended $5,000,000, and this statement that was furnished in 1906 puts the amount, as I have just read, at $3,500,000.

Mr. BARBA. My answer also included that I have no accurate knowledge on this matter, but that in conversation with Mr. Petre, the manager up to the beginning of this year, I had gathered that such were the facts.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Can you put into your hearings, when they come to you for revision, a statement as to the cost at different periods, say, in 1903, 1906, and at the present time?

Mr. BARBA. I think that can be done. I shall be very glad to take the matter up when I see the form of your question.

Mr. PADGETT. When the question comes back to you for revision I would be glad if you would give us those figures, and any answer to this question necessary for information.

Mr. BARBA. I understand. [Further answer to question:] We find by examination of our books that in 1903, the armor plant being still uncompleted, we have no book value. In 1906–7 the book value of our armor plant was $3,905,527.12. In 1914 the book value of our armor plant was $4,993,654.17, after having been depreciated yearly by a rate approximating 7½ per cent yearly depreciation. This rate has been found to be too low, and a rate more nearly a 10 per cent basis will have to be used in the future, owing to the great wear and tear on machinery and by reason of changing requirements as to size, mass, quality of plates, etc. The reproduction costs of this plant and equipment would be much greater to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. You are aware that this committee has power to send for persons and papers? I think it very essential that we should get some papers that will show us why Midvale went into that competition with Carnegie and Bethlehem; also whether there is at this time any combination or not. Can you throw any light on that subject?

Mr. BARBA. Why we went into the competition?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBA. As already indicated in a previous answer, we unquestionably believed that we could make a profit on the manufacture of armor at the prices which were then obtained for armor contracts, and I have no doubt, although no sure knowledge on this point, that estimates were made by the then officials of the company to show what in their belief would be the manufacturing cost of armor in 1903, so that they unquestionably satisfied themselves that at the then prevailing prices a profit could be obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been associated with the company?

Mr. BARBA. Thirty-five years.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not anywhere near the top then?

Mr. BARBA. I was in charge of one of the manufacturing departments at that time.

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask you a question? If you could take a contract in 1903 at $398 base price on the basis of 5,000 tons, I will ask you to state if the different companies could not afford to take a contract for 16,000 tons (the Bethlehem Co. has 16,000 tons), at less than $425 per ton at the present time.

Mr. BARBA. Mr. Padgett, the answer to your question is a very simple one. The character of armor manufactured in 1903 in no way compares with the character of armor manufactured now, either in size, weight, or bulk of the individual pieces, the ballistic requirements, the character of projectiles used in testing armor, or even the cost of raw material and wages, both of which have very materially increased in the 10 years that have elapsed in that period, and wages in particular have increased approximately 50 per cent through the necessity of manufacturing armor on the 8-hour law. You know most of our processes in manufacturing require operations both day and night. We therefore have divided our gangs into three shifts of eight hours each, and we have found it absolutely necessary to pay for eight hours' work exactly what we formerly paid for 10 hours' work, so that the company gets absolutely no increase of production from most of these processes and is obliged to pay a very much larger sum in wages. At the same time the rate of wages has materially increased during the 10 years that have elapsed. The character of the armor is very different, as your own technical men will affirm. The requirements are more severe. The difficulties of manufacture have been multiplied. I will not say that the percentage of rejections has increased, because I believe that the capacity of the makers to manufacture this newer type of armor has also advanced.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean their skill and knowledge?

Mr. BARBA. Their skill and knowledge have advanced. I think it would be quite an interesting study to look up the relative percentages of failing plates in 1903 and 1913. Possibly Mr. Bloch knows offhand what this amounts to. I must say I do not, but I am going to look it up through plain interest in the subject. So that, with the advancing requirements for the production of armor and the increasing difficulties, I believe that the price of armor to-day is too low as compared with the present-day cost of manufacture. As an illustration of that, I do not mind telling you, Senator, this much from our books. We should really consider the manufacture of modern armor as represented only by the Pennsylvania armor or the Arizona armor because the specifications took a wide advance about that time. The cost of producing the Arizona armor is approximately $20 per ton more than the cost of producing the Pennsylvania armor at this plant. [Further answer to question:] For the Mississippi and Idaho, which was our initial contract, there were 11 ballistic tests and no failures, these being the first groups of armor ever submitted by this company. In the most recently completed contracts, namely, the Arizona and Pennsylvania, there were four groups of armor, each requiring ordinarily four test plates for the acceptance of the four groups; to pass these four groups it was necessary to present eight plates, four of which failed on ballistic test, requiring substitution or further test plates to the number of an additional four plates, with the consequent loss to the manufacturer. Thus the increased severity of specifications and difficulty of meeting them resulted in reducing the effective price per ton received by us by the amount of $33 per ton on the contracts of 5,737 tons—$190,000 for the Arizona and Pennsylvania.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, in your progress you are reducing the cost of manufacture?

Mr. BARBA. No; the cost and risk of manufacturing advanced with the most recent contract.

The CHAIRMAN. That is due to the severer specifications?

Mr. BARBA. To the severer specifications, and possibly to our lack of skill, as you remarked a moment ago. We might not have been very successful in that; but Admiral Strauss will confirm the fact that the specifications for battleship 39 were way in advance of the specifications for battleship 38, as a natural result of which the contract just about completed shows us an advance in cost of manufacture for battleship 39 over battleship 38 of approximately $20 per ton.

Mr. PADGETT. You mentioned a moment ago about the eight-hour law. What do you estimate was the percentage of the increased cost of manufacturing due to the eight-hour law, if any? Was there any increased cost in adopting the eight-hour law? You get two hours less work. Do you get more efficient service during the 8 hours than you did during 10 hours?

Mr. BARBA. Mr. Padgett, you have opened up two very interesting questions. The first one, about the added cost due to the imposition of the eight-hour law, was one which we estimated, when making our price for the armor for the Pennsylvania, which was the first to be manufactured under the new eight-hour law, as approximately 10 per cent advance in cost; it was a most indeterminable point; the only thing you could figure on was wages. You do not know when you begin an armor plate how much money you are going to spend for wages. For instance, if you have a failing plate and you are required to re-treat a group or a portion of the group, each of those plates that are re-treated stands you very close to a thousand dollars for each re-treatment, and the wages all go in there at the advanced rate. We found it necessary to take men off the 10-hour or the 12-hour shifts and pay them the same money for 8 hours that we formerly paid them for 10 hours or 12 hours, so that the 10-hour man or the 12-hour man had his rate of wages per day increased 50 per cent.

Admiral STRAUSS. Did you pay by the hour when you cut the hours of labor down?

Mr. BARBA. We give exactly the same rate for a period covering three weeks that they had made in the same period when working under the 10-hour basis or the 12-hour basis. The men in three shifts were paid the same money, because each shift, being reduced from 12 hours to 8 hours or from 10 hours to 8 hours, was paid the same for 8 hours that it formerly got for 10 hours or 12 hours. In other words, a cycle of three turns makes the A, B, and C shifts. That covers a cycle, so that in three weeks he is guaranteed the aggregate for three weeks that he got in three weeks under the old system.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, on the question of the efficiency of the service. What is the relative efficiency of the total 8 hours as compared with the efficiency of the total work of the 10 hours and of the 12 hours?

Mr. BARBA. Your question is an exact parallel to one that was asked me by the chairman of the committee of Federal industrial research last June, when discussing the 8-hour day, and if you do not mind I will tell you not only with reference to armor, but other kindred matters, because they are all tied together. The locomotive engineers, the crane operators, and repair men throughout all the works were working 10 hours per day on the maintenance machinery which is used to produce armor on an 8-hour basis. Now, that involves all kinds of operations, and I will answer your question this way: Where the man is working on a machine tool, some tool where his manual labor really amounts to a considerable number of motions and turns during the day, he is lifting and picking and turning and adjusting all day, he will unquestionably have a greater rate of efficiency per hour in an 8-hour day than he has a rate of efficiency per hour in a 10 or a 12 hour day. But where you take big tools, like the open-hearth furnaces in which this raw material is melted, and where the only labor is to keep the flow of gas and air adjusted, and where they are paid for these operations and paid for the skill and care—the man must not burn down that furnace—the rate of efficiency per hour is no greater in an 8-hour day than in a 10-hour day. Now, take the big presses on which we forge armor plate. There the men are under a little more physical strain—they are on their feet, and they have levers to handle, etc.—and there you would probably get slightly more efficiency in 8 hours than in 10. Take your armor a step further, into the machine shop, and this morning we all saw two men under a big drill press watching the drill do the work—certainly a nonfatiguing job—and the rate of efficiency for that and similar operations can be no more in an 8-hour day than it is in a 10-hour day. Therefore, where probably the largest amount of your wages is spent you get no more efficiency in an 8-hour day than in a 10-hour day, because it does not depend upon human labor, but simply watchfulness and being on the job.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you told me that these workmen were under piecework?

Mr. BARBA. Well, piecework is rather a bald statement to make, Senator, because we have a very great diversity of operations. Piecework means that you give a man so much money for doing so much work. That is not the most advanced and best way for promoting the efficiency of the man. We follow that to a very, very remote degree. The system we do follow is what is known as the premium rate, which puts a premium upon individual efficiency, paying an efficient man more money for the same operation than you do a less efficient man for performing the same operation. In that way you promote the efficiency of each individual man and not of a class of men.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand the piecework system, it is to stimulate a man's ambition as well as his money-making propensities, and impels him or induces him to exert himself to the utmost to earn as much money as possible.

Mr. BARBA. That, again, is a more crude statement than the modern premium and bonus method should have, because it is the old-fash-joned way of simply naming a rate for the job and letting the best man win. The better way, which allows each man to work to the best of his ability, largely mental rather than physical—because he often finds short cuts through every operation in which he is engaged—is the bonus system, where he is paid a bonus over a base if he succeeds in doing more work in a given time than the base contemplated, the base in every case guaranteeing a man his daily wage, so that the efficient man gets his day rate over which he earns a large bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the same thing stated differently. If a man does more work on the piece rate than he does by the day, doesn't he get more compensation?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And you change it to the bonus system instead of the piece system?

Mr. BARBA. Because it gives each man an added incentive to put his best foot foremost and become a competent man on the job.

Mr. PADGETT. In other words, you guarantee him a minimum as his day wage, and then you pay him an increase in proportion to his efficiency.

Mr. BARBA. Exactly. That is the best statement of that thing that one could make.

Admiral STRAUSS. That being the case, of course this 50 per cent that you claim would not hold; if your wages are made up of a base rate plus a premium, if you shorten the hours, as has been done, you would not increase the pay 50 per cent, as you stated.

Mr. BARBA. Yes; and more; for the reason that the whole basis of the matter which the Senator opened is, as Mr. PADGETT stated, the guaranty to each of these workmen his day rate. Now, if that man is hired at $3 or $4 per day, day rate, that means, on a 10-hour basis, 40 cents per hour. That means that in 8 hours he is getting $4 just the same guaranteed to him, instead of having it guaranteed to him in 10 hours. Then, on top of that, his bonus for efficient work and superior production goes at an increased ratio because of his increase per hour, because in modern piecework, Senator, the bonus is based on the hourly earning capacity of the man; so that a man who is getting 10 per cent bonus on 40 cents an hour, if his rate is raised to 50 cents an hour, his hourly rate becomes 50 cents an hour under the 8-hour day; then his bonus, instead of being 10 per cent on 40 cents per hour, becomes 10 per cent on 50 cents per hour.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't have to stick to that 10 per cent under the new law?

Mr. BARBA. We do not have to stick to anything except as demanded by working conditions, and the men require that they be allowed to make the same weekly pay roll on eight hours that they made on the 10-hour day.

Admiral STRAUSS. The committee has prepared a list of questions, and I will read them. One question has practically been asked you before.

Q. How much does it cost your company to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A-1, f. o. b.; that is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges?

Mr. BARBA. As you say, I have practically answered that question, and would ask to be excused from giving this information in so public a way.

Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration expenses?—A. I will be glad to answer that question so far as my knowledge goes, leaving out the element of administration expenses, because in our method of keeping costs administration expenses are included in the overhead, which is proportioned to all of the products of the company in its various lines in accordance with the very best judgment that our accountants can apply to the amount of the overhead expenditures upon each of these lines of manufacture; and without more research than I have given to it up to date I can not tell you how much of the administration expense is charged to armor. The depreciation is applied at the rate of 7½ per cent on tools and machinery, and 2½ per cent on buildings, but we have found that the depreciation on machinery is too low, and beginning with the present fiscal year we shall raise it to 10 per cent on the average.

Admiral STRAUSS. When you say 10 per cent, do you mean that all of your plant here, devoted to the manufacture of armor, would either be renewed in 10 years or become obsolete or useless through advances made in the business?

Mr. BARBA. No; not at all. The method of cost accounting followed throughout the country for some number of years past has been to allow a horizontal rate of depreciation. That horizontal rate has been 7½ per cent of machinery, to kill the machinery in approximately 15 years, and it is perfectly true that much machinery dies in far less time than 15 years, while much machinery lives far beyond 15 years, and that average has been found to be fair, but lately there has been a move, which you, Admiral, at one time called the "fashion," to raise the average rate of depreciation to 10 per cent. We at Midvale have not yielded to the fashion so far as the 10 per cent horizontal rate goes, but we are striving so to apportion our rates of depreciation for different classes of machinery more in accordance with the actual period of their life than has been the case heretofore, and our new rate of depreciation beginning the 1st of November, 1914, for the entire plant, not armor alone, will be based upon what we believe to be a more rational basis than the horizontal depreciation rate.

Admiral STRAUSS. Is there any big tool that you know of that has been scrapped since you began the manufacture of armor some 10 or 12 years ago?

Mr. BARBA. Completely scrapped?

Admiral STRAUSS. Scrapped or become obsolete.

Mr. BARBA. The open-hearth furnaces have been rebuilt several times.

Admiral STRAUSS. That would happen to any steel-making plant as a charge for maintenance. That would not, of course, be included in depreciation.

Mr. BARBA. We have several traveling cranes which have been entirely overmatched by the increased weight of plate and have been taken out and replaced.

Admiral STRAUSS. What did you do with the cranes?

Mr. BARBA. Scrapped them.

Admiral STRAUSS. You would not count that rebuilding of your furnaces a charge against depreciation. You would call that maintenance rather, would you not? That is a charge against production, not an extraordinary charge.

Mr. BARBA. The rebuilding of an open-hearth furnace is a thing that must be looked for in the natural course of operation, and, so far as the mere replacement of the bricks is concerned, it is not a serious matter, but when you are required to operate on a special product at a high pressure, such as the melting of armor-plate steel really is, very much more serious damage is done to the equipment in melting armor than in any other class of steel which we have to handle; then the rate of depreciation should rise, and we expect it to be raised in the future. That, of course, is a mere detail of our internal bookkeeping, and the answer to your question should really be confined to the horizontal rate of depreciation.

Admiral STRAUSS. On tools?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. Cranes?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. How many presses have you?

Mr. BARBA. Two; one for small forgings and the 10,000-ton press for large forgings.

Admiral STRAUSS. They are a part of the installation which you had when you went into the armor business?

Mr. BARBA. No; the large press was built primarily for armor and has been used almost never for any other purpose.

Admiral STRAUSS. Was your small press in existence before you went into the armor business?

Mr. BARBA. Yes; it was put in for gun forgings.

Admiral STRAUSS. Do you use that in the manufacture of armor?

Mr. BARBA. Just as seldom as the armor press is used for other purposes; almost never is the small press used for the manufacture of armor. When we first began the test plates and experimental work and such small parts were made under the small press.

Admiral STRAUSS. You state that it has been your custom to allow a depreciation percentage of 7½ per cent per annum on your armor-plant investment?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. What became of this money? Is it a bookkeeping operation?

Mr. BARBA. In our system of cost keeping and ledger accounting we have not applied the depreciation in the normal overhead. We have considered depreciation as parallel with capital investment, and we depreciate only in a lump sum at the end of the year when the ledger balances are taken off. Our depreciation, therefore, tends to reduce the capital value of the plant, and as such is fully comparable with capital invested, and the inventory value of the plant was reduced by the amount of depreciation or write off, exactly as it was increased during the year by the amount of any new investment made for capital account.

Admiral STRAUSS. Then, as I understand it, at the end of 13 years from the beginning of this new industry your capital investment in the armor production will have been wiped out.

Mr. BARBA. At that rate, yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. Approximately.

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. And the only thing that would exist at the end of 13 years would be such new equipment as you have added.

Mr. BARBA. Plus the maintenance that we have given tools not actually scrapped, which has been a very large account and in some systems of bookkeeping is applied to the capital account.

Admiral STRAUSS. You have been in the armor business since 1903; in other words, you have sold armor for 11 years, and barring any additions that you have made to your plant at the rate you have marked out, it will practically go off your books as capital in about two years.

Mr. BARBA. Yes; with the exception that as an offset to the final part of your statement must be made all the maintenance charges to keep the machinery from being scrapped and thrown out. That is, to keep the machinery in a condition of 100 per cent efficiency, which is just as necessary in the thirteenth year as it is in the first year.

Admiral STRAUSS. But don't you apply this to maintenance rather than to depreciation? That is a daily charge against the production of any article that you manufacture?

Mr. BARBA. As I say, there are two systems of thought, two systems of bookkeeping, and many of them charge major items of maintenance to the capital account. We have elected not to do that but to put it into our overhead working account.

Admiral STRAUSS. When you estimated your selling price of armor did you put in this 7½ per cent write off?

Mr. BARBA. I can not answer that now, Admiral. The chances are that that was left to the accountants to apply as was the habit of bookkeeping then and since, feeling sure that the whole plant would be averaged at 7½ per cent depreciation at the end of each year, taken out of the surplus account and being offset by additions to the same account for any new plant or equipment which we might purchase, but not, so far as the bookkeeping is concerned, by the addition to the capital account of maintenance charges.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, may I make a suggestion here? Where you can not answer a question now, will you insert it when the papers come back to you for revision?

Mr. BARBA. I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. PADGETT. I should state here, once for all, that where you can not give the answer now you might just say that you will give it later.

Mr. BARBA. Very good. Then we will rely upon the stenographer to indicate where the answers are to be supplied.

Admiral STRAUSS. He will give you a transcript of this hearing, so that you can amend your answers, and it may occur to you that in some of the cases where you have declined to answer you may, on maturer consideration, make up your mind that you will disclose this information without prejudicing your interest, and the committee would be very glad to get your answers at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. At these other places where we have been there have been so many answers from the managers or the witnesses, "I don't know," that we have felt for their own sakes they ought to know because it shows them to be very careless business men in their bookkeeping, and while we are not sensitive about your ignorance, we would like you to consider these questions at your convenience, and if you feel that you can answer them rather than saying "I do not know" or "I do not want to say," you might put in the answer.

Mr. BARBA. Senator, my personal intention is to answer every question that comes within my knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. I take that for granted.

Mr. BARBA. And I thank you very much for your suggestion, and I will be guided by it; and if I find that you want for some particular purpose more accurate answer than my memory provides I shall be glad to get it for you.

The CHAIRMAN. My idea is that if, as manufacturers, in computing costs, you are not taking into consideration those things that we are asking you about, which we consider vital to get at the facts, you may perhaps change your system of bookkeeping, and hereafter be guided by our questions rather than your own judgment.

Mr. BARBA. You must give me credit also of remembering that you have had time for a careful consideration of your questions and——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). We have done the best we could.

Mr. BARBA. And when your questions come to me you might strike something about which I know perfectly in a general way, so far as guiding the policies or the management of this company is concerned, and for the details of which I necessarily rely upon the men whose business it is to have and to know all those details; and to such cases, if your question requires an answer in detail, I shall be very glad to furnish it in detail.

Q. Has this cost been reached by taking the annual output of a single year, or of a term of years, and making allowance for rejection and ballistic failures?—A. It will be necessary to answer your question in more detail than "yes" or "no," and if you will bear with me a minute I will try to show you how these costs are reached, so that if you do get an answer in figures to your first question you will know what it refers to and how it is done and governed. The cost accounting in this plant is worked out through nearly 40 years on a basis which we feel gives us the annual production cost of every one of the many lines of manufacture which we produce, and to trace the cost of manufacture of armor, or any other line, it can be illustrated very briefly by saying that when an order for armor is received and cleared for manufacture an order blank is issued with the amount and number and every other vital feature of this order upon its face, and from that moment every dollar of expense that is incurred in the manufacture of that armor is charged to the order number which that blank bears, whether it be raw material for the melting of the ingot, for repairs to furnaces, the locomotive engineer's time for shifting the armor plate around the works, or the carpenter's time in blocking the armor plate on the car for shipment, that order number appertains through every channel of work and operation in the plant against the direct wages and direct material that is expended. They are allotted by the auditor—the percentage of administration overhead and nonproductive overhead and every contributing cost which can not be directly charged to armor is charged up in the proportion that the productive labor has accepted (and I may say that that method of accounting is a little unfair to products whose selling prices per unit are high and in whose manufacture the amount of productive wages is low, or that that cost does not fully account for all the money which should be charged against the manufacture where the proportion of wages to selling price is low).

Now, on the contrary, where the proportion of wages to selling price is high, as is the case, for instance, in the finished gun, then that might be overloaded with overhead, whereas armor, where the wages compared to the selling price is comparatively low, is underloaded with overhead charges, and that we are attempting to correct at the present time.

Admiral STRAUSS. In making up your cost sheets on the job order do you charge in a tool rate? You spoke of the locomotive. Do you charge the time of the locomotive engineer and the fuel—do you charge for the coal used in the locomotive?

Mr. BARBA. We charge a tool rate for the locomotive based upon the time that the engineer is paid wages, and that locomotive tool rate comprises the cost of upkeep of the locomotive and the cost of coal, water, and every incidental charge which can not be allotted save upon the movable basis of the amount of wages paid in productive labor.

Admiral STRAUSS. Do you have tool rates for everything?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. For instance, the big planer we saw in the machine shop?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Admiral STRAUSS. Now, does that tool rate include something for the tools finally becoming useless?

Mr. BARBA. Not in our system of bookkeeping, because the depreciation is taken off at the end of the year, and is not taken off each tool as the day comes along.

Admiral STRAUSS. You do not include in your tool rate the depreciation of the tool?

Mr. BARBA. No; the tool rate includes not even the capital invested in the tool originally. The tool rate includes the maintenance, the helper, the proportion of the shop it occupies, the power which is fed into the tool, and all the multitude of incidental expenses necessary to run that armor machine shop and divided amongst the tools operating to produce the product in that shop, but no interest on capital invested, and no depreciation of tool equipment is included in our tool rate.

Admiral STRAUSS. What does the auditor add for overhead? Doesn't your tool rate dispose of that?

Mr. BARBA. The tool rate is the means by which the auditor adds the overhead to the productive labor going through that tool. That is the only channel for the allotment of administration expense.

Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat.—A. I will be glad to supply that later, bearing in mind that the cost of the components that enter into a charge fluctuates from day to day with the prices of raw material in the market.

Admiral STRAUSS. We understand that, of course.

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. I will be glad to supply that later.

Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. I will be glad to supply that later.

Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. To be supplied.

Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. I have no means of knowing accurately enough to make a reply to that question. I can only take the amount of coal per ton which is aggregated monthly for the metal passing through a given furnace, and this might possibly cover other material than armor. In the case of the two big furnaces which we reserve for armor manufacture this would be easy to ascertain, but would not be accurate, because other furnaces are occasionally used in the manufacture of a larger ingot than one or two of these furnaces could take, and this coal computation would be inaccurate.

Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. We have never worked it out in exactly that fashion to my knowledge, but if you like I can supply that.

Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. I would have to give the same answer to that question as to the first. When you aggregate all these items you would have the production cost.

Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost of forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. I will be glad to supply that.

Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. I will have to get the figures to reply accurately, and will supply the answer.

Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching the forge?—A. Will supply.

Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. Will supply this.

Q. How many tons were rejected during the forging?—A. Will supply this.

Q. What scrap allowance was made for these rejected during forging?—A. We will reserve answer to this question.

Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. Not known. Not computed in our cost system because we take the original weight of material charged and of ingot we produce, which we obtain by weighing the original charge and an estimate of the ingot produced therefrom; against this we apply the weight of armor in finished form which is shipped on the order, and the difference is that which is lost during all the various operations included in its manufacture, but these are not separated into losses per process.

Q. What did the labor of forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded—how many tons?—A. Let me ask the meaning of the question, because it looks as if it would be easy to reply to that question in a way to give you useful information.

Admiral STRAUSS. For tears and cracks and things of that kind.

Mr. BARBA. I will supply the answer to this.

Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. Will supply.

Q. What was the oxidation and scale in this treatment, in tons?—A. This was covered in my answer to a previous question as to oxidation and scale loss at the forge.

Q. What was the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. Will supply this answer.

Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton without any machining?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. Will supply.

Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. Will supply. There was an allowance made. The rate will not be disclosed.

Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. This is a question very difficult to answer on short notice, because the amount of discard after reforging depends solely upon the outline of the plate that is to be shaped from the slab produced. During the process of reforging the material is almost invariably in the form of a rectangular slab out of which the outline of the plate finally shaped must be cut by discarding the portions of the rectangular slab which overhang the outline, and this varies with each plate.

Admiral STRAUSS. If you care to answer that question and you have the data on your books, I suggest that you take the output for a period or for a ship, if you please, and take the whole reforged plate and the whole delivered plate.

Mr. BARBA. I shall be glad to answer this question for a given group of armor.

Admiral STRAUSS. That would be sufficient for any one group, but you had better take the output for a ship.

Mr. BARBA. I would suggest that we take the whole contract for No. 39. That will take the work of a couple of draftsmen some little time, but we shall be glad to furnish that information.

Admiral STRAUSS. It would be very desirable for us to get that information, and if it isn't too much trouble——

Mr. BARBA (interposing). Let us disregard that; we will give it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the battleship that you have already completed the armor for?

Mr. BARBA. We have just completed that armor, Senator, and we have yet to ship only the two turrets which we are manufacturing, and that is the armor which you saw in the shop this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore it is no trouble to you?

Mr. BARBA. Just the labor of getting it out; but we will do it.

Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?

Mr. BARBA. Sent to treatment?

Admiral STRAUSS. How much armor plate did you really treat after you had cut off your ingot and begun the process of manufacture?

Mr. BARBA. We will supply that information.

Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. Will consider whether or not to answer this question accurately.

Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?

Mr. BARBA. Let me ask you to define that question a little more.

Admiral STRAUSS. This question means how much material did you use—fire brick, clay, etc.?

Mr. BARBA. Contributory stores. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. I should like to answer that by securing the figures and inserting them.

Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. Will supply.

Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining? If so, how many tons and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. Will ascertain if rejections were made; if so, will supply the weight and withhold answer concerning the amount of allowance.

Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. This was included in the answer to a previous question in regard to discard after reforging.

Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, supply of tools?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operation?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How are the total water, steam, power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. And how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. We arrived at the method of assigning according to the answer given in some detail to a previous question regarding method of computing costs.

Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. The same answer would apply.

Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class A-2?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What is the cost per ton of class B shipped plate?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be, capital employed in production, not actually invested? For the purpose of further answering your question we have made a careful estimate as well as a careful research of previous experience. The estimate shows that approximately $800,000 of working capital must be advanced for a contract similar to that for battleship No. 39. A careful research, excluding many assumptions, shows that experience has required approximately $1,000,000 of outlay to finance a contract for the tonnage comprised in the contract for battleship No. 39.—A. Let me ask you a question on that. Do you refer to the whole working capital of the plant?

Admiral STRAUSS. No; just to the production of armor. We are not trying to get anything else.

Mr. BARBA. It would take some little calculation to reply accurately to your question, and I have no objection to doing it. The reason I say it takes some little calculation is that the production of armor through the plant is not an average or steady performance. It is either a feast or a famine; one year we have plenty, the next year we have none, so that the capital actually employed in putting armor through the works is different from month to month, and I should require to know a little more definitely just what you would like to have to answer that question.

Admiral STRAUSS. Of course, we understand that during a 2,500-ton year, such as has just elapsed, and a full-capacity year——

Mr. BARBA (interposing). Such as we are entering upon.

Admiral STRAUSS. The difference in the working capital would be very great. But what is meant by the question is that you have to buy in advance for your output pig iron, alloys, brick, and various other things. Now, taking into consideration the fact that the Government pays you piecemeal as you produce armor, how much capital do you have to employ for a full year's output?

Mr. BARBA. If you will permit me, I will reserve answer to that and figure upon the year upon which we are entering, because it will be the only fair basis that can be employed, because it looks like a full year's business; and we haven't had a full year's business in armor since the time of the Oklahoma and Nevada.

Admiral STRAUSS. That is comparatively recent, and it might be better to take actual figures rather than estimate on the future. For instance, you have the experience with that year and can furnish it, if you care to, rather than an estimate.

Mr. BARBA. Let the answer stand that way, and I will look up the figures in the case, and they may be of interest to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Barba, if the Government should enter upon its own armor manufacturing, where would you suggest, as an experienced manufacturer in the armor business, as the best place for it to locate its plant?

Mr. BARBA. You have asked a very important question and one which would require very considerable study of the elements that enter into the final reason for establishing an armor plant. If you were to start fresh and consider building an armor plant for the construction of simply armor for your ships, it would be necessary to include a great number of well-known factors on each of which there would be quite a number of variables, and you would then have to balance those variables to produce the best result, which would indicate the location, generally, that your plant should occupy. Were we to start now at Midvale and build a new plant and had no plant here, I should say that it would require a study covering some weeks before I could give a reasonable answer to your question because of this very fact.

The CHAIRMAN. We have letters suggesting that we should look at this place and at that place and at the other place; there is a very wide interest in this armor-manufacturing business. And the duty of this committee is to suggest whether the Government shall go into the business at all, and it would be the duty of the Navy Department to select a site, considering all the matters that you have suggested.

Mr. BARBA. You see that a comprehensive answer to your question would require a great deal of study of the elements entering into it, and a great deal of consideration of those elements, and on each of those elements you would have wide choice, so that it is almost impossible to answer generally your question except to say, somewhere near the east coast.

The CHAIRMAN. If you were handed $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 and told to select the best possible site for the Government or for yourself and equip it in the best possible way, up to date in every particular, where would you locate it?

Mr. BARBA. Again I must go back and say that it would require very serious consideration and much study.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever given any consideration at all to selling this plant to the Government as a factory?

Mr. BARBA. The matter has not been seriously proposed to us.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not authorized to seriously propose it to you, but still if we should make a suggestion to the Secretary of the Navy that the Midvale plant could be bought for such and such an amount of money as a nucleus or basis upon which to erect an armor factory, what would you say to that idea?

Mr. BARBA. Well, any proposal such as you have outlined, made seriously, would, of course, be given serious consideration. Whether the consideration would result in anything affirmative would depend wholly upon the owners of the property who were described in a previous question that you asked me; and as I have not consulted with them about the matter, I being only the man who is charged with the management of the business of the company, with the getting of the business and the selling of its product, I would not pretend to venture an opinion upon how the owners would feel about a proposal to sell their plant to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you willing to give any information as to what you would consider the property is worth?

Mr. BARBA. This property?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. You have already given us your capitalization.

Mr. BARBA. Yes. The property has recently been appraised—the physical appraisal which we make every once in so many years in order to check up our book inventories—and it is quite a number of millions of dollars in advance of our capital stock. Without good will, the physical value of this plant is approximately $18,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any things here that would be unnecessary to manufacture armor?

Mr. BARBA. Very many.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we left those out and simply bought the armor factory.

Mr. BARBA. It is physically impossible.

Mr. PADGETT. They are intermingled?

Mr. BARBA. You could not conduct your armor factory if you were to buy the plant you saw this morning without having a great deal of the works contributory to your very existence.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, do you believe, from your experience in the manufacture of armor, that it would be better for the Government to buy pig iron and manufacture its own steel or to buy the steel?

Mr. BARBA. Unquestionably my opinion, backed by the experience of other Governments, is that the Government has no business in manufacturing a commodity which is freely offered by its own citizens. The great Governments that are using armor do not manufacture it. England manufactures no armor; Russia has a small armor plant. Admiral Strauss can tell you more about it than I can; but it is our business to know something about it. Russia has a plant which is built, equipped, and run by the English armor makers; that is the way that Russia gets public utilities—by inducing a concern like Vickers-Maxim to build a plant in Russia and operate it on a long contract which is very profitable to the people who advance the money for the erection of the plant, which this Government does not do. The French built a plant some years ago, and, to the best of our knowledge, they have produced no armor at all that you would care to put on your ships; nothing of the present thickness required; something like 6 or 7 inches is the maximum thickness produced.

Admiral STRAUSS. Why is it that the French have failed to manufacture armor in their own shop? Why could not they succeed in manufacturing armor if they choose to do so?

Mr. BARBA. You can not get, either in France, whose political system rather nearly approaches ours, or in this country, can you get a staff or personnel to enter into the manufacture of a business like this and succeed with it under conditions such as this Government imposes upon its employees. You take the staff of the Midvale Steel Co., the men who are in charge of it and have been managing the affairs of the company; they started here as boys and have grown up with a sure tenure of office, depending upon good behavior and efficiency and ability and straight living; and we have all succeeded in drawing larger salaries than the Government pays almost any of its employees in technical lines, and in my opinion it is impossible to expect a Federal Government to secure the services of such men as form the staff of the Midvale Steel Co. to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Right there, Mr. Barba—would you mind giving this committee the scale of salaries?

Mr. BARBA. I would object to it, Senator; incidentally, Admiral Strauss would get jealous of the salaries paid.

Mr. PADGETT. In view of the statement you have made, that if you were to state the salaries that were received by the staff of the Midvale Steel Co. Admiral Strauss would get jealous, would you object to stating whether or not it is a fact that the salaries paid to the important officers of these private corporations—the Midvale Steel Co., the Bethlehem Steel Co., and the Carnegie Steel Co.—are very much higher than the salaries paid to the higher officers in the Navy?

Mr. BARBA. Yes, Mr. Padgett; the salaries paid are higher than are paid to your bureau chiefs, and these salaries are paid to put these particular staff officers on piecework, to spur them exactly as a man with a pick and shovel is spurred to his very best endeavor.

Mr. PADGETT. In other words, you get a higher salary as a base salary and then you participate in the profits?

Mr. BARBA. That has not been the plan of this company, but we hope that it will become so, because our owners firmly believe in the principle of cooperation, and they are trending very strongly toward enabling every workman, at least in a leading position, to participate in the profit of this company.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the policy pursued by the Bethlehem Steel Co., so the president told me. The thing I want to get at was this, that the salaries paid, without stating what they are—the salaries paid to these principal officers are much higher than the salaries paid to a rear admiral in the Navy?

Mr. BARBA. We have a few men whose salaries are higher than those paid to a rear admiral in the Navy.

Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture and separate from depreciation?—A. I think I will say "same as to first question" on that, but it is open to some discussion.

Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor; how has this been arrived at?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionately divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much did the insurance charges on the armor plant amount to?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund? That is, if you have the pension fund you must have liabilities for injuries.—A. Same as to first question. We handle our pensions and liabilities in a way that is a little bit peculiar and is not charged into the running cost of the plant. It is charged out of profit and loss at the end of the year in one lump sum.

Mr. PADGETT. You do use that element in fixing your selling price of armor? I understand that you use this as one of the component elements in fixing your selling price?

Mr. BARBA. With reference to the pensions, etc., we prefer to consider that the owners carry that as their own personal charge. In other words, it comes out of the money which is available for distribution and has no particular rate of charge against any portion of the plant.

Admiral STRAUSS. You mean it is a gratuity?

Mr. BARBA. It is put on a different basis than it will be in the future, when the workman's compensation act becomes effective. The next legislature in Pennsylvania will have a workman's compensation act; it is one of the most advanced workman's compensation acts that has been produced, and we strongly supported the one that was before the last legislature. It is right that the trade should pay for its casualties, and we shall strongly support the bill.

Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant; what is this depreciation; how has it been arrived at?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. After a year's operations, within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. Same as to first question.

Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. Approximately $5,000,000.

Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. I would like to reserve an accurate answer to this question, and may reply to it fully. [Further answer to question.] In further answer to your question asking whether amount expended for plant is inclusive of all depreciation and replacements, we beg to state that my answer to question Qc exhibits the figures of cost of plant and states that this is the book value of the plant to-day, after all depreciation has been written off to date, and that the cost of reproduction of the existing plant would, therefore, necessarily be much higher than this stated book value.

Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant, or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. I have already made an answer to this question, but in answering it in its present form I repeat that depreciation is taken out of the profits exactly as is interest on the capital invested taken out of the profits, both of them being fairly comparable to interest on capital and to the body of the capital account with respect to depreciation.

Q. What is the capacity of the company's armor plant in tons per year?—A. For cemented armor I would estimate that a full year's output would be 6,000 tons.

Q. When you state that you have $5,000,000 invested in the production of armor, do you include the cost of the site in that sum?—A. Yes; the land is included.

Q. How many acres are now occupied by your plant?

Mr. BARBA. Do you mean the armor plant?

Admiral STRAUSS. Yes. Of course your answer must be approximate.

Mr. BARBA. I shall have to consider that because the land occupied by the buildings in which armor alone is produced in no sense represents the amount of land occupied by the portion of the plant that contributes to the operation.

Mr. PADGETT. You stated that you had $5,000,000 invested in your armor plant; you then stated that it included the cost of the land. Now, then, the land that is included in that estimate of investment would be the land that would go into it. You can state that, I presume?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How much is land and how much is invested in other things?

Mr. PADGETT. I would thank you to separate these items.

Mr. BARBA. I will try to do that. [Further answer to question.] Referring again to the figures answering questions 60 and 222, we note that you ask "How much of this figure is land and how much is invested in other things?" We have taken the land comprised in the figure covering the book cost of our armor plant at $125,000, nominally 15 acres, and which is far below the figure at which similar land could be purchased to-day.

Admiral STRAUSS. One more question: What percentage of finished armor did you produce from the cast ingot?

Mr. BARBA. I can answer that question only in the aggregate by taking the last armor for No. 38, the Pennsylvania, in which we used approximately 15,000,000 pounds of ingots and shipped just under 5,000,000 pounds of plate.

Admiral STRAUSS. Something like 33 per cent?

Mr. BARBA. The actual shipment being 4,952,000 pounds, I think, so that the amount of finished plate for the Pennsylvania contract was almost exactly one-third of the weight of ingots originally used.

Admiral STRAUSS. Originally cast?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, then, what is the relative weight of the original ingot cast compared with the weight of the original charge that went into the furnace—the pig iron, the metal, the raw material?

Mr. BARBA. I shall be glad to get that information for you fairly accurately, but it will approximate 10 per cent more for the aggregate weight of raw material charged over the weight of the ingot produced.

Mr. PADGETT. Then the weight of the finished product is less than 33 per cent of the original raw materials that went into the furnace?

Mr. BARBA. Yes, sir; and the reason is, of course, that there are losses within the furnace of the material charged.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I wanted to get at, and I understand that approximates 10 per cent.

Mr. BARBA. That, roughly, is 10 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like for you to put that in.

Mr. BARBA. Your pig contains 2 per cent of silicon and 3 per cent of carbon, and there is 5 per cent of your pig iron that does not produce ingots; that goes into the slag, and so with many of these elements. [Further answer.] An examination of the records has found that instead of 110 per cent the figure should be approximately 115 per cent for the amount of material charged to produce 100 per cent of ingots.

Mr. PADGETT. In connection with that same question, you have this 60 per cent that represents the scrap that comes off of your ingot over and above your 30 per cent of finished product; that constitutes scrap to go back into your furnace for another ingot, doesn't it?

Mr. BARBA. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. What is the proportionate or relative value of that material, as scrap, compared with the original material of pig iron and all the other elements that go in originally?

Mr. BARBA. I will answer that question generally, and not specifically, by stating that the value of this scrap is less than the value of the original raw materials for the reason that it is of so special a chemical composition that it is more costly to melt down this scrap for use in future ingots than it is to take the equivalent of this scrap in new materials, to the extent that it would require five or six hours to melt a charge of new materials, whereas it would require all the way from 10 to 14 hours, depending on the proportions used, of time to melt a charge made up of remelted scrap.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask you to state what it is in this remelted scrap that causes this harder process of melting.

Mr. BARBA. It is the high percentage or content of chromium. The chromium is necessary to manufacture armor plate to stand the present specifications. The armor-plate mixture to-day is generally a chrome-nickel mixture. The chromium is approximately 2 per cent of the whole weight of the finished armor plate. This chromium, when introduced back in the furnace in the form of scrap, greatly retards the melting of the scrap. It oxidizes and forms a very poisonous (that is the term the men use) slag in the furnace, requiring considerable treatment with fluxes and other medicines to correct the poison, and in the act of melting down requires at least twice the time that scrap not containing chromium requires to be melted. In the original production of armor-plate metal the chromium is not present until 20 minutes before the material is ready to be taken from the furnace in finished form; so that when you try to remelt your scrap we must contend with the presence of chromium in that scrap.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, on that point. Is the chromium burned out and wasted, or does it chemically form with and remain with the metal in its remelted form?

Mr. BARBA. You start with about 2 per cent of chromium in your scrap, and use varying proportions of scrap according to the daily varying conditions of the furnace, so that the figures are really the subject of calculation for each case, but to instance a case, start with 2 per cent chromium in the scrap. When the charge is melted the chromium will have been reduced to about 1 per cent; then in the further operation of pouring and treating the steel the chromium will be reduced in an armor-plate furnace to about one-quarter of 1 per cent, all of it going into the slag in the form of oxide of chromium and forming a dry or poisonous slag which, as before stated, requires very careful treatment to make a successful operation.

Mr. PADGETT. Suppose you were to use one-half scrap and one-half of original pig iron. Would this chromium combine with the pig iron or would it go into the slag?

Mr. BARBA. It would first combine with the pig iron and ultimately go into the slag in exactly the same proportions as indicated in the last answer.

The CHAIRMAN. These details of manufacture are not essential to our investigation; and I have a question to ask which is very essential, I think: Mr. Barba, one of the elements of cost of armor plate now is in the security of the armor manufacturers as to contract. You do not know what you are going to get next year. There is no certainty about the business.

Mr. BARBA. That is one of the very vital elements; and in the past years we have taken our medicine.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose the Government, having had to pay for this uncertainty, should determine to change its policy and should endeavor to get at the actual cost of armor plate for itself, with a view of entering into contracts for a fixed number of years, say 10 years. If the Government should approach you and offer you work enough to keep your factory busy on armor plate according to the Government specifications for the next 10 years, what reduction would you make from the present prices you are charging?

Mr. BARBA. You asked a question that became very interesting until your last clause, because if the Midvale Steel Co. were offered a continuous performance in the production of armor plate you would get a reduction under the present price unquestionably, because the whole manufacturing could be systematized to a degree which has not been possible in the past, and the Government would, and properly should, be the gainer by such a condition; but as to the amount of reduction under the present price, if I would, I could not answer that question accurately, because it is impossible to judge what would be the condition under such circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Government should go into partnership with Midvale, would you open your books and institute a system of bookkeeping which would arrive at the actual cost of armor? Would you be willing to enter into contract whereby you would be guaranteed against loss?

Mr. BARBA. You have asked a question which I must open up a little. Do I understand you to mean that were the Government to come to Midvale and enter into partnership with us for 10 years and say, "We will guarantee you so much armor a year, or failing to give you that armor we will see that your profits are the same," or offer some contract similar to that, we would.

The CHAIRMAN. You would?

Mr. BARBA. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, this is all an excursion into the field of possibilities, you know, as to what the Government will do, because Congress orders the Secretary of the Navy to do what he does do, and he can not do it without the appropriation. So I am only asking this question in order to arrive, if I possibly can, at the conclusion which I have firmly fixed in my own mind, that in order for the Government to be fortified against robbery, which I believe it has suffered in the past, it is necessary that the Government should build its own armor plant.

Mr. BARBA. You commenced a question in which I was getting very much interested at once, because what you were proposing is practically what England has done with her armor makers.

The CHAIRMAN. And Germany with Krupps?

Mr. BARBA. Germany with Krupps is another story. They practically own Krupps; they can dictate exactly what they are to do with Krupps. That is belief without any sure knowledge, of course.

Mr. PADGETT. Putting the Senator's question in concrete form, if the Government should establish a policy of continuing contracts in armor, as is done in "rivers and harbors" improvements, and should say to you, we will make a contract for 100,000 tons of armor, to be delivered during the next 10 years, divided and apportioned among 10 years, would the manufacturers of armor be justified, and would they, in fact, give a substantial reduction in the price of armor below the present prices?

Mr. BARBA. Speaking for this company, you could count on a substantial reduction in the price of armor under such conditions as those, because those conditions are most attractive, and they are conditions which are the exact opposite of our 10 years' experience; such conditions make a very attractive picture for the future. We would agree with the Government on a price and terms and amounts, and we would have an assurance of business which would reduce the armor business from almost an act of God to an everyday commercial proposition, where it deserves to be.

Mr. PADGETT. I know that Congress is pursuing such a policy with regard to the improvement of rivers and harbors. They authorize a certain amount and then they appropriate from year to year as the work is done, and it just occurred to me that if Congress would pursue a policy of that kind, whether the armor makers would be prepared to offer a reduction so substantial in character as to make it inviting for the Government to pursue that policy instead of the one we have now, of year by year.

Mr. BARBA. That is the way the business should really be conducted, unquestionably. Whether or not you could reduce it to the concrete terms of 100,000 tons in 10 years is a question that is not before the present inquiry.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, certainly, but I am just speaking of a policy along that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The idea was this: The present exorbitant prices we are paying are due entirely to the uncertainty of the manufacturers, are they not?

Mr. BARBA. The present exorbitant prices, as you term them, are—I must deny your premises, because I must deny that they are exorbitant——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). We won't discuss that phase of it.

Mr. BARBA. Senator TILLMAN, I would like to state with equal force and authority with yourself and necessarily with much more intimate knowledge of the subject, that the prices that the Government is paying for armor are not high and exorbitant prices. I am trying to tell you something of that sort now. You had a practically fixed policy of two ships a year for quite some time in Congress, and Congress almost legislated the price of armor. If you go back through the records you will find that is practically so, and the price of armor reached a point of $420 per ton under a policy which gave them the armor for two ships a year, and the practice of the department was to distribute that armor into equal thirds, as this memorandum shows, irrespective of any price they got; but that is beside the point; the point was that they had practically a definite amount of armor for two ships.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us go back there a minute. When Midvale first bid on armor and got the contract, and then President Roosevelt arbitrarily divided it with Carnegie and Bethlehem, was Midvale prepared to manufacture all the contract?

Mr. BARBA. They were willing at that time to accept the whole 16,000 tons. Probably, though, the requirement for speedy delivery of armor was not the same as it is to-day, and we might have been able to get away with the whole contract at that time. I am free to say that to-day we would not, because the shipbuilders have been spurred up to a rate of delivery which makes it necessary for Admiral Strauss at this time, for the armor for the three ships just let, to specify a rate of delivery which will give the shipbuilders no inconvenience such as he has had in the past. One of the most laudable arrangements that has been put into effect is that schedule of delivery by construction groups, and when it was presented to us in June this company jumped at it, as the thing to be helped and supported. Now, had we at this time been given a contract for the armor of two ships, say, 17,000 tons, this company, with its present equipment, could in no sense manufacture the armor at the present time at the rate which Admiral Strauss requires it, if we had more than the armor for one ship. It is going to be nearly all we can do to get the armor for one ship in the time specified. The time he has specified is much shorter than he would have specified 10 years ago. However, 10 years ago we would have been glad to have experimented and gotten it out somewhere nearly in the time required.

The CHAIRMAN. At $399 a ton?

Mr. BARBA. Yes, sir.

Mr. PADGETT. Is not it a fact that the action of President Roosevelt in declining to award the contract to the Midvale people, they being substantially the lowest bidders, and arbitrarily giving two-thirds of it to the others—was not the effect of that to destroy any competition with the bidders, and have they not since then put in substantially identical bids, because they knew that the Government would divide it, irrespective of the bids?

Mr. BARBA. That is essentially true, but the process was a long one; in 1900 Midvale bid, and was thrown out.

Mr. PADGETT. What was the bid of the Midvale Co. in that year when its bid was thrown out?

Mr. BARBA. It was a sliding-scale bid, according to the tonnage.

Lieut. Commander BLOCH. It was $445 a ton for class A and $400 a ton for class B. Those terms do not mean the same as they do to-day.

Mr. BARBA. In 1903 Midvale was a second time the lowest bidder, and received a little over one-third of the order.

Mr. PADGETT. And that was the year that you had a plant?

Mr. BARBA. Yes. In 1905 Midvale was a third time the lowest bidder, and was given 1,000 tons out of 8,000 tons. In 1906 Midvale was a fourth time the lowest bidder, and received 3,660 tons out of 7,319 tons.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the time that the split came.

Mr. BARBA. No; the time before—in fact, both times before. This is the third time that we had a split.

Mr. PADGETT. The time I am talking about is the time when the administration divided the contract. Since then they have been giving identical bids, have they not?

Mr. BARBA. In 1907 Midvale was a fifth time the lowest bidder, and bid $410 against Carnegie and Bethlehem bids of $420, and they had the royalty.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by royalty?

Mr. BARBA. The Government paid an additional royalty of $33.60 on class A and $11.20 on class B per ton on the Krupp patents.

Admiral STRAUSS. Which these other two companies were subject to.

Mr. BARBA. And we were not subject to. Right there is an interesting fact. Immediately after the letting of one-third of that contract to Midvale, three suits were brought against Midvale alleging infringement of the Krupp cementing patents and treatment patents. These suits we fought up to the Supreme Court and won in every court. Immediately after the first judgment was rendered both Carnegie and Bethlehem were notified by the Government, who had paid this royalty as an extra charge over and above the bid price of armor——

Mr. PADGETT (interposing). The bid price was $420?

Mr. BARBA. Plus $33.60 a ton. The Government notified them that they would no longer pay any royalty, because if Midvale did not exact a royalty and had gotten a judgment, the Government need not pay, and Midvale was fighting that suit through all the courts and winning it in the courts, and the Government has saved $33.60 per ton for all the armor they bought since.

Mr. PADGETT. Not up to date?

Mr. BARBA. Up to the expiration of the patents.

The CHAIRMAN. But for Midvale's public spirit and unwillingness to be robbed by Krupp's patents, the Government would be paying a royalty now?

Mr. BARBA. The patents have expired.

The CHAIRMAN. When did they expire?

Mr. BARBA. I will supply that data later. [Further answer to question:] I attach a table of the four patents and the expiration dates for the American patents and for the German patents; in effect the expiration is at the dates of the German patents.

	Date.	Expiration.
		American.	German.
Krupp patents:
534178	Feb. 12, 1895	Feb. 12, 1912	Dec. 16, 1905
642926	Feb. 6, 1900	Feb. 6, 1917	Feb. 28, 1907
651965	June 19, 1900	June 19, 1917	Apr. 22, 1909
653413	July 10, 1900	July 10, 1917	Do.

Then, again, in November, 1908, Midvale was a sixth time the lowest bidder and was awarded one-third of the tonnage.

Mr. PADGETT. Could the Midvale Co. have undertaken more than it received?

Mr. BARBA. At that time, yes; because it was not anything like its capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. PADGETT, it seems that all the testimony brought out demonstrates clearly that the Government had forced this combination of manufacturers; not only encouraged it but compelled it.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I am bringing out. The policy that was pursued by Roosevelt in refusing to give the award to the lowest bidders finally brought about a condition where there were no lowest bidders. Didn't the three concerns in their letters to Secretary Daniels last year practically state to him that the reason for identical bids was because of the policy hitherto pursued by the Government in declining to respect the lowest bids?

Mr. BARBA. Yes, sir; and immediately after the year 1907 that I spoke of here the policy was adopted of dividing the armor into equal thirds by the department and reducing the price of the bidders to the price bid by the low man.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, you got behind the curtain and said, What is the use of bidding below each other? Let us combine.

Mr. BARBA. That price was simply maintained. It was $420 plus royalty, and after the royalty was knocked off $420 was the price from that day until the last year, when the eight-hour law advanced the price from $420 to $454, which this year was reduced from $454 to $440 and for next year to $425, again an official basis, because the contracts for next year, at Secretary Daniels's request, were all placed at the price of the lowest bidder. I would like, Senator, to have this prepared statement incorporated in the hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. You can incorporate it in the hearing.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask you to state if you have prepared and have with you a statement giving the history of the manufacture of armor; and if so, will you attach that statement to your hearings as an answer to this question?

Mr. BARBA. I have such a statement prepared and shall be glad to let it stand as a fuller answer to some of these questions. Incidentally, if you will allow me to add——

Mr. PADGETT. You can add anything you want to.

Mr. BARBA. I want to put it in a little better shape.

Mr. PADGETT. You can put it into better shape and then insert it in your hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. You see we want a perfectly full and square explanation of this whole armor-contract business, the cost of manufacture, and everything about it. We are very sorry we have not been able to get you to act throughout as your instincts must lead you to do.

for we are certainly impressed with the belief that you are an honorable gentleman and would tell as more than you have but for the idea you have, along with the other armor manufacturers, that you must keep your secrets to yourself. In effect you are all telling the Government, "You have no business to go into armor manufacture at all, because we will make the armor and are already making it at a reasonable price." If your company would compete instead of combining, as I believe you have combined, the Government would not need to erect an armor plant at all. But we believe you are in a combination to charge the Government an excessive price, and that is our trouble.

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM P. BARBA.

THE ARMOR CONTRACTS OF THE MIDVALE STEEL CO. AND DATA RELATING TO ARMOR.

The Midvale Steel Co., of Philadelphia, made its initial bid for an armor contract on August 10, 1900. (See Appendix A for data regarding company.) (Note by committee: The committee is informed that on this date the Midvale Co. had no armor plant.)

The United States Navy Department opened on that date bids for about 36,000 tons of armor. Midvale bid, net (no royalties demanded), $438 per ton; the Carnegie and Bethlehem Steel Cos. bid, net (including royalties), $490 for class A armor. Midvale received no award. (See Appendix B for details.)

In October, 1903, Midvale was a second time the lowest bidder ($398 per ton net was bid on class A as against $453.60 net by Carnegie and Bethlehem), on about 16,000 tons of armor. Midvale received a little over one-third of the order. (See Appendix C for details.)

In January, 1905, Midvale was a third time the lowest, bidding $398 net for class A against the Carnegie and Bethlehem bids of $453.60 net. A contingent order for 1,000 tons out of 8,000 tons was all Midvale received. (See Appendix D.)

In July, 1906, Midvale was a fourth time the lowest bidder and received 3,660 tons out of 7,319 tons. Midvale bid for class A armor $346, and Carnegie and Bethlehem $381 per ton. (See Appendix E.)

In the summer of 1907 Midvale was a fifth time the lowest, bidding $410 per ton, as against the Carnegie and Bethlehem bids of $420 for class A armor. (See Appendix F, containing important Government letter and details.)

To restrain the Midvale Co. from proceeding with its manufacture of armor in 1907 three suits were brought against it in the name of Fred. Krupp, Aktien-Gesellschaft. Although these suits were bitterly fought, they were lost in every court. The Supreme Court of the United States also deciding in favor of the Midvale Steel Co. (See Appendix G.)

On November 9, 1908, Midvale was a sixth time the lowest bidder on the total amount of armor of all classes for the Utah and Florida. Midvale was awarded one-third of the tonnage required. (See Appendix H.)

On August 18, 1909, bids for the armor for the Arkansas and Wyoming were opened. Midvale was slightly lower on the total of all classes. (See Appendix I.)

On October 7, 1910, the armor makers were invited to a conference by the Government on account of the increasing difficulties and expense in the manufacture of armor. (Appendix J.)

On December 1, 1910, the bids for the armor for the Texas and New York were opened. Each manufacturer received practically one-third of the order for the Texas armor. (See Appendix K.)

On November 16, 1911, the Government invited the armor makers to a conference in reference to the armor for the Oklahoma and Nevada.

On January 4, 1912, bids were opened for the Oklahoma and Nevada armor. The amount was divided into thirds as nearly as possible. (See Appendix L.)

On December 18, 1912, the Government invited the armor makers to a conference in reference to the armor for the Pennsylvania.

Bids for the Pennsylvania armor were opened February 18, 1913. Midvale made the best bid on every class of armor and received one-third of the total. (See Appendix M.)

The armor bids for battleship No. 39 were opened August 27, 1913. The Secretary of the Navy had new bids submitted on October 14, 1913, and awarded the whole of the contract to Midvale. (See Appendix N.)

On October 15, 1914, bids were opened by the Secretary of the Navy for approximately 25,000 tons of armor for battleships 40, 41, and 42, at which time Midvale's bid was the lowest on all classes, except class A, on which class we were underbid by the Bethlehem Steel Co., the prices which Midvale bid being for class A armor, $436 per ton; for class A–2 armor, $486 per ton; for class B armor, $466 per ton; and for class C armor (bolts), $376 per ton. (Note by committee—The Midvale Co. only bid for one-third of the armor advertised for. The prices at which awards were subsequently made were as follows: Class A, $425 per ton; class A–2, $486 per ton; class B, $466 per ton; class C, $376 per ton.)

On October 19, at the invitation of the Secretary of the Navy, the armor makers were called into a conference in the office of the Secretary and told that the prices they had quoted for armor were too high, and were asked the question why, if $440 per ton was the price for the armor for battleship 39, when but 8,500 tons of armor was purchased, the price for 25,000 tons of armor should be reduced only to $436 per ton? Midvale's answer to the Secretary was to the effect that the price for armor had practically been established by the department on a basis of not less than two ships per year; and when but two ships were ordered in between two and three years we felt that this was but a temporary condition, and that, although the price for armor for the reduced quantity should be somewhat increased, yet Midvale did not bid an increased price that would be commensurate with the reduced tonnage to be passed through the mills. In commenting upon this point Secretary Daniels stated that if for the armor for battleship 39 such an increase had been proposed, he certainly would have opposed it.

Upon the solicitation of Secretary Daniels the armor makers assembled in his office on October 19 were asked to meet again in his office on October 26 and submit new bids.

On October 26 all three armor makers were represented in the office of the Secretary, Admiral Strauss being present, together with the Secretary, and Midvale handed the Secretary a letter, reducing its price to a figure which was not disclosed at this meeting, but which was $427 per ton for class A armor, the originally quoted prices being maintained for the other classes of armor. On November 2 the Midvale Steel Co. received from the Secretary of the Navy a letter offering them the armor for one ship (the quantity for which they had bid) at $425 per ton for class A–1, as against the revised price of $427 per ton, equaling the price offered him by the Bethlehem Steel Co., which proposition of the Secretary's was accepted by the Midvale Steel Co.

Midvale was thereupon notified of an award of the armor required for one ship, under the terms of its original proposal, as modified on October 26 and the Secretary's letter of November 2.

In 1906 the Midvale Steel Co. made a bid of lire 2,325 ($455.70) (lire=19.6 cents) per ton for 2,100 tons of armor for the Italian Government, and were awarded the contract. (See Appendix O.)

The Midvale Steel Co. commenced the manufacture of armor late in 1903, and has been in no way a party to the several investigations made by congressional committees.

The reasons for the great increase in the cost of manufacturing armor are discussed in Appendix P. It will be noted that the armor investigated by the Armor Factory Board in 1897 was a very much easier manufacturing proposition than the armor demanded by modern requirements, and that almost each year in the last decade has added to the difficulties, risk, and expense of production.

The eight-hour law adds greatly to the expenses of the American manufacturer. Such a condition imposed upon us and not upon the foreign corporations who are asked to compete for the work for our Navy, whether armor or other material, makes the competition most unfair to the American, both workman and employer, when the contracts are let abroad. England, Germany, and France have refused to purchase armor, guns, or forgings intended for their respective navies unless of domestic manufacture. This stand is taken for military as well as patriotic and economic reasons. No wise Government will be blind to the military necessity of having within its borders suitable well-equipped ordnance works whose services are not dependent upon the will of some foreign power. Moreover, the European taxpayer will not consent to see his money go into the pockets of foreign workmen in a foreign country, but insists that money raised by taxation be used to give work and prosperity to his own country.

The Midvale Steel Co. has had a long and serious struggle to establish itself in the manufacture of armor, and has spared neither trouble nor expense in the development of its processes of manufacture. Many hundreds of thousands of dollars spent in experiments and investigations and years of patient scientific research are the means by which "Midvale" has been able to successfully manufacture armor and meet and overcome the constantly increasing difficulties. This knowledge and experience have been quite as costly and are as much the property of the company as some of its other and more material assets.

APPENDIX A.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MEN AND WAGES IN THE WORKS OF THE MIDVALE STEEL CO.

Total wages from Jan. 1 to Sept. 1, 1903	$1,322,488.96
Average number of men working per day	3,017
Average wages per day per man	$2.07+
Total wages from Jan. 1 to Sept. 1, 1913	$2,635,058.75
Average number of men working per day	4,860
Average wages per day per man	$2.60+
Average increase in wages per day per man in 10 years—per cent	25.6
Increase in number of men from 1903 to 1913—do	61
Increase in pay roll from 1903 to 1913—do	99.3

Referring to the difference in wages paid for certain trades in England and the United States, as given in Cost of Living in American Towns, Senate Document No. 22, Sixty-second Congress, a report of an inquiry by the Board of Trade of London, beg to submit the following:

The only comparison made in the above report comes under the head of—

Engineering trades.

	Wages per week.
	England.	United States.
Fitters	$8.64	$17.88
Turners	8.64	17.88
Smiths	8.64	20.48
Pattern makers	9.12	22.09
Laborers	5.28	10.50
	5)40.32	5)88.74
Average per man per week	8.064	17.748

From the above it will be seen that the rate of wages paid, coming under engineering trades, is 120 per cent higher in this country than in England.

APPENDIX B.

APPEAL OF THE MIDVALE STEEL CO. IN THE MATTER OF THE REJECTION AUGUST 11, 1900, OF ITS BID FOR ARMOR.

Hon. JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary of the Navy.

The Midvale Steel Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., respectfully states the following facts as the basis of an appeal which said company hereby prays from the decision rendered by the Hon. Frank W. Hackett, Acting Secretary of the Navy, made in the Navy Department on the 11th day of August, 1900, in the matter of bids for armor plate which were opened on August 10, 1900. The decision rejected all bids.

The Navy Department made proposals for bids for armor plate, a copy of which is hereto attached marked "Exhibit A."

The Carnegie Steel Co. bid on the department's proposals, as shown in the schedule, marked "Exhibit B," hereto attached, and also submitted a letter, constituting part of its bid, copy of which letter is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit C."

The Bethlehem Steel Co. bid on the department's proposals, as shown by the schedule marked "Exhibit B," and also submitted a letter constituting part of its bid, copy of which letter is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit D."

It will be noticed that the bids of these two companies were in identical figures, each bidding for one-half of the armor to be contracted for. These two companies have heretofore been manufacturing armor plate for the Government, and each has its plant ready prepared for the manufacture of this material. The time within which each of these two companies in its bid proposed to begin deliveries was six months after the signing of the contract, the armor to be delivered in each case at the rate of 300 tons per month.

Your petitioner, the Midvale Steel Co., the only other bidder for armor, has not a plant that would enable it to manufacture now such armor as is required, but it has large steel works, and has heretofore been doing, and is now doing, a large business in the manufacture of steel forms of various kinds. Its proprietors, understanding that the Government desired to procure competition in the manufacture of armor, made a careful examination of the subject matter, including calculations of the cost of erecting a proper plant, and the time within which the same could be done, and said company having prepared itself in all respects to enter the field as a competitor of the two aforesaid companies for the manufacture of armor, submitted its bids as shown in the schedule marked "Exhibit B," together with a letter as part thereof, a copy of which letter, marked "Exhibit E," is hereto attached. Petitioner offered to begin deliveries within 26 months and to deliver thereafter at the rate of 500 tons per month.

Petitioner's bid was, as it understands, in all respects formal and complete and accompanied by a certified check for the amount required of bidders, and petitioner is prepared in all respects to show, if it should be required, that it is competent to comply with its said offer and bid in every respect. This, however, petitioner assumes may be taken for granted, as the action of the Acting Secretary of the Navy, hereinafter adverted to, was not based upon any objection to the formality of petitioner's bid, or the ability of petitioners to comply therewith. Petitioner further states that none of the armor bid for by it, except that for the Maine class, hereinafter mentioned, will be needed before the time when petitioner offered to begin deliveries.

The amounts of money involved in these biddings were very great, figuring up, according to the prices heretofore demanded of the Government for such armor as was required in this case, a very large sum total, to wit, over $18,000,000; and at the reduced prices bid by your petitioner, figuring up over $15,000,000.

It was known to the representatives of both the Carnegie Co. and the Bethlehem Co., before the biddings in this case, that petitioner would also put in a bid, and it was also known to the gentlemen that petitioner was not prepared with a plant, and was not therefore able to agree now to furnish a certain part of the armor wanted by the Government, to wit, the armor for ships of the Maine class (about 7,200 tons) at the time when such armor would be needed, it being understood that some of the armor for the vessels of this class would be wanted within about 12 months from the date of the bidding. The Carnegie and Bethlehem companies, therefore, as to the armor for this Maine class of vessels, possessed an advantage which was well known the Midvale Steel Co. could not overcome. If these two companies should, therefore, by concert with each other, agree to bid and should bid, each of them for one-half of all the armor contained in the proposals of the department, and if each should make it a condition that its bid was not binding unless such company should obtain practically one-half of all the armor desired by the Government, it would be plainly impossible for the Midvale Steel Co. to become a competitor, unless the Government should agree to let the Midvale Co. have such portion of the armor as it could undertake to furnish within the time needed. Petitioner would be excluded from bidding for the whole amount of armor mentioned in the proposal of the Government, because it would be impossible for it to erect the large and costly necessary plant and put it into operation within less than two years and two months. Petitioner's estimate of time necessary for the erection of such plant was and is 26 months.

This being the situation, these two companies, the Carnegie and Bethlehem, each made it a condition of its bid that it should obtain practically one-half of the armor. If, then, the Government should be unwilling to extend the time to two years and two months for the beginning of the deliveries of armor for the Maine class, it was plainly impossible that the bid of the Midvale Co. for the whole of the armor in classes A and B could be accepted; and if the department, after opening all the bids, should reject them all, including all those of the Midvale Co., which were much the lowest, the net result of this first bidding would be that the two old companies heretofore engaged in the manufacture of armor would have gained information as to the prices at which their proposed new competitor was willing to manufacture in competition with them and would now, having each of them a plant, and thus an advantage of, say, $4,000,000, be in a condition to shut petitioner out in future lettings and prevent the department securing a competitor with them for the manufacture of armor. Petitioner, of course, saw, before it made its bids, that the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies would probably attempt, by attaching to their bids such conditions, to exclude the bid or bids of petitioner from being considered by the department. Petitioner therefore did not confine itself to bidding for the whole amount of armor, but it submitted separate bids, giving the prices at which it would manufacture each of the several quantities of armor in classes A and B, as mentioned in the Government's proposals, including also bolts and nuts, as will appear from its bid herewith submitted.

Petitioner so put in its bids because, according to the circular accompanying the department's proposals for armor, the department would have the right to accept or reject, so far as it was concerned, any and every part of any bid. Petitioner had hoped to be awarded at least some large portion of the armor in question, because it would be able to furnish any and all of the armor called for within the required time except the 7,200 tons needed for the ships of the Maine class.

Under petitioner's bid and the provisions of the department's circular, heretofore referred to, the department might have awarded petitioner about 24,000 tons of armor of class A and about 3,500 tons of armor of class B, all of which would have been exclusive of the armor for the Maine class. Petitioner's bid was substantially and greatly lower than the bids of the other two companies, and if the above-named amount of armor, to wit, 24,000 tons of class A and 3,500 tons of class B, had been awarded petitioner, the Government would have saved $1,470,000, as compared with the prices at which the two old companies agreed to take the armor of these two classes.

Again, the department might have awarded to the Midvale Steel Co. 20,000 tons of class A, for which it had put in a separate straight bid, and by so doing the saving to the Government on this amount of armor over the prices asked by the two old companies would have been $960,000. The delivery of this armor petitioner offered to complete within 40 months after the beginning. The Carnegie and Bethlehem companies offered to complete their deliveries of less amounts within 50 months after beginning. Had either of these two awards, to wit, of 20,000 tons or 27,500, been made to the Midvale Co., the Government might have readvertised as to the armor not awarded to petitioner. It will be seen that the Midvale Steel Co. expressed in its bid its unwillingness to agree to manufacture less than 20,000 tons of armor, and this for the reason that your petitioner could not undertake to erect a plant which would cost over $3,000,000 unless it should procure a contract for a large amount of armor. This condition attached to the Midvale Co.s bid is totally unlike the conditions attached to the bids of the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies in this, that those companies already have their plants erected and ready for operation and they have each of them heretofore undertaken to manufacture, and have manufactured, much smaller amounts of armor than 15,000 tons.

The importance of this matter to your petitioner and to the Government was such that petitioner fully expected that before any decision should be made in the matter of said bids petitioner would have been heard, and at such hearing petitioner could have pointed out, as it has herein undertaken to indicate, the way easily open to the Government to accept petitioner's bid for 20,000 tons of class A, or for 27,500 tons, or other larger amount; but this matter was decided by the honorable Acting Secretary of the Navy on the 11th day of August, 1906, only a day after the bids were put in, without hearing at all from the petitioner and without its ever having been pointed out to the honorable Acting Secretary of the Navy, in the papers, so far as petitioner has been able to see, that this course might have been taken.

The prices named by the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies for class A armor at this bidding were about $50 per ton less than the prices heretofore generally understood to have been named by them as bottom prices; and the prices named by petitioner for armor of this class were about $102 per ton below such heretofore named prices of those two old companies; and petitioner insists that the prices bid by it are fair and reasonable and much lower than such armor has ever at any time been furnished, as well as lower than the rate at which the Government could itself manufacture its armor; and that by accepting, as hereinabove indicated, the bid or bids of your petitioner the Government will obtain a competitor in the field of armor manufacturing. All the armor heretofore used by the Government for a number of years past has been manufactured by the Carnegie and Bethlehem Steel Co. No other companies since those two companies were in the field, say for a period of 10 years, have ever ventured to compete with them by making any bona fide bid. The Midvale Steel Co. has undertaken to compete with them, risking millions of dollars in the venture, and it respectfully submits that its bid or bids should be accepted.

Petitioner respectfully further submits that the department can not reasonably expect ever to bring into the field a new competitor in the matter of manufacturing armor if, when the new aspirant shall have put in a reasonable bid, and one much lower than the bids of the old companies, such reasonable bid shall, nevertheless, although the Government has full power to accept it, be rejected and the old companies, already provided with plants, shall thus be given still another opportunity with all their advantages to drive the new aspirant from the field.

The honorable Acting Secretary of the Navy has decided to set aside all the bids that were submitted on the 10th day of August, 1906, and to readvertise; and from this decision the Midvale Steel Co. respectfully takes its appeal to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, or, if he should feel that he can not now revise the act of the honorable Acting Secretary, then this appeal is to the President of the United States.

THE MIDVALE STEEL CO.,

Attorneys.

APPENDIX C.

ARMOR BIDS OF OCTOBER, 1903.

The Midvale Steel Co. bid as follows:
Class, A, $398 per ton net, with no royalty.
Class B, $393 per ton net, with no royalty.
Class C, $388 per ton net, with no royalty.
Class D, $385 per ton net, with no royalty.

Carnegie's and Bethlehem's bids were alike, at $420 for class A and $400 for other classes, with royalties aggregating $33.60 per ton for class A armor and $11.20 for class B armor. This makes $453.60 per ton net for class A and $411.20 net for class B armor.

Midvale was awarded a little over one-third of the 16,000 tons (about) required. The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies were awarded their proportion of the armor at their prices, their average being (plus royalties) $450.60, as against an average price of $397 bid by Midvale, which asked no royalty. This armor was for the Mississippi and Idaho.

APPENDIX D.

In January, 1905, when bids were opened for about 8,000 tons of armor, and each maker bid the same price as before (see Appendix C), the same fight was made against Midvale getting any portion of the work. The department thereupon ordered a board to investigate the probabilities of our being able to keep our obligations under the existing contract and any new contracts that might be awarded. Although given every assurance as to the company's ability, the board reported adversely, erroneously so, as subsequent event showed. The Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Paul Morton, finally decided to give Midvale an order for 1,000 tons of the armor last needed, comprising superstructure work and turrets for the New Hampshire, North Carolina, and Montana, at the figures bid by it. Of course, an utterly unprofitable order. The contract was conditioned upon Midvale having fulfilled on March 1, 1906 (11 months later), all the requirements of the first contract. The balance of the armor needed was placed with the Bethlehem and Carnegie at their own figures and with the royalties added.

Midvale "made good," and was awarded the 1,000 tons referred to above.

APPENDIX E.

In July, 1906, bids were again opened for armor.

The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies bid $381 for classes A, B, and C armor and $350 for class D armor; Midvale's bid was $346 for class A, $345 for class B, $344 for class C, and $343 for class D armor. On this occasion no royalties were specified by the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, so that the apparent difference between the bids were the real differences, and the question of royalties has never again appeared in the bidding.

Falling back on the clause in the appropriation act "having in view the best results and the most expeditious delivery," the Secretary of the Navy decided to give Midvale only one-half of the order, and divided the other half between Carnegie and Bethlehem, stipulating for the first time that the higher bidders must accept their share of the work at the prices of the lowest bidder. Of the 7,319 tons called for at this time for the Michigan and South Carolina, Midvale received 3,660 tons.

APPENDIX F.

In the summer of 1907 bids were opened for the armor required for the Delaware and North Dakota.

Midvale bid $410 per ton, if awarded 3,028 tons; $428 per ton, if awarded 5,540 tons; and 396 tons class C at $410 per ton, and 76 tons of class D at $410 per ton.

Bethlehem and Carnegie bid $420 for class A armor and $400 for each of the other classes. Under date of June 29, 1907, the Bureau of Ordnance wrote us as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1907.

SIRS: Referring to the bids opened on the 20th instant for armor required for battleships Nos. 28 and 29:

1. After an analysis of the bids, the department considers that the price per ton offered by the Bethlehem and Carnegie Steel Cos. for classes A, B, C, and D armor, as described in the specifications, viz, $420, $400, $400, and $400, respectively, and which do not limit the locations to be assigned any portion of the armor, are the lowest prices bid.

2. In consideration, however, of the closeness of the bids and with a view to encouraging the upkeep of your plant, the department proposes to assign you approximately 2,230 tons of the armor bid upon, provided you agree to accept it at the prices per ton of the lowest bidders, viz, class A, $420; class B, $400; class C, $400; and class D, $400; such total, 2,230 tons (approximately) to be assigned in such proportionate amounts as to difficulties and costs of manufacture as seem fair and equitable.

3. It is thought that in the event of such possible distribution the assignment of the 2,230 tons (approximately) to you would be about as follows:

CLASS A.
Main belt, one side one ship	565.7
Lower casemate athwartship, one side one ship	40.6
Two barbettes	547.1
Lower casemate, one side one ship	430.7
Sides and backs, three turrets	192.1
Port plates for three turrets	75.8
		1,852.0
CLASS B.
Around gun positions, one side one ship	83.4
Upper casemate diagonal, one side one ship	39.8
Two barbettes	89.1
Torpedo direction station, one ship	5.3
		217.6
CLASS C.
Tops for three turrets (approximately)	79.5
Conning-tower tube, one ship (approximately)	63.0
		142.5
CLASS D.
Bolts and nuts required for the above-mentioned armor (say approximately)		18.0
		2,230.1

4. Of the above-mentioned armor, that required for the torpedo-directing station and conning-tower tube may not be assigned under existing specifications, but may be readvertised for; in such an event, the approximate amount of armor to be allotted you under the proposed assignment would become approximately 2,162 tons.

5. Referring to the personal interview on this subject yesterday morning of representatives of your company with the Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, and to their assent to the above proposition, this letter is forwarded, as agreed upon, requesting confirmation at your earliest convenience.

Respectfully,
N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

MIDVALE STEEL CO.,
Philadelphia, Pa.
(Through Inspector of Ordnance, U. S. Navy.)

As the department's conditions were accepted by Midvale, a contract for 2,250 tons was placed with us at an average price of about $416.50 per ton, whereas the company had offered to deliver over 3,000 tons at $420 per ton. Had the Navy Department chosen to award to Midvale this armor at its low figure and the remainder to its competitors at their price, the saving to the Government would have been large.

APPENDIX G.

Consists of: United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the third circuit. Nos. 40, 41, 42, and 43. March term, 1911.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. No. 1478. March term, 1911.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the third circuit.

Appeals from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

Brief of appellee on the expiration of patents during pendency of suits.

"Opinion fills a small book. Decision is: 'The decree of the court below will therefore be affirmed with costs, but our affirmance of such decree is based on our conclusion that claim 5 of Patent No. 534178, granted to Albert Schmitz and Emil Ehrensberger, is invalid; that claim 1 of the Patent No. 642926, granted to Albert Schmitz, is invalid; that claims 1 and 3 of Patent No. 651965 and claims 1 and 3 of Patent No. 653413, both granted to Ehrensberger, are not infringed.'"

APPENDIX H.

On November 9, 1908, the armor required for the Utah and Florida was bid upon. The bids were as follows:

	Class A.	Class B.	Class C.	Class D.	Total.
	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.
Bethlehem	$420	$406	$470	$508	$1,804
Carnegie	420	415	455	600	1,800
Midvale	420	405	462	512	1,799

Here, again, Midvale's bid was the lowest received, but the decision of the Navy Department was to award each bidder one-third of the work, Midvale's portion being given to it at the figures it bid.

APPENDIX I.

Bids for the armor required for the Arkansas and Wyoming were opened August 18, 1909. The bids were of the same general character as before, with the figure of $420 remaining unchanged for the class A armor, but the other classes varying. Midvale was again slightly the lowest bidder, yet it received about 800 tons less than either of its competitors, for that amount was awarded each of them before the balance was divided into thirds. All contracts were made conditional upon agreement by the contractors to furnish armor at the lowest price bid for each class by any bidder.

The bids were as follows:

	Class A.	Class B.	Class C.	Class D.	Class E.	Total.
	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.	Per ton.
Bethelehem	$420	$418	$470	$587	$508	$2,403
Carnegie	420	420	460	600	600	2,500
Midvale	420	415	470	590	512	2,407

APPENDIX J.

To consider the proposed designs for the Texas and New York armor, representatives of the armor makers were invited to meet the bureau in a conference on October 7, 1910. At this conference a full and free discussion was held as to the character of the proposed changes and the increased cost that their adoption would involve. (See Appendix K.)

APPENDIX K.

On December 1, 1910, bids on the armor required for the Texas and New York were opened. Novel designs had been prepared for the turrets of these two ships, involving the manufacture of a number of very difficult and expensive plates, and the revolving rings of the fire-control towers, forgings of great size, requiring an immense amount of machine work, were to be included in the class D hollow armor forgings.

In their proposals all the armor makers bid as they had done before on the class A armor and made a subdivision of the class A armor for the turrets, for which $60 per ton more was asked, and they increased the price of the class D armor to cover the fire-control rings.

The armor for the Texas was divided by the department practically into thirds, each bidder being obliged to take his quota at the lowest price bid by any of the three bidders.

Owing to the large amount by which the cost of the Florida had exceeded the estimates, the Navy Department was obliged to call for more money, and in making the appropriations Congress attached certain new conditions. (See naval act Mar. 4, 1911.) Probably on account of these, the Navy Department in awarding the armor for the New York, which was done at a subsequent date, for the first time in its history awarded all the armor in each class to the lowest bidder in that class—dividing the armor as nearly equally as practicable between the bidders where the figures were the same. (See Appendix J.) The bids were as follows:

	A.	A(turret).	C.	D.	E.
Carnegie	$420	$480	$460	.....	$518
Bethlehem	420	480	470	$655	508
Midvale	420	480	470	655	512

APPENDIX L.

On January 4, 1912, bids for the armor required for the Oklahoma and Nevada were opened. The bids varied very slightly from those for the New York and Texas, the armor was divided very nearly into thirds, and in each class the price of the lowest bidder was that at which the contracts were placed.

The bids were as follows:

	A.	A (turret).	B.	C.
Carnegie	$420	$480	$460	$508
Bethlehem	420	480	470	508
Midvale	420	480	470	508

APPENDIX M.

Bids for the armor required for the Pennsylvania were opened February 18, 1913.

Midvale underbid its competitors on every item, class A, class A for turrets, B, C, C bronze, and D; yet the department divided the contracts into practically equal parts, obliging its competitors to accept their share of the work at Midvale's prices, no advantage whatever accruing to Midvale from being the lowest bidder.

The prices at which this contract was placed were as follows:

Class A, $454.
Class A turret, $518.
Class B, $496.
Class C, $548.
Class C bronze, $1,875.
Class D, $708.

It will be noted that there was an increase in these figures over those previously bid, due to the adoption by Congress of the eight-hour law, which considerably increased the cost of manufacture.

The bids submitted were as follows:

	A.	A(turret).	B.	C.	D.	Bronze
Carnegie	$455.00	$520.00	$498.00	$550.00	.....	$1,900.00
Bethlehem	454.65	519.60	497.95	549.91	$709.04	1,884.63
Midvale	454.00	518.00	496.00	548.00	708.00	1,875.00

APPENDIX N.

On August 27, 1913, bids were opened for the armor required for battleship No. 39. As the armor, except for new specifications, was similar to that for the Pennsylvania, "Midvale" bid exactly the same price that had taken that order. (See Appendix M.)

The Secretary of the Navy objected to the fact that the Carnegie and Bethlehem bids also conformed to prices that had taken the previous contract and were therefore uniform with that bid by Midvale. He announced that he would receive new bids on October 14, 1913, and would award the whole of the contract to the lowest bidder. Midvale on that date made the lowest bid and received the entire order.

The increased resisting power required of the armor for this ship, as well as the increased power to penetrate possessed by the newest type projectiles, which will be used to test it, makes us fearful lest the demands of the Navy Department have passed the limits possible in manufacture. The failure of a few plates to pass this ballistic or firing test would entail a very great money loss to the company.

These tests are made by the Navy Department at the Indianhead Proving Grounds, and if the enormous mass of steel has not taken an absolutely perfect temper—some of these plates weigh as much as 132,500 pounds finished and 186,500 pounds in the rough, and finish 10 feet 10 inches high, 23 feet long, and 13 inches thick, while others have a thickness of 18 inches—a failure and consequent rejection is certain.

In these enormous plates not only a triple condition of temper is required, more intricate and difficult than good razors or springs receive, but every stage in the long and complicated method of manufacture must have reached theoretical perfection in order to pass the tests noted above. The successful production of modern armor is conceded by all competent persons to be the most difficult problem, entailing the greatest risks, that the metallurgist is called upon to meet.

Midvale's bid on October 14, 1913, was as follows:

Class A1, $440; class A2, $504; class B, $482; class C (steel), $534; class C (bronze), $1,861; hollow forgings, $694.

The Carnegie Steel Co. bid:

Class A1, 447; class A2, $511; class B, $489.

The Bethlehem Steel Co. bid:

Class A1, $444; class A2, $508; class B, $486.

APPENDIX O.

The Midvale Steel Co. received an additional payment of $14,732.24, made under the following clause in the Italian contract, which payments are not made under any of the American contracts.

The following is a translation of that part of the Italian armor contract referred to above:

"ART. 12.—METAL CUT OFF COLD.

"When, for the presence of doors, etc., within the perimeter of the plate there is required the removal of metal from the plate cut to measure, the weight of the metal so removed shall be paid to the company assuming for a unit price that corresponding to the plate finished diminished by one-fourth, provided always that the metal be removed after the operation of final tempering.

"If, instead, the metal is removed after cementation, but before the final tempering, the deduction to be made to the unit contract price shall be one-half.

"The same compensation is given when the perimeter of the plate has such a shape that the proportion between its superficies and that of the minimum circumscribed rectangle is less than 0.9. The weight of the metal that is missing to the completion of the aforesaid rectangle will be paid for on the basis of the preceding tariff.

"The metal taken away from the contour of the plates for the presence of cuts intended for the application of hinges shall equally be paid to the company in compensation for the work necessary to the mating of the cuts.

"The preceding rules are not applicable in connection with the drilling for bolts. Nor will there be given compensation for the parts which are removed from the finished plates to give to the edges the required inclinations, even if they be discontinued, excepting in case of mortises."

APPENDIX P.

For some years past there has been a steady increase in the cost of armor manufacture. Beginning with the Utah and Florida keyways had to be cut in the abutting edges of all plates; on the Texas and New York (bids of December, 1910) the plates were made larger and thicker, requiring much new equipment for their production and the design of the turrets was radically changed with greatly increased cost of manufacture and much necessary outlay for new machinery; beginning with the Oklahoma and Nevada new and improved types of armor-piercing projectiles were specified for use in testing these plates, requiring a marked increase in their ballistic efficiency and a very heavy outlay for the experimental work involved in this improvement; with the Pennsylvania the eigh-hour law went into operation under which, as most of the processes in armor manufacture are continuous, the maker is compelled to pay out 50 per cent more in wages with no increase in production.

The contract for the armor for the Mississippi was dated December, 1903. The average weight of the plates was 15 tons; the maximum weight of one plate was 29½ tons.

The contract for the armor for the Oklahoma was dated January, 1912. The average weight of the plates is 33⅓ tons; the maximum weight of one plate is 50 tons.

The contract for the armor for the Pennsylvania is dated March, 1913. The average weight of the plates is 35¼ tons; the maximum weight of one plate is 60 tons.

These three contracts, covering a period of 10 years, shows the rapid increase in the size and weight of all armor. In addition to this, the difficulties and cost of machining have been increased by the cutting of vertical keyways and the fitting of plates. In the design of turrets, conning towers, uptakes, etc., the number of plates used has been reduced and instead of having plain rectangular plates intricate shapes have been substituted, which has also increased the cost of machining and assembling.

FIRST CONTRACT FOR ARMOR PLATE "MISSISSIPPI" AND "IDAHO," NO. 10 BELT PLATE.

Maximum weight and sizes of largest plate, 111" x 9" x 192¼"=54,400 lbs. finished weight; 118" x 9¾" x 228"=74,400 lbs. rough weight.

Ingot for above=96" x 22½" x 138"=123,600 lbs.

Port plate for turrets—light in weight on account of large openings. 94⅛" x 12" x 228⅛"=42,000 lbs. finished weight; 101" x 12¾" x 252"=92,100 lbs. rough weight.

Ingot for above=126" x 26½"=160,000 lbs.

Discard demanded by specifications=25% from top.

LATEST CONTRACT FOR ARMOR FOR "PENNSYLVANIA"—III BARBETTE PLATE.

Maximum weight and sizes of largest plate, 130¼" x 13" x 277"=132,500 lbs. finished weight; 142" x 17" x 272"=186,500 lbs. rough weight.

Ingot for above=61" x 110"=281,600 lbs.

Port plate for turrets—light in weight on account of large port openings, 145" x 13" x 232"=106,000 lbs. finished weight; 154" x 22½" x 235"=231,000 lbs. rough weight.

Ingot for above=61" x 110"=343,500 lbs.

Discard demanded by specifications=25% from top.

Waste during manufacture based on difference in weight of ingot and finished plate=72½% for port plates, and 53% for belt plates.

(See Appendix N.)

STATEMENT OF MR. GUILLIAEM AERTSEN.

Mr. G. Aertsen, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

1. The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

A. Guilliaem Aertsen.

2. The CHAIRMAN. What is your official connection with the Midvale Steel Co.?

A. Auditor.

3. Q. How much does it cost your company f. o. b. to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A–1; that is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges?—A. As a confidential employee of the Midvale Steel Co., I am not at liberty to disclose such information pertaining to its business as is held to be secret and known only to its higher officers. I must therefore respectfully decline to answer this question.

4. Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration expenses?—A. See answer to question 3.

5. Q. Has this cost been reached by taking the annual output of a single year or of a term of years and making allowance for rejections and ballistic failures?—A. See answer to question 3.

6. Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. See answer to question 3.

7. Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. See answer to question 3.

8. Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat?—A. Pig iron, steel scrap, metallic nickel, ferromanganese, ferrosilicon, ferrochrome (and other alloys which may be deemed beneficial), limestone, burnt lime, fluorspar, iron ore. The costs, or market values, of these components vary so constantly as to make it impossible to give their "unit prices."

9. Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. Ordinarily, during the interval between tapping one heat and charging raw materials for the next, the furnace is prepared for the next heat at an average cost for labor, fuel, and material, amounting to about $25 to $50. This does not include the expense for maintenance and general repairs of the furnace and other apparatus in the open-hearth plant, which are made periodically or from time to time.

10. Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. This item would amount to 50 cents or $1 per ton on an average.

11. Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. See answer to question 9. The cost of preparation of ladles is included in the cost of preparation of furnace.

12. Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. See answer to question 3.

13. Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. See answer to question 3.

14. Q. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. See answer to question 3.

15. Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. See answer to question 3.

16. Q. What is the cost for forging?—A. See answer to question 3.

17. Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingots?—A. See answer to question 3.

18. Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 12,600 tons.

19. Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching forge?—A. About 75 tons.

20. Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 12,525 tons.

21. Q. How many tons were rejected during the forging?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 152 tons.

22. Q. What scrap allowance was made for those rejected during forging?—A. Understanding this question to ask what scrap allowance in value was made, I must refer to my answer to question 3.

23. Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. The percentage of loss from oxidization and scale does not appear in our cost records.

24. Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

25. Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

26. Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. See answer to question 3.

27. Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. See answer to question 3.

28. Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded—how many tons?—A. Our cost records do not give these figures. I beg to refer you to Mr. Francis Bradley's answer to this question.

29. Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. See answer to question 3.

30. Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. See answer to question 3.

31. Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 9,640 tons.

32. Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment in tons?—A. The percentage of loss from oxidization and scale does not appear in our cost records.

33. Q. What were the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. Our cost records indicate that rejections on this account have been practically nothing.

34. Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

35. Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

36. Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. See answer to question 3.

37. Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

38. Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. See answer to question 3.

39. Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton; no machining?—A. See answer to question 3.

40. Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 9,105 tons.

41. Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 210 tons. See answer to question 22.

42. Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

43. Q. What does the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

44. Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

45. Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. See answer to question 3.

46. Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

47. Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 6,320 tons of forged plates were machined and approximately 3,750 tons of machined plates were shipped; the difference, 2,570 tons, was approximately the discard.

48. Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. See answer to question 3.

49. Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. See answer to question 3.

50. Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 8,520 tons.

51. Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 250 tons.

52. Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

53. Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

54. Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

55. Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

56. Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

57. Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. See answer to question 3.

58. Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 6,320 tons.

59. Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 3,750 tons.

60. Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining; if so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, our cost records show no losses due to machining operations. Approximately 423 tons were rejected on account of failure in ballistic tests. In regard to allowance for this rejected material I must refer you to my answer to question 3.

61. Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

62. Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

63. Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, supply of tools?—A. See answer to question 3.

64. Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operation?—A. See answer to question 3.

65. Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

66. Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. See answer to question 3.

67. Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. See answer to question 59. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, approximately 3,750 tons.

68. Q. What does the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. See answer to question 3.

69. Q. How are the total water, steam power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. See answer to question 3.

70. Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. See answer to question 3.

71. Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. See answer to question 3.

72. Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class A-2?—A. See answer to question 3.

73. Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class B?—A. See answer to question 3.

74. Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. See answer to question 3.

75. Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. Understanding this question to apply only to that part of the company's working capital which is devoted to armor plate, I would reply that the figure will depend upon the size in tonnage and value of the armor-plate contract in process at any given time and its proportion to other work in process during the same period in other parts of our plant. Under ordinary conditions $750,000 to $1,000,000 would be a conservative low estimate for working capital.

76. Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. See answer to question 3.

77. Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture and separate from depreciation?—A. See answer to question 3.

78. Q. What does this maintenance mean; to what is it applied?—A. See answer to question 3.

79. Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor; how has this been arrived at?—A. See answer to question 3.

80. Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionally divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. See answer to question 3.

81. Q. How much did the insurance charges on the armor plant amount to?—A. See answer to question 3.

82. Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. See answer to question 3.

83. Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund?—A. See answer to question 3.

84. Q. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant; what is this depreciation; how has it been arrived at?—A. See answer to question 3.

85. Q. After a year's operations within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. See answer to question 3.

86. Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation, and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. See answer to question 3.

87. Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. See answer to question 3.

88. Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. See answer to question 3.

89. Q. The remainder of this sum which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. See answer to question 3.

90. Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. See answer to question 3.

91. Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. See answer to question 3.

92. Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant, or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. See answer to question 3.

STATEMENT OF MR. FRANCIS BRADLEY.

Mr. Francis Bradley, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

1. The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Answer. Francis Bradley.

2. The CHAIRMAN. What is your official connection with the Midvale Steel Co.?

Answer. Superintendent of armor-plate department.

3. Q. How much does it cost your company f. o. b. to produce a ton of K. C. armor, class A-1; that is, material, labor, and shop overhead charges?—A. My duties are the production of armor and the cost is outside my sphere.

4. Q. How much do you add to this cost for deterioration of plant and administration expenses?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

5. Q. Has this cost been reached by taking the annual output of a single year, or of a term of years, and making allowance for rejections and ballistic failures?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

6. Q. What are the various components of this cost per ton?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

7. Q. What is the cost per ton of the armor ingot at the forge, including all rejections?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

8. Q. Give the components, with their unit prices, that enter into a furnace charge for an armor heat.—A. The components of an armor ingot heat are pig iron, scrap, metallic nickel, limestone, burnt lime, iron ore, fluorspar, ferromanganese, ferrosilicon, and ferrochrome. In order to make up for the loss in melting, 15 per cent greater weight of ingredients are charged into the furnace than are produced in the ingot. The unit price varies so greatly from day to day that it would be impossible to give this information.

9. Q. How much repair and preparation cost for the open-hearth furnace is made for each heat?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

10. Q. How much does this amount to per ton of armor ingot produced?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

11. Q. How much does the repair and preparation cost of the ladles amount to for each ton of ingot?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

12. Q. What is the fuel charge for each ton of ingot?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

13. Q. What is the proportional laboratory superintendence charge for each ton of ingot?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

14. What is the lifting, stripping, and chipping charge per ton of ingot?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

15. Q. What is the power charge, including steam, electric, and water, for each ton of ingot?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

16. Q. What is the cost for forging?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

17. Q. What scrap allowance is made for condemned ingot?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

18. Q. How many tons of armor ingots did your company manufacture last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 12,600 tons.

19. Q. What was the total number of these ingots in tonnage which were rejected before reaching forge?—A. About 75 tons rejected.

20. Q. How many tons of ingots were forged during the past year?—A. About 12,525 tons from August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914.

21. Q. How many tons were rejected during the forging?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 152.

22. Q. What scrap allowance was made for those rejected during forging?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

23. Q. What was the oxidization and scale loss at the forge?—A. This is not accurately known, but is estimated at 3 per cent for each heating.

24. Q. What did the labor for forging each ton of ingot amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

25. Q. What did the fuel for each ton of ingot forged amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

26. Q. What did the repairs to heating furnaces amount to for each ton of armor?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

27. Q. What did the electric power, light, steam, water, drafting, transportation, and inspection per ton of plate amount to during the forging?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

28. Q. Of all the ingots forged and not rejected, what percentage was discarded? How many tons?—A. Seven and one-fourth per cent for cracks and tears. This amounted to 910 tons.

29. Q. What allowance was made for the metal thus discarded?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

30. Q. What is the unit price per ton of plate when ready for carbonizing?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

31. Q. How many tons of armor plate were carbonized at the works of your company last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 9,640 tons.

32. Q. What was the oxidization and scale in this treatment in tons?—A. Approximately 6 per cent.

33. Q. What were the total number of plates rejected during carbonization?—A. About 125 tons.

34. Q. What does the labor per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
35. Q. What does the material per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
36. Q. How much fuel per ton of plate is used in carbonizing?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
37. Q. How much did the furnace repairs per ton of carbonized plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
38. Q. What does the proportional amount of steam, electric power, lighting, drafting, inspection, laboratory, and transportation amount to per ton of carbonized plate?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
39. Q. How much is the carbonized plate worth per ton; no machining?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
40. Q. How many tons of armor plate were reforged by your company during the past year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 9,105 tons.
41. Q. How many tons of plate were rejected during the reforging process, and was any allowance for the recovered material made in working the cost of armor?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, 210 tons. I do not know the rate for the allowance made.
42. Q. What does the labor per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
43. Q. What does the repairs per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
44. Q. What does the fuel per ton for reforging amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
45. Q. What is the proportional amount of power—electric, steam, water—for reforging?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
46. Q. What does the proportional drafting, inspection, transportation, and laboratory for reforging amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
47. Q. How much discard is made after reforging?—A. This question is very blind, but as amplified by Admiral Strauss, can best be answered by the fact that from August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, we sent into the machine shop 6,320 tons and shipped 3,750 tons, making the amount discarded during this period about 2,570 tons.
48. Q. What allowance is made for this discard in reckoning the cost?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
49. Q. What is the cost of armor per ton after reforging?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
50. Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to treatment by your company during the past year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 8,520 tons.
51. Q. How many tons were lost during treatment by rejection?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 250 tons.
52. Q. What does the labor per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
53. Q. What does the material per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
54. Q. What do the repairs per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
55. Q. What does the fuel per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
56. Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of treated plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
57. Q. What is the total cost per ton of treated and rectified plate?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
58. Q. How many tons of armor plate were sent to machining by your company last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 6,320 tons.
59. Q. How many tons of machined plate were produced last year?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, about 3,750 tons.
60. Q. Were there any rejections during the process of machining? If so, how many tons, and what allowance was made for the rejected material in reckoning the final cost?—A. From August 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, there were no plates rejected due to machining; but this company suffered a loss of 423 tons due to failure in ballistic tests. I have no knowledge of the allowance made for this rejected material.
61. Q. How much per ton does the labor of machining amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
62. Q. How much does the machined scrap amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
63. Q. How much does the material for machining amount to, including oil, waste, repairing of tools, supply of tools?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
64. Q. How much do the repairs per ton of machined plate amount to during the machining operation?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
65. Q. What do the proportional charges per ton of machined plate amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
66. Q. What is the cost per ton of machined plate produced?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
67. Q. How many tons of machined plate were presented by your company for shipment last year?—A. Refer to my answer to question 59.
68. Q. What does the labor and material for preparation for shipment amount to per ton of finished plate?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
69. Q. How are the total water, steam power, transportation, inspection, drafting, and laboratory charges reckoned?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
70. Q. What were the total power charges for your plant last year—by power charges is meant electric power, steam power, water power, or producer gas for running engines, as the case may be—and how did you arrive at the method of assigning the various proportions to the various operations?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
71. Q. The same information is desired for the laboratory, drafting, inspection, and transportation charges.—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
72. Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class A-2?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
73. Q. What is the cost per ton of shipped plate, class B?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
74. Q. What was the average cost per ton of class C steel armor?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
75. Q. What do you reckon your working capital to be?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
76. Q. What does the maintenance of your plant amount to per annum?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
77. Q. Is this amount over and above the repairs which have been charged to the various operations comprising the total manufacture, and separate from depreciation?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
78. Q. What does this maintenance mean; to what is it applied?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
79. Q. What is the total of proportional administration charges made to armor; how has this been arrived at?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
80. Q. Give a tabulated list showing the various salaries paid, and how proportionately divided, so as to include the armor plant.—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
81. Q. How much did the insurance charges on the armor plant amount to?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
82. Q. How much taxes are chargeable to the armor plant?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
83. Q. How much do you charge to armor in behalf of the pension fund and liability fund?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
84. How much depreciation is charged against the armor plant; what is this depreciation; how has it been arrived at?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
85. Q. After a year's operations, within which a certain sum of money has been set aside from the proceeds of the manufacture of armor for depreciation charge, what is done with this money?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
86. Q. After depreciation charge has been made to a year's operation, and there have been no replacements of tools, is this amount used to amortize the original investment?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
87. Q. Since the erection of your armor plant what has been the total amount of depreciation which has been charged into the cost of armor?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
88. Q. How much, if any, of this sum of money has been actually used for the installation of new machinery in place of old, for building new buildings, furnaces, etc., in place of old, and has this expenditure been added to the capital account?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
89. Q. The remainder of this sum which has not been expended, has it been used for amortizing any of the original investment?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
90. Q. How much money is invested in your armor plant?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
91. Q. Does this represent the total amount which has been expended for this plant, inclusive of all depreciation replacements?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.
92. Q. In reckoning your profit, is it reckoned as a profit on the total amount of money which has been put into the armor plant or on the amount which has been put into the armor plant less all depreciation which has not been used for the purpose of replacement?—A. Refer to my answer to question 3.

APPENDIX B.

MINUTES OF THE COMMITTEE.

In pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1914, the committee met at 12 o'clock noon, Wednesday, November 18, 1914, in the room of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives; Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, United States Navy, Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department.

Moved and seconded that Senator B. R. TILLMAN be made chairman of the committee. Motion carried.

Moved and seconded that Admiral Strauss be made secretary of the committee. Motion carried.

The committee discussed, informally, various matters with reference to its investigation and decided to visit the armor-plate factory of the Carnegie Steel Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.; that of the Midvale Steel Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; and that of the Bethlehem Steel Co., South Bethlehem, Pa.

At 1.15 p. m. the committee adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, November 19, at 10 o'clock a. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 19, 1914.

The committee met at 10 a. m., Thursday, November 19, 1914, in the room of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN, chairman; Rear Admiral J. Strauss, United States Navy, secretary; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, was absent on account of illness.

Committee adjourned at 10.05 a. m., subject to the call of the chairman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 22, 1914.

On November 22 the committee met on call of the chairman and proceeded to Pittsburgh, Pa., arriving on the morning of the 23d.

The committee met at the Fort Pitt Hotel at 9.15 a. m.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress; and Rear Admiral J. Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee; Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy; Mr. J. B. Knight and Mr. E. S. Theall, assistants to the committee.

The committee then proceeded to the office of the Carnegie Steel Co., whence they were taken to the works of the company at Homestead, Pa.

The committee inspected the open-hearth department and all of the works devoted to the manufacture of armor, accompanied by Mr. A. C. Dinkey, president of the company; Mr. R. H. Watson, assistant general superintendent; and Mr. L. R. Custer, superintendent of the armor department.

The members of the committee then inspected the plate mill and the mill for the manufacture of structural material.

The committee then proceeded to Pittsburgh and held a meeting at the Fort Pitt Hotel. Arrangements were made by which hearings were to be held at the office of the Carnegie Steel Co., beginning at 9 a. m. November 24.

PITTSBURGH, PA., November 24, 1914.

The committee proceeded at 9 a. m. to the office of the Carnegie Steel Co. and held its hearings. (See Appendix A.)

The committee met at 7 p. m. at the Fort Pitt Hotel, and elected Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, as vice chairman of the committee.

The committee left Pittsburgh on the evening of November 24, arriving in Philadelphia the morning of the following day, and proceeded at once to South Bethlehem, Pa., arriving there at 10.07 a. m.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., November 25, 1914.

The committee inspected the works of the Bethlehem Steel Co., accompanied by Mr. E. G. Grace, president, and other officials of the Bethlehem

Steel Co., and held a hearing in the office of the company in the afternoon of that same day, November 25. (See Appendix A.)

The committee then proceeded to Philadelphia, Pa., arriving there that same evening.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 27, 1914.

The committee inspected the works of the Midvale Steel Co., accompanied by Mr. W. P. Barba, manager, and other officials of the company. They then held a hearing in the office of the company. (See Appendix A.)

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 28, 1914.

The committee met at 9.10 a. m. at the Hotel Walton.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, and Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee; Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy; Mr. J. B. Knight and Mr. E. S. Theall, assistants to the committee.

Matters were discussed relative to the future meetings of the committee. It was determined to take a recess until Tuesday, December 8, at 2.30 p. m.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 8, 1914.

The committee met at 2.30 p. m. in the office of the chairman.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding: Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, United States Navy; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, was unavoidably detained by a committee hearing.

The committee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1915.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m. at the office of the chairman.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, and Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee.

At the request of the chairman of the committee Mr. B. J. Morrison, of Philadelphia, Pa., appeared before the committee, and an informal discussion took place, whereupon Mr. Morrison stated that he would be ready to appear before the committee at a future date prepared to give testimony under oath.

Adjourned, subject to call of the chairman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 19, 1915.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m. at the office of the chairman.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, and Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, members of the committee; Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy, assistant to the committee.

The committee discussed the form of the report, and adjourned at 3.45 p. m. until February 23, 1915, at 2 p. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1915.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m. at the office of the chairman.

Present: Hon. B. R. TILLMAN (chairman) presiding; Hon. L. P. PADGETT, Member of Congress, and Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, United States Navy, members of the committee; Lieut. Commander C. C. Bloch, United States Navy, assistant to the committee.

The committee further discussed its report, and adjourned at 3.45 p. m.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 208.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, what is that bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8846) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section No. 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. ROBINSON. I withdraw the request for the present. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Claims was, under the subhead "Alabama," on page 7, after line 6, to insert:

To Lamira A. Ellison, widow of Jonathan H. Ellison, deceased, of DeKalb County, $565.

To Mary Ann Jackson, of Dallas County, $514.

To Frances A. Moore, widow of John J. Moore, deceased, of Bullock County, $2,131.

To the Masonic Lodge of Bexar, Marion County, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I was detained from the Chamber. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Florida has made any statement in regard to the scope of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I have just this minute entered the Chamber, and I can make a statement in a few moments. I wish to inquire just how far the reading has progressed?

The SECRETARY. On page 7, down to line 14. The amendments above that point have been agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask the Senator to indulge me a moment until I can get a copy of the report.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall be very glad to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill for the present.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the chairman of the committee should make a statement in regard to the bill. I think it is a bad bill, myself. I think half of these things have been paid a time or two; and I should like to have the chairman of the committee state how he arrived at the conclusion that these particular claims were meritorious, to make a statement as to the general scope of the bill, and what is the character of the claims included in it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to do so.

In 1864 Congress created the Southern Claims Commission. That commission was authorized to investigate claims for property taken from citizens of loyal States during the Civil War. There were thrown around the commission certain restrictions which operated to the disadvantage of claimants. For example, when the commission was first established, any claim amounting to $3,000 was required to be presented in Washington. Later, by an amendment, the amount was raised to $10,000.

The Southern Claims Commission acted upon ex parte hearings. Many claimants, in view of that fact, were slow to present their claims. So time passed until the year 1871 arrived, when for the first time claims of loyal citizens from Confederate States were authorized to be considered, and for two years after that the claims commission was continued.

Then, on March 3, 1873, Congress passed a law that no claims not theretofore presented to the claims commission should be paid. In other words, they set up a statute of limitations and made it available immediately. Therefore, from 1871 until 1883 claimants had no real opportunity to appear before any tribunal to present the merits of their claims.

In 1883 the Bowman Act was passed and under it the court could not entertain a claim for the occupation of real estate and could not consider any claim not presented prior to March 3, 1873. The only claims under the Bowman Act, therefore, that could be presented were claims for personal property taken.

In 1887 the Tucker Act was passed, and for the first time, under section 14, a real opportunity was presented for the consideration of these claims.

Under the Bowman Act and under the Tucker Act of 1887 each of these claimants was required to go into the Court of Claims to establish the validity and the merits of his claim; and there is no claim in this bill that has not been presented to the Court of Claims and on which a favorable report has not been had.

As to the amount, the court fixed that usually and very naturally at much less than the claims.

Again, under the Bowman Act and under the Tucker Act no disloyal citizen could recover. Loyalty was made a prerequisite, and no investigation into the merits of the claim was made until that fact had been established.

The House included in this bill three classes of claims. First, the claims of the volunteer officers of the Union Army for what is known as the minimum wage pay. Congress authorized the governors of the States to issue commissions to officers, and a provision was incorporated in that act to the effect that the Government would not recognize the commission of a governor unless the regiment or the battalion or the company came up to a minimum requirement. By reason of the fact that the Government of the United States in many instances had issued commissions and the officers had been in command of depleted troops, the War Department declined to pay the difference between the pay of the private and the pay of an officer unless he had been actually engaged in the war. That decision of the department was contested and upheld. Congress in 1910 passed an act in which this language is found:

Hereafter, in administering the act of Congress approved February 24, 1897, entitled "An act to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer forces," the decision of the War Department as to the right of any person to be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States under the provisions of said act shall be conclusive, and no claim shall be allowed or considered after the 1st day of January, 1911.

Under that act the committee felt that it was obliged to strike out from this bill the class of claims known as minimum wage pay cases. So throughout this bill those claims will be found stricken out.

I may say that the claims are arranged by classes, and that most of the claims stricken out belonged to that class.

When the omnibus claims bill was before the last Congress, the Senate took some action, and the committee felt that it was but just and fair that the action theretofore taken by the Senate should be recognized and carried out in the preparation of this bill.

The second class of cases is for the occupation, use, damage, and destruction of churches, lodges, schools, and hospital, except where the churches, hospitals, schools, etc., were destroyed or damaged as a result of battles or engagements.

The third class of claims is that of the individual loyal citizens from whom were taken during the war stores and supplies.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire of the Senator if there are any claims in this bill that have been allowed upon the ground that the claimant was loyal during the period of the war and the claim of loyalty is based upon the fact that the claimant was an infant and therefore could not be disloyal?

Mr. BRYAN. There are a number of claims of that character.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, let me inquire again of the Senator if it is not a fact that within a very few years, basing the claim upon that ground, any claim that might be made by anyone on account of damage to property growing out of the war could not be validated?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, of course that would involve perjury, and, as I have stated, loyalty must be proved under the Bowman and Tucker acts to the satisfaction of the court.

I want to say to the Senator from Kansas, furthermore, that in the preparation of this bill we had the advantage of the action of the last Congress. I served upon the subcommittee which prepared the bill that went down to defeat in the closing days of the last Congress. There was, so far as I remember, not a single case of disagreement between the then chairman of the committee and myself as to the sufficiency of the proof in any instance of the 1,500 claims. We went through each one of them in detail as to the question of loyalty, and we agreed. The claims are stricken out of this bill where the court had expressed any doubt of the proof. When this bill came to be considered and the subcommittee was appointed we had the unusual pleasure of the able assistance of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who had served upon the circuit court of appeals of his circuit for many years, and any case in which we felt a doubt either as to the merit of the claim or as to the loyalty of the claimant went out of the bill without question.

Now, I want to say to the Senator that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], who gave to these claims in the last Congress his undivided attention for months, will not be able to point to a single instance in this bill where there was any doubt as to loyalty. The criticism of the Senator from South Dakota was that there are claims in the bill which came late to which we might apply with justice the statute of limitations, and upon that feature of the case I have this to say:

The proposition of the Senator looks reasonable upon its face. If a claim is allowed to wait a generation, it naturally attracts suspicion. I was inclined to agree with that idea until I found upon investigation that there had existed for years in Congress a policy which kept these claimants from having their claims referred to the Court of Claims by a resolution. I am satisfied that there has not been delay, especially since the Tucker Act, when the claimants first had a real opportunity to present their claims.

I think it is true that many of their claims have not been well represented or intelligently handled by claim agents who swarm around this Capitol; and there existed in Congress a policy of allowing each Member of the House of Representatives and each Senator a limited number of claims during each Congress. Members of the House were allowed three claims and Members of the Senate, I understand, were allowed six. In the country which was devastated by the war there were thousands of claims, and so it resulted that the claims which were paid were those held by friends of Congressmen or by those who were loyal during the war. Congressmen necessarily, under a policy like that, were compelled to choose between their constituents, and they would present the claims of a few citizens and leave unpresented the claims of the rest of them; and so the presentation of the claims was slow.

Now, claims have remained after the resolution had been agreed to, but the claim had been referred to the courts two years, until I have almost been ready to believe that the agents and attorneys of some of them, at least, took the claim, sat down, and did nothing, hoping that some day Congress would pass the bill; and if it did, they would get a portion of the claim, and if it did not they had not expended upon it any time or any labor.

The Senator asked me if there are any claims in this bill in which claimants were held to be loyal because of tender years. I have stated to him that that is the fact. Now, Mr. President, let us see as to their merit. A man living in the South entered the Confederate Army, left his children at home—1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, or even 11 years old. He never came back from the war. It seems to me that it would be a cruel doctrine to visit upon those children, who are unable to form any opinion not only as to their loyalty or their allegiance but an opinion of any value upon any question. So I have not hesitated to advocate that claims of that character should be placed in the bill. It goes without saying, because it is common knowledge, that the young men at that time old enough to form an opinion were taking part in the struggle, but wherever there has been a doubt in the mind of the court about the loyalty of the claimant it has been rejected.

Mr. President, this is perhaps the last omnibus claims bill that will ever be passed by Congress. There ought to be an end to things, but it does not seem to me that it would be just or fair, after inviting these people into the courts of the Government by resolutions, impliedly, at least, saying to them that if you make good with your evidence you will be entitled to pay for your loss.

The Senate added to the bill a class of claims which were not included by the House. Those claims were the claims of officers of the Union Army, and it seems to me there is merit in them. Under a ruling of the War Department those officers who left their regiments at the close of the war without waiting to be formally mustered out were not entitled to the 20 cents a mile allowed for their expenses in traveling home, while those officers who remained until they were mustered out were allowed the 20 cents a mile. I can see no good reason why the officers who left when the war was over, being anxious to get back home quickly, should be discriminated against and not allowed their travel pay, when those who remained a few days longer, until muster out came, should be allowed this travel pay. So the Senate committee has included in this bill that class of claims, and they will be found beginning on page 102 of the bill.

That in brief outline and in imperfect outline states, I believe, the character of claims included in this bill. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. For information, I want to ask the Senator from Florida a question. By whom are these claims presented now—by the original claimants or have they been assigned?

Mr. BRYAN. They are presented by either the original claimants or their heirs.

Mr. GRONNA. And none of them has been assigned?

Mr. BRYAN. No.

Mr. President, I hope I shall not have to make any further statement, but I can not take my seat without saying that the members of the Committee on Claims, both in the last Congress and in this Congress, know the work that has been devoted to this bill. All told, I think I have spent about four months of almost solid time upon it. The bill has been on the calendar nearly a year. I have been criticized because the bill has not become a law. With reference to that I only have to say that Congress has been engaged in considering important legislation. Without any attempt at grand-stand play I have been anxious to have this bill considered, but I have not made useless motions or attempts to get it up when I knew it would not be considered. It so happened a few days ago when the shipping bill was before the Senate and a motion was made to displace the shipping bill with the omnibus claims bill that I voted "nay." That vote has been construed as indicative of hostility upon my part to the meritorious claims in this bill.

It is true, Mr. President, that the State from which I come has very little interest in the bill. I am acting as the chairman of the Committee on Claims, having been directed to report the bill. There are States whose citizens are very largely interested in the bill; they have been clamoring and demanding both in the House and in the Senate an opportunity to have it considered, and I express the hope that it may be considered without unusual delay.

I make the further statement that, if there is an idea that there are included within the covers of this bill claims which have no foundations, or if it is supposed that any item is in the nature of a gift or gratuity to the proposed beneficiaries, the idea is without foundation in fact. The bill represents compensation for property that was taken from these people by the Government in time of war and under the necessities of war, but property for the taking of which they had a right to believe they would be recompensed; property the payment for which the good faith of the Government of the United States was pledged by its officers when the property was taken and used for the support of the Army.

Of course while the Union Armies were in the States of Tennessee, Virginia, Alabama, and Georgia there was much property taken or destroyed by the soldiers out on frolics of their own, and in some instances it was taken under the belief by the owner that it was taken by authority, but in no single, solitary item in this bill will be found a claim for property that was not taken by authority of the Government through its legally constituted officers.

I express the hope, Mr. President, that the bill may be considered speedily; and it will have to be considered speedily unless it is to fail, as so many bills of a similar character have failed.

Let me say one word more. Nearly every item in the bill has passed the Senate and the House, or has been passed by one House and not passed by the other through the same Congress, and has therefore failed. Many of these items have passed three or four times, and there are very few items in the bill that have not passed both House in that way a number of times.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand, these claims have all been adjudicated by the Court of Claims, and they have, of course, been presented by attorneys. Now, can the Senator give us any information as to the amount that will go to those attorneys and the amount that will go to claimants? As I understand, this bill carries approximately $2,000,000.

Mr. BRYAN. The bill as reported from the Senate Committee on Claims will carry $1,910,591.12.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state just the amount that will be carried in different classes of claims. The claims of churches, lodges, schools, hospitals, and so forth, amount to $486,403.29; the claims of individuals amount to $1,191,368.33, and the claims for travel pay would be the difference between that and the sum total of the bill. I have not the exact figures before me, but I shall be glad to make the calculation.

Mr. GRONNA. My inquiry, Mr. President, is, Can the Senator from Florida give us approximately the amount that will be paid as attorneys' fees?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I can not; but I will not oppose a limitation of the amount which will be paid to attorneys representing the claimants. The committee has not authorized such an amendment; the matter was not before the committee, but since the bill has been reported the attitude not only of the committee, but that of the Senate and House has been misrepresented, letters having gone out from Washington to the claimants urging them to bring all the pressure to bear upon their Representatives and Senators they could, thus indicating that there may be very large contingent fees; and so I believe an amendment similar to the amendment which limits the amount that can be paid to attorneys for the collection of pension claims ought to be adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, I want to state to him that I have not received a single letter from my constituents about this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has been much more fortunate than I have been.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to assure the Senator that I have no prejudice against the bill. I know that any work the Senator from Florida does he does thoroughly, but I do have some interest in the question of attorneys' fees. I believe a limitation should be placed upon the amount that should be paid for attorneys' fees.

Mr. BRYAN. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to that. I believe it ought to be done, and will vote for a provision of that kind.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator, then, what amount he believes should be allowed.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, that would come up when the amendment is considered. I should say not exceeding 25 per cent.

Mr. GRONNA. It will make a great deal of difference with me in voting on this measure whether or not there is a provision in the bill limiting the amount or stipulating the amount to be paid as attorneys' fees.

Mr. BRYAN. There is not in the bill such an amendment, but one will be offered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask the Senator whether or not these claims have gone to any court or tribunal?

Mr. BRYAN. Every claim in this bill has been considered and found in favor of the claimants by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And they have been represented by attorneys in the Court of Claims?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. So that the services to be remunerated would be for services there as well as for services in getting the measure through Congress?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think we should allow a claim for getting a measure through Congress. I think the attorneys' fees ought to be limited to their work before the Court of Claims.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Colorado, with the consent of the Senator from Florida, that not only were the claimants represented by counsel in the Court of Claims, but there was an attorney representing the United States Government protecting the interests of the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I presume there was considerable litigation involving the taking of testimony and other things.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that is correct.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, referring to the question of loyalty and the claims that are based upon the loyalty of the claimants due to tender years, the Senator from Florida illustrated that by stating that if a man entered the Confederate Army, leaving his family a home, and did not return, and he had children of 6, 7, 8, 9, or 10 years of age, and his property was destroyed or injured, a claim on the part of those children for such destruction of property would be a legitimate claim against the Government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Florida would pay attention to that; I should like to know what his answer to it is.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like the attention of the Senator, if I may have it; and I will say now that if the Senators on the other side desire this bill passed they will give attention to this discussion or they will not get it passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to inquire if the Senator from Kansas desires to put the Senate under duress?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not at all; but in my efforts to say what I have to say I may consume a great deal more time if I am given no attention.

Mr. REED. I want to say that I think the Senator is entitled to attention, and I hope it will be accorded him.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has a mighty fine audience.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, referring to the claims based upon loyalty due to tender years, when the claimant was incapable of disloyalty, the Senator from Florida illustrated that by saying that if a citizen of Alabama, we will say, had entered the Confederate Army and left a family of children at home and never came back, and the property of this man, while he was so engaged in war against the Government, had been injured——

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. If the property was taken during the life of the disloyal soldier no award has been made. It is only in cases after the parent had died and the property had descended to his children and was the property of the children at the time it was seized that the claim has been allowed. There is not a claim; there is not an item connected with this bill for any property of a disloyal citizen who was living and at war when the property was taken. Award is only made in cases where the father had been killed or died and the property was taken after it had descended to the children.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, in order that I may understand the matter, I will ask as to the claims that were based upon that theory; does it appear clearly, without doubt, that the father is dead and that the children had been put into possession of the property in their own right subsequent to the decease of the parent?

Mr. BRYAN. It clearly appears in every case that the disloyal ancestor is dead. Of course the Senator understands the property is not turned over to minor children; it is turned over to their legal representatives. They might not be in charge of it at the time the property was injured or taken, but it was their property; they had the title to it. In this bill there are some cases where I think the children were old enough to form opinions or to take part in the war, while others were too young. The Court of Claims has disallowed claims of disloyal children, and only allowed the pro rata share of those who were loyal by reason of their tender years, and for other reasons. One peculiar thing happened in the consideration of this bill. The Senate committee a couple of years ago, in considering the bill, were not satisfied of the proof of loyalty of a claimant living near Chickamauga, or between there and Atlanta, and we struck the claim out of the bill. When the House conferees came to take up the matter with us they proved that he was a loyal citizen, that Gen. Grant had taken breakfast with him immediately before one of those battles. It has not been just a mere formal finding of law. I think they have been held to a pretty strict account.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, we will say the father was in the Confederate Army and was killed, and, of course, guardians would be appointed for the children, and the guardians would be chosen from his relatives. The Senator makes an illustration of some of the children being old enough to form opinions and others not old enough. I think claims based upon that proposition have not merit because of that fact. Those children are no more entitled to consideration from the Government than their brothers and sisters who are slightly older. When you undertake to discriminate in the years of accountability in order to find the loyalty of the claimants you are getting into a degree of refined distinctions that it is impossible for the human mind to draw; and it seems to me it is a great mistake to include claims of that kind in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator upon what presumption he approaches this subject when he assumes that a child of tender years who has no opinion one way or the other, but living within a State which State is hostile to the Government, can be construed to be loyal?

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not construe it that way myself, and I do not intend to vote for any claims based upon that ground, because I think it is a strained effort to find the basis for a claim that is not justified. I take that position without any feeling of hostility to the unfortunate people of the South who lost their property in that struggle. But a government can not undertake to pay the damages sustained by all the people in a time of war such as we had at that time, when the States of the South practically unanimously were arrayed against the Government.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the common-law presumption, which has been the law of this country since it has been inhabited and the law of England for centuries before, that under the age of 12 a child shall be conclusively presumed to be incapable of crime, and after that to a certain age the presumption is rebuttable.

In connection with the Senator's criticisms of the claims of some of these infants I wish to call his attention to the condition of those in Tennessee. Perhaps there are more of the claims of these infants from my State than any other State that is included in this bill, and if he will go back into the facts as far as possible I have no doubt that he will find that the friends of the claimants, and in some cases the fathers, were Union people. Some of the fathers were killed in the Federal Army. From my division of the State there were 30,000 good soldiers in the Federal Army, and it is from that State, as I say, that more than one-fourth of these claims come. As to any falsification, as to any want of a sound basis or a just basis for any of these claims, I want to say that those people or their representatives now are not men that would commit perjury for a claim against the Government or anyone else.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have expressed my views as to the soundness of basing a claim upon this matter of loyalty due to infancy. I do not think it is a sound basis. The Senator from Florida suggested that this probably would be the last omnibus claims bill. If I thought this would be the last omnibus claims bill, I would forego the discomfort of opposing its passage, as I shall this afternoon, but in my opinion the passage of this bill under the circumstances under which it is to be passed simply encourages the horde of claim agents and alleged attorneys who swarm about this Capitol to begin to bombard Congress again for another omnibus claims bill. The facility with which omnibus claims bills have passed Congress for the last five years has not been an encouragement to these ravenous vampires that collect here and try to make a living and some profit year after year by getting hold of claims and finally getting them worked through in various ways.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that we have not had an omnibus claims bill for 10 years.

Mr. BRISTOW. No—well, I guess that is true. I remember distinctly that something over five years ago, or about five years ago, we had a very heated debate here on an omnibus claims bill, but I guess it failed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator from Kansas a moment ago stated that these claims were going to people practically all of whom were in sympathy with the Confederacy.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I never made any such statement. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JAMES. I thought the Senator stated that practically all of them were in sympathy with the Confederacy.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no.

Mr. JAMES. That was my understanding, but, of course, I accept the Senator's statement. I wish, however, to call his attention to the fact that Kentucky has a great many claims in this bill for churches and schoolhouses and property taken from her people, and Kentucky furnished more soldiers to the Union than she did to the Confederacy, and furnished more than her quota of soldiers to the Union. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I think I can show him that practically all of these claims that are in this bill were reported favorably by one who was a Senator from Kentucky and was himself a Federal soldier—the late Senator Bradley.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not doubt that there are meritorious claims in the bill. I am not contending that there are not; but an omnibus claims bill is made the vehicle of carrying through Congress a great many claims that are not honest claims, and they use the just claims as a basis for carrying through the claims that are not justified. I remember that the last omnibus claims bill that was proposed was defeated because of the character of the claims that were finally injected into it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. In looking over this bill I am considerably puzzled to know as much about it as I ought to know, and I want to ask the Senator from Florida a question. The title of the bill says that these are claims reported under the provisions of certain acts known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts. Now, turning to pages 18 and 19, I find that almost every claim from the States of Illinois and Indiana is stricken from the bill by the committee. Were those inadvertently placed there or were they not reported as the title alleges?

Mr. BRYAN. As I stated—perhaps the Senator was not in the Chamber at the time——

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I was not.

Mr. BRYAN. The committee dealt with these claims by classes; and this committee, or the committee two years ago or three years ago, struck out the claims known as the minimum-pay cases, which represent the difference between the salary of a soldier which the Government recognized and the salary he would have received if the commission of the governor of the State had been recognized.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that some of the claims stricken out of this bill were stricken out of the prior bill?

Mr. BRYAN. All these classes of claims were stricken out in the bill two years ago.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not familiar with the other claims; but I turn to the claims for Michigan, and there are a few little claims in there. I am not familiar with all of those things from memory, but I know the cases of Myron C. Bond and Edwin A. Wells were in the other bill, and I was wondering why they are stricken out now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, in addition, there are some cases stricken out where the committee was not convinced as to the justice of the claims. The claims to which the Senator refers may not be of the minimum class, but that is not the only class of claims stricken out. There are individual cases. Let me ask the Senator what page he is referring to?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Page 44.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not think the cases from Michigan to which the Senator refers—at least I do not recall it so—are within the class that the Senator from Florida is discussing. There were certain officers during the Civil War who, up to a certain year, were allowed additional pay where they had a commission but were actually performing the duties of a command of a grade higher than the commission they bore.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Those are these cases.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There was an exception when the command was not up to its minimum capacity. There was an exception made in the law that, even though they performed the duties of the higher grade, if their command was not up to the minimum they should not have this additional compensation. That statutory bar remained there, and some time in the nineties—I was formerly very familiar with it—they erected a bar practically against the allowance of such claims, making an absolute bar, by limitation, to their consideration.

Now, they were left out of this bill because we were by indirection repealing the statute of 1863, as I recall it, which barred them from getting this additional pay if their commands were not up to the minimum, and also by indirection repealing this absolute limitation that was put by the department against allowing them in 1901 or 1902 or 1903—along there somewhere. Now, I do not think the Bond case—I remember the name very well—came within that class.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, those claims have been put in this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have the information that the Senator wants. Those were not Civil War claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is it.

Mr. BRYAN. Those were claims arising from the Spanish-American War. There are three claims from the State of Michigan to which that applies—the claims of Myron C. Bond, Guy M. Claflin, and Edwin A. Wells.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Those were Spanish-American officers.

Mr. BRYAN. The facts are stated here. Take the Wells case——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not gotten through my interrogatory, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. GALLINGER. The puzzle to me is that the House, in passing this bill, has put these claims in, and presumably the House was familiar with all the circumstances; but it seems to me extraordinary that every claim but three in Illinois has been stricken out, every claim but one in Indiana, and every single claim in the State of Iowa. They go out of this bill. The State of New Hampshire happened to be fortunate enough to draw one claim in this bill, I believe of about $40, but that is stricken out. Now, if there is a valid explanation for it, of course I am satisfied; but the fact that they were stricken from this bill and put in another bill that never may be reached is not a very satisfactory explanation to me, for the reason that if they were left in this bill it will likely be passed and the claims collected, while the other bill may never be reached.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, let me make an explanation to the Senator from New Hampshire, because I do not want him to be of the impression that any discrimination was made against any set of citizens of any State.

It is not at all strange that the claims stricken out should be from the Northern States, because those are the States which furnished the officers in the Union Army. I stated before the Senator came in, and I will state in detail now, because I want him to be satisfied, that—

The right of such officers to "difference in pay" under the joint resolution of 1866 has been determined in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court of the United States. The following shows the position of the Court of Claims taken in the case of Lieut. Henry (6 C. Cls., p. 162):

This is a typical case:

A company in the Second Ohio Volunteers, during the War of the Rebellion, becomes reduced below the minimum entitling it to a second lieutenant. The claimant being first sergeant of that company, and the office of second lieutenant being vacant, is commissioned as such by the governor of Ohio. He is also assigned to duty in that company by the colonel of the regiment. He applies to be mustered in, but the mustering officer refuses. Nevertheless he remains on duty, being the only commissioned officer with the company, commanding it several times in battle, incurring all the responsibilities and performing all the duties of a commissioned officer. The Pay Department refuses to pay him except as first sergeant.

That was upheld; and in 1910, as I stated when the Senator was not in the Chamber, Congress passed an act saying that the decision of the War Department should be conclusive, and the War Department refused to recognize the commission granted by the governor. Now, as the Senator can understand, there was a certain requirement made—take a regiment, for example—that there must not be less than 400 in a regiment before there could be a colonel. The colonel is killed or resigned when the regiment is below the minimum. A major is appointed to the position of colonel, commissioned by the governor as colonel, and applies to be mustered in. The War Department refusing to muster him, he, nevertheless, serves as colonel under his commission. Unless he was in a battle the War Department would not recognize that commission. That happens to be the fact in the three cases from Michigan. It is not at all, as the Senator will see, unnatural. On the contrary, it is the thing to be expected that those officers will come from the Northern States.

The committee, on the other hand, added a class of claims, on page 102, known as travel-pay cases, which I also explained when the Senator was not present and which represent the travel allowance of those officers of the Union Army who went home immediately after peace was declared without having been formally mustered out. The War Department refused to pay them. Congress from time to time has been sending down to the Court of Claims to get the facts. The facts are undisputed. These amounts represent what the travel pay would have been if they had remained three or four days to be mustered out and had not been in a hurry to get home. That class of claims has been stricken out because the War Department would never recognize them. Congress in 1910 passed a statute that the decision of the War Department should be final.

I suggest this to the Senator: I am not very particular about it. Let us take a vote on the first one of those claims which we reach, and if it be the determination of the Senate that the class of claims known as the minimum pay claims shall not be incorporated in this bill that will end a very large class.

Mr. GALLINGER. What troubles me is the fact that these claims seem to have been passed upon by the court, or they would not be in this bill. The House recognizes the validity and correctness of these claims, I apprehend, or the House never would have put them in the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly the Senator is correct. The House believed that they ought to be paid.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been contending for a long time in this body that the Government ought to pay its debts, and if these are valid claims, and have been so certified by the court under the Bowman and Tucker Acts, and the House recognized that fact and placed them in the bill and passed them and sent them here, it seems to me it is rather technical for us to strike them out. There may be a little irregularity about them, but they seem to be legal.

Mr. BRYAN. The court have not adjudged that the claims should be paid, but the Court of Claims have found that if they are allowed the difference in pay between the rank in which they served, recognized by the War Department, and the rank conferred by the governor who issued the commissions would be the amount put in the bill. It was my intention as soon as we reached the first item to ask the Senate to take a vote. I think the action of the committee was taken because that was the action of the Senate in the last Congress. I would prefer to take a vote, and if the Senate chooses to allow these claims, of course they remain in the bill, and if they do not allow them the House may insist so strenuously that they will have to be allowed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Referring to the class of claims under discussion by the Senator from New Hampshire, I will state that the findings of the Court of Claims are simply findings of fact as to the amount that would be due these claimants in the event that it was determined that they had a just claim. The Court of Claims did not find that the Government owed them that much money. It simply found that under certain conditions, if the claims were declared valid, they would amount to so much. I do not think they ought to be included in this bill at all.

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator will permit me, the Court of Claims, in its findings, determines the loyalty of the claimant.

Mr. BRYAN. There is no question about that.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was a question of fact.

Mr. JAMES. It was a question of fact and by its action the Court of Claims did say these people were all loyal to the Government.

Mr. BRISTOW. Giving the reason, because of tender years, and so forth. But it is up to the Senate to determine whether or not the Senate believes there is a just claim existing because of the facts which are set out by the Court of Claims. These cases are referred to the Court of Claims for findings of fact. They are not referred to the Court of Claims to render judgment against the United States. It is not a debt against the United States; it is simply a claim against the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator this question: Would it not expedite the matter if, when we reach the first claim of claimants who were held to be loyal because of tender years, the Senate should take a vote on that claim? If it should determine not to allow that claim, we would be able to save time by striking out all similar claims.

Mr. BRISTOW. That might be. I want to say now that I am against this bill, but I do not propose to resort to any unusual and extraordinary methods to defeat it. I do not want to close my service here by a 24-hour speech or something like that, and I have no intention of doing it. I have stood against the omnibus claims bills since I have been here, and I expect to stand against them until I am through. I have never voted for one, and I never want to vote for one, because when you do you vote for a lot of frauds and carry them into the appropriations of the Government because they are attached to some claims that are meritorious. I have contended since I have been a member of the Committee on Claims that every claim ought to be taken up on its merits and be passed as an independent bill. If we were and had been passing individual bills for the last 10 years we would long ago have had all the meritorious claims passed that there are in this bill.

But there seems to be a desire, a mania, for getting up an omnibus claims bill. If the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], who puts more time on this bill than any other Senator unless it is the Senator from Florida, had put the same amount of labor on these claims as individual claims bills that he put upon this omnibus claims bill there would have been thousands and thousands of dollars worth of just claims paid long ago, and those not just never would have found a place on the calendar of this body.

I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida how much is the difference in the amount carried by the bill that was presented some two years ago, when the senior Senator from South Dakota was chairman of the committee, and the present bill?

Mr. BRYAN. I will state that they varied a very few thousand dollars. My recollection is that the bill reported by the Senator from South Dakota carried $1,819,000. This bill carries $1,910,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. Can the Senator advise us how many claims——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me there? The omnibus claims bills two years ago combined two classes of claims amounting to large sums that are not in this bill at all; for instance, the difference in sea and shore pay and the longevity claims of Regular Army officers.

Mr. BRYAN. That is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Those two classes amounted to several hundred thousand dollars, as I recall it. They are omitted from this bill, and the size of this bill is nearly the same because of a large number of additional claims allowed that were out of the bill two years ago.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, Mr. President, the difference between the bill as it has been reported to the Senate at this time and the bill reported to the Senate before is very great, but the bill as reported by the Committee on Claims at this time does not differ much from the bill reported by the House. The bill reported by the House, outside of the few classes of claims to which the Senator referred, was about the same amount as the bill reported here. The Senator will remember that the Committee on Claims took the position because the sea and shore and longevity class of claims had no position on the Claims Committee in the House. In the House they have two committees, a Committee on Claims of all character except war claims and a War Claims Committee. By reason of that very fact the House would not agree that those claims should be put upon the bill. I will say to the Senator there has been reported from the Committee on Claims the longevity and overtime claims. The committee has not reported the sea and shore pay claims, because the committee is opposed to that class of claims, as it was when the Senator from South Dakota reported the former bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then there is still another class, and that is the overtime claims of the men in the yards working for the Government.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under an assurance given by Secretary Thompson that the time would be kept that they worked in excess of eight hours, there must have been a couple hundred thousand dollars of items of that kind in the omnibus claims bill of two years ago.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; the Senator is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are not in this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me to ask a further question? I find in referring to Calendar No. 594, Senate bill 6120, which the Senator from Florida reported from the committee and which is now on the calendar, that these overtime claims are in that bill. As New Hampshire has a navy yard, there is a very large number of small claims from New Hampshire. I ask the Senator from Florida, after the bill that is now under consideration shall be passed, as I assume it will pass, is it the intention of the Senator to call up the other bill and endeavor to get a favorable consideration of it?

Mr. BRYAN. I would be glad to do so, if we have time. I will say that I am in favor of the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the Senator's purpose, if the time will allow?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it ought to be done.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator understands very well that Mr. MANN, in the House, used every means in his power to prevent the consideration of the claims bill two years ago because there were two classes of claims, one class belonging to the Committee on Claims of the House and the other going to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that fully.

Mr. BRYAN. Therefore we separated them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to raise any technicality in the matter at all; neither do I want it even suggested that I have any purpose to discriminate as between the sections of the country, but the bill that is now up might well be called the Southern claims bill; the bill I hold in my hand might well be called the Northern claims bill. After the bill now under consideration has been passed we may have the opportunity, if time allows, to consider the bill I have in my hand. I think it is but justice and fair play, and that is all I care to ask. I am not going to raise any technical objections to the bill that is under consideration. I recall that when the last claims bill was under consideration a very distinguished Senator on that side of the Chamber said the church claims ought to be thrown out; and, in fact, he went to the extent of saying that they were mostly fraudulent, but I am not going to undertake to accomplish any such purpose as that. The court has acted upon them and reported the facts, and upon the facts reported the bill has been made up, and I shall not obstruct it in any way.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate No. 107 to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 107 and agreeing to the same.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment numbered 107 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from amendment numbered 107.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire what is amendment No. 107?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It reinstates the House provision, which was stricken out, known as the Taylor system. In other words, it makes this bill conform to the naval appropriation bill, the report upon which has just been agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want an opportunity of voting against it. That is all I ask.

Mr. OLIVER. I simply wish to express my regret that the committee could not see its way clear to adhere to the action of the Senate. But I will not take any further time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that we agreed to and brought in two different reports, and the House refused to agree with us.

Mr. OLIVER. I really think I can indorse what the chairman says about that. The conferees on the part of the Senate did about as well as they could.

The report was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19966) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PENROSE conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8846) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not at present expect to take any more time of the Senate on this bill. I may have something further to say in regard to it as the reading proceeds. I want it read in the regular way. It has been a good while since I looked into it. I had no idea it was coming up and that it would be considered during the last day of the session. I do not think that ought to be done. I do not think the bill ought to be passed, but at present I will not take any more time. However, I desire to say before taking my seat that I should like the Senator from South Dakota, the former chairman, at some time during the consideration of the bill to state clearly the difference between this measure and the one passed during the closing days of the last Congress so that we may perceive clearly the distinction.

Mr. BRYAN. I think I can do that in a word just now. The bill struck out most of the claims where the claimants, who were then of tender years, were found loyal. In addition to that a number of claims were striken out because of laches. The claims that the committee two years ago found had no merit in them or were not sufficiently meritorious to justify the payment of the claims have been stricken out of the bill. I think that is the case in nearly every instance. I do not remember now a single claim where the committee differed with the other committee upon the merits.

Mr. President, as I understand, the bill is being read. If the request has not already been made I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for committee amendments.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to make a statement, and I think I had better make it now.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator object to the request?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do at this time.

Mr. President, I realize fully the anxiety of the Senator from Florida to speed this bill. I realize, and not in a hostile way, the interest that the Senators from the southern part of the country have in the bill.

While the Senator from Florida knows my personal view as to many items in this bill, I want to assure him that I am not going to attempt to go further than to try to make a statement in advance of the taking up of the bill in detail, which it seems to me may be of some help to those who have not paid any personal attention to the Tucker and Bowman Acts and the act creating the Southern Claims Commission, and the classification under which these various claims naturally place themselves. I want to do that, and I shall do it, because, taking the view I do of the bill, I think it is my duty to do so. Then, if we can get a fair reading of the bill and a submission of the items, I am perfectly willing that a vote shall be taken upon it, because I have no desire simply to occupy time for the purpose of defeating the bill in that way.

The omnibus claims bill of two years ago and the omnibus claims bill which is now here came over from the House, where they have two Claims Committees—one a War Claims Committee and the other a general Claims Committee. Necessarily, having a War Claims Committee that deals with war claims alone, the House passed an omnibus claims bill containing nothing but war claims. When that bill came over to the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Claims, of which we have but one here, and which has jurisdiction, not only over war claims but over all other claims.

When we were considering the bill under the scope of our jurisdiction, we added to it several classes of claims that the House committee would not have jurisdiction over. One of these, for example, was the class of claims which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] were discussing a while ago with reference to the increase of pay claims by Federal officers on account of performing duties in a higher rank than their commissions defined, but from which they were barred because their commands were not up to the minimum.

Another class was that of claims of Regular Army officers for increased compensation known as longevity claims. Another was a class of claims of officers of the United States Navy, growing out of a difference in the pay they received when performing duty upon shore and the pay received when performing duty at sea. Another class was connected with employees in the navy yards for overtime.

These different classes of claims, which had all been submitted to the Court of Claims and in regard to which findings were made, were grouped and put into the omnibus claims bill of two years ago by the Senate committee. That increased the total amount of the omnibus claims bill two years ago, but we excluded a great many of the so-called war claims.

Those war claims, I want to say to the Senate, can be classified into three or four divisions. One class is for churches, college buildings, school buildings, buildings occupied by lodges, and libraries that were destroyed by the Union Army during the war—not destroyed in battle, not destroyed as an act of war, but torn down and the building material used in constructing bridges, or the brick used in making bake ovens and things of that sort, and where they were taken by the command or under the authority of the officers in command of the Union troops. There are a large number of claims like that, in which the Court of Claims have found that the property had been taken by the authority of an officer; that it was not taken as an act of war or was not the destruction of property in battle; and that the material was appropriated and used in the way that I have described; and finding the value of the property in each of those cases, where the findings were of that character, it appeared that under the Tucker Act, if the claim came under that act, there had not been such laches as would appear to be a barrier to the equities, we recommended the allowance of the claims and put them in the bill. That will give an idea of one class of these claims. For instance, those involving the destruction of churches and schools.

There was another class that involved the rent and occupation by the Union Army of churches for hospitals and headquarters of one kind and another. All over Virginia, Tennessee, and through the South, generally, it appeared that after one of the battles or during the battle the doors of churches were thrown open and the wounded soldiers, the Federals and Confederates, were taken into the churches or into the school buildings and that sometimes for a week, sometimes for a month, sometimes for six months, and possibly a year the church or the schoolhouse was used as a hospital. That makes another class.

In some cases I have felt that some of these claims were purely an afterthought, because the very sentiments of humanity would lead the good people of a neighborhood at the time a battle was going on or immediately afterwards when the wounded soldiers were lying about, whether they were Union soldiers or Confederate soldiers—humanity, to say nothing of Christianity, would lead those people to throw the church doors open and allow the occupation of the church for a few days as a hospital.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will excuse me, I should like to go on without being interrupted just now.

In other cases the occupation continued for such a length of time and the damage to the church property was such that there was a just claim for the use of it and for the damage done to it by this occupation. You will find those claims running from a claim for $150 for the use of a church, practically over night, or for 24 hours or 48 hours—a claim of that kind is never presented until 40 years after the war, and then presented by some one representing the church corporation—you will find these claims running from an undeserving claim like that to a substantial and just claim for the use of a church for six months or a year, where the occupants had perhaps done serious damage to it. There is another class of these claims for the occupation of churches.

Then there are the claims for the taking of cattle and horses, and grain out of the granaries, corn out of the bin, and wood out of the timber lot, and the destruction of rails or the making use of them, and all that sort of thing.

Now you find again that these claims are differentiated; that is, in regard to the course pursued by the claimants. Some of them presented claims to the quartermaster at the time, or immediately afterwards, and he took some action about them; he either recommended that the particular claim be paid or made a report that the man who claimed to be the owner was disloyal and not entitled to anything. In other cases no claim was made at all to the quartermaster; but some years afterwards, under a tribunal of limited jurisdiction called the Southern Claims Commission, whose authority was confined to a certain class of claims—and that commission expired, I think, in 1874 or about that time—they could present claims of a certain kind to that tribunal. In many cases that tribunal rejected the claims because the claimant was disloyal. Then came the demand for further statutes to allow these claimants to have a further day in court, and the result was the enactment of what is called the Bowman Act, which did not make it necessary that there should be findings of some kind in regard to neglect or delay or laches in presenting the claims, but confined its relief to a certain class. A great many of these claims were submitted to the Court of Claims under that act.

Then later on another act was passed, called the Tucker Act, by which the court was required to submit to Congress explanations and reasons, if there were any, for the long years of delay in presenting the claims. The Court of Claims had no jurisdiction except to make findings of the facts, and then it was a discretionary matter with Congress as to whether the findings of fact coming from the Court of Claims appealed to Congress as furnishing sufficient information to them to justify making an appropriation of money.

If the question of laches was involved under the Tucker Act the Court of Claims were required to present to Congress the facts, if any existed, to explain why the claim had apparently lain idle for a whole generation without anybody coming into the Court of Claims to present the proof in regard to it, when the original claimant had been in his grave perhaps for 10 or 15 or 20 years, and his children or his grandchildren, for the first time, were coming up and presenting claims. Under the Tucker Act they were required to present such facts as could be shown to explain the reasons why the delay had occurred, so that Congress might consider them when the question came up as to whether there appeared to be equitable grounds for making appropriations.

There are some good claims in this bill, and I want to say, in justice to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], that, while he and I, working together upon the committee, did not look at these cases alike, he feeling many times that they should be allowed when I thought they ought not to be allowed, I have absolute confidence in the sincerity of his view and in his belief that as to every item which he has submitted in this bill the facts do justify an appropriation on the part of Congress. I regret that I am unable to agree with him in regard to that.

Now, I want to call attention to just enough of these cases to give the Senate an idea of their general character. For instance, let me call attention to the history of the claim found on page 14 of the bill:

To Mrs. M. E. Arrowood, administratrix of the estate of William Coursey, deceased, of Fulton County, $617.

This claim has the following history: It is a claim based upon the taking of property during the Civil War. The property was taken prior to 1864, but the case was not brought to the attention of the Court of Claims until 24 years later, in 1888. Although it was referred to the Court of Claims in 1888, no finding was made in regard to loyalty until 1909, 21 years later. The matter apparently slept in the Court of Claims, after it was taken there, for all that time, before there was any finding or expression in regard to loyalty.

I now want to say a word in regard to the situation in which the Government finds itself in such cases. The Government has some rights. Was this man Coursey a loyal or a disloyal man? The Government might easily have found that out in 1864 or in 1865, when the witnesses were alive, when all the facts were reasonably accessible; but the matter was allowed to sleep until 1909, and then some one came up and said, "Yes; Coursey was loyal. I knew something about him." The Government witnesses might have been found a generation before, but they are all dead and gone now. That shows some of the difficulties which the Government experiences by these long delays.

I want to give you the history of this claim. William Coursey died after the property was taken. So, it was not taken from children of tender years, nor from the administrator of his estate, but it was taken from Coursey himself. He was survived by two sons, Daniel and Lloyd Coursey. They went before the Southern Claims Commission, to which I referred a moment ago, each of them claiming a part of this property, each an undivided half. Lloyd Coursey satisfied the Southern Claims Commission that he was loyal, and they paid him for his half; but they rejected Daniel's claim because he was disloyal.

We are bound to have some respect for that finding. The Southern Claims Commission is criticized a great deal, I know; but it allowed the claim of one brother because he was loyal and disallowed the claim of the other brother because he was disloyal. Now, see what they attempt to do. After Daniel failed because he was disloyal and was unable to collect his half, then, long afterwards, in 1908, they secured the appointment of Mrs. M. E. Arrowood as administratrix of William Coursey, the father of these boys, and then they sought to recover this half interest that Daniel claimed, but which claim was rejected because of his disloyalty. They sought to recover it as the property of the father, Daniel Coursey, although that claim had been sleeping there for 43 years.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. The Southern Claims Commission did not find that Daniel Coursey was disloyal.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I know they did not. They made no finding on that at all. I mean, that is the father, William Coursey.

Mr. BRYAN. They rejected the claim because of the lack of proof of loyalty to the Southern Claims Commission. He afterwards went before the court.

Mr. CRAWFORD. He was unable to make that proof, and that proof was required affirmatively. Now that is put in here as a claim that should be allowed in this bill.

I just want to show the general character of many and many of these claims. Here is a man that claims that he lost some money in a game of chuck-a-luck.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I just want to call attention to it.

Mr. BRYAN. But, Mr. President, that is not in this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I understand it is not in this bill. I am going to be fair about this. I am only calling attention to the character of many of these claims that are sent over by the Court of Claims and upon which they expect Members to appropriate money. No; the Senator excluded that from this bill, but it has passed the House twice in an omnibus bill—page 106, a man named Sheppard. Now, this claim of Sheppard's was not sent to the Court of Claims until 1906. I want to be fair to my southern friends. This was not a southern property owner's claim. This man was a Union soldier. He was loyal; but he was seized by the provost marshal under orders of Gen. Hazen in 1864, and they found $836 in cash in his possession, and they took it away from him because he had been, as a chuck-a-luck gambler, swindling his comrades out of this money. They took it away from him. Then, it seems that in the proof that followed they only showed that he had won $376 of it in chuck-a-luck, and there was a surplus about which the proof was not clear. Gen. Hazen had given that over to some of the officers and it was lost somewhere. It never went into the Treasury of the United States. In 1906 he goes over to the Court of Claims and gets a finding simply of the facts—not that he was entitled to anything, but simply of these facts. He puts that into an omnibus bill and the House passes it, and it comes over here as a part of an omnibus bill.

I am citing it, not in any way to show that many of these claims are not good, but to show how much reliance you can put upon an item that goes into an omnibus bill and is based upon some findings of the Court of Claims.

Now, here is another. The Senator has done well in many of these. I note the absence of some old familiar acquaintances of mine whom I met in these omnibus bills that have been here before, and have been left out of this bill. That is true; but here is one that the Senator has not seen. I think I saw it a moment ago. It is the Humboldt College, Tennessee. Here was a college, the Humboldt Female College, G. S. Lannom, receiver, in Gibson County, Tenn. That did not go to the Court of Claims until 1904, 40 years after the war had closed, and in 1905 they found that that college was loyal. They found—and I am not finding fault with them for that—that this educational or eleemosynary institution, as such, was loyal. I have always been in sympathy with the spirit that prompted the payment, for instance, of the loss occasioned by the destruction of William and Mary College, an old historical institution of that kind; but let us look at this institution. They found it loyal in 1905. The building belonging to this college, occupied by the United States military forces in 1862, used as a hospital, happened to burn down. There is no longer any college there. It is not a going concern. It has not been for years. This man Lannom, whoever he is, away down in 1904 gets himself appointed receiver of that old, obsolete educational corporation that went out of business when its property was burned down, apparently; away down in 1904 he goes in and establishes this old claim, in order that it may be paid over to him as receiver. Now, I want to comment on this without being reckless, or anything of that kind; but it is very clear to my mind that some attorney, enterprising and speculative, got hold of that old incident, and he and Mr. Lannom may have a little snap there in the amount of money they got from that college in the name of that corporation that is practically out of business. We have claim after claim of that character in this bill.

Mr. President, knowing the Senator from Florida as I do, I am going to assume that he has left the specific claim that I now have in mind out of this bill. I know he would if his attention were called to it. I can not just at this moment turn to the particular claim, but it was an old church, I think, down in Tennessee. The building, whatever it may have been worth, was destroyed. That church corporation had been out of business, and there was no organization in existence at all. A whole generation goes by, and this one man comes up presenting some colorable evidence that he is a trustee of that corporation, and in his name he puts a claim through over here in the Court of Claims finding the value of this old church back during the war, and he is apparently the only person in existence that represents that church or that organization.

Now, while I will not say it as an absolute fact, it has so forced itself in upon me that I believe any reasonable person would conclude that it was a mere matter of speculation between the lawyer and this man, who gets himself named as a nominal representative of that old, obsolete church organization, to grab this money and divide it between them. Over and over again there are such claims as that.

Now let us look at this minor-children proposition.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to take any more time than is necessary to get my views on this bill before the Senate, and on that account I do not want to be interrupted. I will yield temporarily if it is in the interest of the business of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will let the Senator finish, if he prefers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It will take me a little time to go over this bill as I want to. I do not want to yield the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I ask that the Senator in charge of the bill will allow it to be laid aside temporarily while I ask to have laid before the Senate the message of the House in reference to Senate bill 5259.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will comply with that request. I ask unanimous consent that the claims bill may temporarily be laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the claims bill is temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its amendments to the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America and between the United States and the countries of Europe, disagreed to by the Senate, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate do further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill S. 5259, and agree to a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Vice President appoint the managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I shall speak briefly on the pending question. What I shall say will be with charity for all and malice toward none. The bitter denunciation by certain Senators on this side of the Chamber of their colleagues because of opposition to the purchase of ships by the Government was unwarranted and unjustifiable. The senior Senator from Missouri and I entered Congress about the same time, some 28 years ago, when a warm friendship at once sprang up between us. I learned to love and admire him. Nothing he can say will drive me away from him or provoke a breach between us. His heart is full of the milk of human kindness. I know he must have rolled and tossed on his bed every night since his ill-tempered and unfortunate utterances on the floor of this Senate, unable to find sleep or repose. Tears have chased each other down his cheeks as the sting of regret has sunk deep into his big heart for having unwittingly and without reflection attempted to hold up to scorn and ridicule certain of his party associates who saw fit to differ with him upon a great and fundamental question of governmental policy. His heart is in the right place. His mind sometimes goes wrong. I freely and without reserve forgive him. Now, the junior Senator from Missouri was born kicking and has been kicking ever since, and somehow he has acquired the habit of running away. He just can not help it, and therefore I excuse him.

For more than half a century, as a humble Member of the Democratic Party, thoroughly subscribing to its principles, which I firmly believe are essential to the best interest of this Republic, I have supported the ticket, assisted in fighting its battles, defended it from attack by its enemies, and marched under its banner both in defeat and victory, and no man can charge that I ever abandoned its flag, deserted to the enemy, or failed to respond to every call it made upon me. It is too late now, with an abiding faith in the justice of its principles which has followed me all these years, to disregard or repudiate the convictions of a lifetime that Government ownership and operation of means of transportation is a violation of the spirit of Democratic institutions, vicious and dangerous in its results, socialistic in principle, and in the end threatens the very existence of the Republic.

If the Democratic Party, of which the senior Senator from Missouri is an honored member, has at any time in its history declared, if given control, it would set the Government up in the shipping business at the expense of all the people and engage in over-sea transportation, or even that it would lend its credit or assistance by subsidies or otherwise to such a scheme, I confess I never heard of it; nor have I heard during the days of debate on this question any friend of the bill declare that such a proposition is in harmony with the policies or principles of the party. Such being my earnest convictions, unless there be some serious, grave, or impending danger imperiling the liberty of the people or the life of the Republic itself, I can not believe the constituency which I in part represent would have me forsake the party whose commission I bear in order to support this bill because some 35 Senators have in caucus declared it a party measure binding upon the hearts and consciences of every Senator on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. President, what constitutes the policies of the Democratic Party, and in what manner are they determined? Are they not declared by and through the assembled counsel and wisdom of its own members gathered from every section of the country, and do they not covenant with the people by solemn pledges to be found in their platforms? Can any Senator an advocate of this bill point to a single declaration which in the remotest degree sanctions or indorses a measure of this character? While the present Congress has revised the tariff, created a regional banking system and a trades commission, and amended the Sherman antitrust law, all progressive and constructive legislation, were they not brought about without an attempt to bind Senators through mutual conferences? So why should it be attempted to compel Senators to support a measure which has no warrant in a Democratic declaration of faith and practice? It is not sufficient to dismiss the question merely by saying it is an administration bill. There is considerable difference between that kind of a measure and one which violates one of the expressed commands of the party faith. If the President in his earnest and sincere desire to promote an adequate merchant marine, a necessity for which all admit, were to submit a proposition and urge its passage for a subsidy from the Public Treasury sufficient to pay the difference in the cost of construction and operation of ships at home and abroad in order to equalize the handicap they are now under, would any Senator, because it happened to be indorsed by the administration, support it as a Democratic measure, and would they vote for a rule to cut off debate and railroad its passage through the Senate?

The people of Alabama have never expressed a desire that the Government should acquire and operate transportation facilities; they have never declared that $40,000,000, more than half the value of their recent cotton crop, should be withdrawn from the Public Treasury and expended in the purchase and operation of ships at exorbitant prices, especially when the friends of this bill have openly admitted the project must of necessity be conducted at great loss, requiring additional appropriations from the Public Treasury to make up the deficiency, and until the party to which I belong instructs me to support such a measure I can not obtain the consent of my mind to vote for a bill which taxes the American people $40,000,000 at one stroke of the pen, on top of an income tax already in force, both upon individuals and corporations; in the face of a known deficit in the National Treasury; and at a time when an emergency stamp tax has just been passed to raise a hundred million dollars to meet the running expenses of the Government; and when it is suggested even this amount is not sufficient to meet the deficiency, and other and additional methods must be found to raise more money, we are asked to appropriate this sum to purchase foreign ships to sail under the direction of a Government commission composed of men who, though honest, patriotic, and capable, know no more about the management of steamship lines and the numerous problems involved in their successful operation than an Alabama farmer knows about a flying machine.

The friends of the bill base their support upon the fact an emergency confronts the Nation, such as justifies them to throw overboard one of the cardinal and fundamental principles of the party. Let us inquire if the emergency—and there is an emergency—is such that this bill, if enacted into law, would relieve the situation or serve any useful or beneficent public purpose and justify the expenditure of this enormous sum of the tax money of the American people; direct the Government to engage in a purely business venture, without precedent in the history or experience of any nation on the face of the earth, and which tends directly to socialism. It authorizes an initial expenditure of $10,000,000, which may be increased to $40,000,000, to purchase or build ships to carry the commerce of this Nation to foreign ports. Whose products will they carry? From what ports will they sail? It is not contended by the most ardent friend of the bill that it would put into service sufficient ships to carry all our tonnage seeking a foreign market. To do so would require thousands of millions of dollars. It is insisted the Government will carry our products at much less cost than private ships are now delivering them, but the Government must discriminate somewhere and somehow as to whose products will be carried at cheaper rates than can be obtained elsewhere, and as to what markets they will be delivered. Who will be selected as the especial beneficiary of the Government's gratuities, who will be denied its advantages, and who will either have to market their products at home or pay the greater tolls demanded by private interests? It must be remembered, however, there is a certain character of commerce awaiting transportation, but does it not consist largely of foodstuffs, live stock, and munitions of war purchased by belligerent powers, and if the war were to terminate tomorrow, would not the present emergency cease and the abnormally high prices and the unusual demand at once become normal, and would not a large number of ships now withdrawn from foreign commerce again engage in foreign shipping?

Already serious agitation has begun for an embargo, not only on our corn and wheat to prevent a famine in this country and to maintain prices within reasonable limits for the protection of our own citizens, but also on munitions of war, both as an act of humanity and to hasten peace in Europe. We are exporting more cotton than in similar periods of our history. During the month of January our exports of cotton exceeded those of the same month a year ago by 320,000 bales, due to the fact cotton is expressly exempt from the list of articles of contraband; so why should we hasten its export when the price is daily increasing? The exports for February show an increase over February a year ago about 627,618 bales.

The exports of cotton by months since December 1, compared with corresponding periods a year ago, are as follows:

Month.	1913	1914	Increase.	Decrease.
December	1,230,730	1,202,115	.....	28,615
	1914.	1915.
January	1,052,732	1,372,175	319,803	.....
February	751,010	1,378,628	627,618	.....
Net increase for the corresponding period ending March 1, 1914, and March 1, 1915			.....	918,805

In December, 1914, the United Kingdom took 572,396 bales of cotton, compared with 472,028 bales in the same month of the year before, or nearly 100,000 bales more than in the corresponding month last year, when no war was in progress. Italy took 200,028 bales in December, 1914, as against 80,621 bales the same month in 1913.

It is true Germany and France did not take as much of our cotton in this month as they did in the corresponding month for 1913, but the total of our exports of cotton for December, 1914, were approximately the same as for the same month in 1913.

During the month of January, 1915, our exports of cotton to the United Kingdom were 585,534, compared with 437,231 bales in January, 1914, or 148,303 bales in excess of the corresponding month in 1914. Italy took 217,982 bales in January, 1915, as against 54,824 bales in the same month last year. France took 70,901 bales, as compared with 54,824 bales in January, 1914. The total exports for January, 1915, exceed those of the same month in 1914 by 319,903 bales.

Exports of cotton for September, October, and November were small compared with a year ago, due, of course, to the shock to the business world by the unexpected declaration of war and the low prices which prevailed, during which time the farmer held as much of his crop as possible for better prices; but when about December 1 it was declared no longer conditional contraband prices began to advance and the normal exports began to move.

The exports in cottonseed oil in January, 1915, were 37,932,687 pounds, as compared to 30,374,725 pounds in January, 1914. The total exports of cottonseed oil for the seven months ending January, 1915, were 142,004,094 pounds, as compared to 109,986,202 pounds for seven months ending January, 1914.

Cotton will not be exported until some one buys it. Does anyone doubt that both Germany and England have all the cotton their necessities require, either on hand or purchased and stored in this country awaiting shipment from time to time as needed and facilities are offered, most of it bought months ago when the price was extremely low? At Galveston, New Orleans, Savannah, and other cotton-export points more cotton is being loaded for foreign markets than in many months before, and lately exports have far exceeded those of corresponding periods in former years. So it is difficult to believe that the farmer is suffering because his cotton can not be exported. If, as we believe, the cotton acreage of the South is to be reduced this year to a 10,000,000-bale crop, with that which the farmer may be able to hold, there is every reason to hope this year's price will be commensurate with its value when ready for market. So why attempt to get it out of his possession now?

We are told freight rates are abnormally high, which is true, because ships sailing from our ports to foreign ports carry a cargo, but when they arrive at their destination they must wait from three to six weeks before they can dock, and when a vessel does get a berth she finds it almost impossible to secure labor; when finally it is unloaded she returns to this country without any cargo, virtually empty, so that the freight on the outgoing cargo must pay the expense both ways and expenses and charges at the foreign ports and the increased insurance rates caused by the extraordinary risks assumed.

Mr. President, when this bill becomes a law, and the Government enters regularly into the shipping business, it must establish lines from our ports to some foreign ports, or else it must put vessels into what is commonly known as the tramp service. Suppose the Government should designate the port of New York as the point from which its ships shall sail—what will Boston say? Or suppose the port of Galveston is designated—what will Savannah say? Will each of the large ports of the United States not contend that ships owned and operated by the Government should sail from their respective ports?

The wise framers of our Constitution rendered it impossible for Congress to show any partiality between the States or between the ports of the different States. That instrument, the greatest ever framed by human intellect, provides, in Article I, section 9, paragraph 6, as follows:

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another.

How is Congress to establish a Government-owned steamship service and keep within this unqualified limitation upon its power?

If Congress should pass the ship-purchase bill, it will be both a physical and financial impossibility for the United States to carry out such a scheme with credit or success. The administration would have immediately to determine whether it was going to maintain a tramp service or a regular service. If it undertook to maintain a regular service, the Constitution of the United States would be ignored; if it undertook to maintain a tramp service, insolvency would speedily be its fate.

Those corporations and manufacturers who have large contracts to supply England, France, Russia, and other nations with foodstuffs and munitions of war at extremely high prices doubtless are suffering serious inconvenience because ships are lacking to carry their products across the sea, but this clamor for a shipping bill is temporary, and will cease when the war is over and hundreds of ships become available for our commerce that are withdrawn from service because of the war.

Something, Mr. President, should be done to build up and foster an adequate merchant marine flying the American flag to carry our increasing foreign exports and imports in American bottoms. It is a question which the American people must consider, but it is different from the one we now have before us. The time was when the American flag dominated the seas in the transportation of our own products; but, because of certain features of a protective tariff, the increased cost of ship construction in the United States compared with that in other countries, the difference in the standard of wages paid to seamen, the additional number of sailors and other employees required by our laws over that of other nations, and the difference in the registry of tonnage under our laws and that of other Governments, it became more profitable to construct, register, and operate ships under the flag of other nations, so that at present only a nominal part of our commerce is carried in American bottoms. Another decided advantage is due to the fact that other nations, to encourage foreign shipping, have been liberal with subsidies from the public treasury to lines engaged in international commerce. The American people have denounced such a policy as unwarranted favoritism, undemocratic, and repulsive to our system of political government. This subject demands our serious consideration, but it is only remotely related to the ship-purchase bill now before the Senate, which seeks to put the Government into the business of shipping and which, at the most, can affect only a very small per cent of our foreign trade.

Much has been said about the Shipping Trust, and intimations are made that Senators who oppose the bill are under its influence; but, sir, if there is a Shipping Trust that will escape the provisions of this bill, it could be none other than the trust which is engaged in our coastwise trade. Our laws specifically prohibit ships to engage in coastwise trade unless constructed in this country and flying the American flag. It has been stated in the course of this debate that 92 per cent of our coastwise trade, amounting to nearly 7,000,000 tons annually, according to investigations in the House of Representatives, is now controlled either by the railroads or ship combinations, and that the other 8 per cent, a very small portion of the coastwise commerce, is carried by independent ships, so why does not this bill permit the Government to engage in that character of shipping to afford relief to the people of the various States who desire cheaper means of transportation to markets in other States? Why should ships constructed abroad and purchased by the United States not engage in this trade, where a monopoly certainly exists?

Why should a Government ship, flying the flag, be denied the privilege of engaging in the coastwise trade? Why should a ship delivering a cargo at Galveston from a foreign port not be permitted to take on a cargo of cotton from Galveston or any southern port to Boston or Fall River? Why should a ship be compelled to go from Galveston to New York and leave a cargo of cotton seeking shipment to eastern markets? There is but one answer, and that is a Shipping Trust in coastwise trade is being protected and encouraged.

These ships are bought with the people's money, and they are denied the use of them. You provide in the bill that these ships can not carry freight or passengers from one port to another in the United States. The Senate voted down an amendment which I offered to admit these ships to the coastwise trade. You may explain to your people why you did it.

Under the provisions of this bill, if a Birmingham manufacturer desired to send his products to San Francisco by water on barges down the Warrior River to Mobile or New Orleans, and thence through the Panama Canal to San Francisco or Seattle, he would be told you can not enjoy the benefit of the reduced rates on Government ships, because the ship-purchase bill forbids these vessels engaging in coastwise trade, and therefore this Birmingham manufacturer would be compelled to send his shipment by rail or pay the higher tolls exacted by the coastwise Shipping Trust, although the people of Alabama have contributed to the purchase of these ships.

It is insisted, if this bill should pass, ocean freight rates will be greatly reduced. They must sail from some definite point, a regularly established line, or else they must be put into what is commonly called the tramp trade—and be it remembered that 80 per cent of the ocean commerce is carried in tramp vessels—that is to say, carried in vessels that go anywhere when a cargo is offered, but these Government-owned vessels must ply between designated points. Suppose a Government ship sails from Galveston to Liverpool with a cargo of cotton, what would New Orleans says? Would she not insist that she was being discriminated against; that the Government was furnishing Galveston cheaper transportation than New Orleans could get; and if New Orleans had a Government ship sailing with a cargo to Bremen, what would Mobile say? Would it not be a clear discrimination against Mobile, Pensacola, Savannah, or Norfolk?

If the Government owned all the boats that could be bought or built under the provisions of this bill, it would not exceed 3 per cent of the ocean carrying trade, and I am unable to see how vessels carrying 3 per cent of the commerce could materially affect or regulate the rates.

Mr. President, the conditions produced by the war in Europe can not be remedied by statute. The law of supply and demand can not be repealed. It is in operation in war and in peace. We are liable to become excited and seek remedies that do not cure or palliate and which are often worse than the disease. When the war in Europe broke out, insurance rates greatly increased. So Congress undertook to remedy the evil and passed a bill establishing a War Insurance Bureau, and authorized the Government to issue insurance policies on ships and their cargoes. What has been the result? In two days two ships insured by this bureau were sent to the bottom of the ocean. The loss will exceed $500,000. It may be that to-morrow or the next day two others will go to the bottom of the ocean and a million dollars be lost. Where is this money in excess of the premiums collected coming from except out of the Treasury of the United States? It is the people's money, collected in the form of taxes, and by the way we are constantly reminded there is a deficit in the Treasury and additional taxes and additional sources of revenue must be found. I inquire where is this business of insuring ships going to end?

It has been well said in the course of this discussion that half of the world is on fire, and we seldom read our daily papers without an apprehension that the Government of the United States may yet be drawn into its gulf.

The conditions recently imposed by Germany as a result of the use of neutral flags by the enemies, governing ships in the limits of a certain war zone, and the number of neutral ships recently destroyed while engaged in lawful commerce emphasizes the multiplied dangers of war on the part of this Nation if its ships were to encounter a mine or go down from an attack by a submarine.

Wisely and with commendable precaution the President has endeavored to hold this Nation in a position of absolute neutrality. No greater calamity could befall our people than to be drawn into this awful conflict. There are few Senators on either side of the Chamber who know from personal experience what war is or the awful horrors and fearful consequences that follow in its wake. I do. I have stood at the front on numerous battlefields and have seen its awful effect. The people of the South, where I come from, have not yet recovered from the disastrous results of the Civil War, and they never will. We want no more of it, and we applaud the patriotic efforts of President Wilson to steer clear of the conflicts that might lead to hostilities, but every ship we sail across the sea will increase the danger of a complication with one or more of the nations at war, and if by chance or design a ship the property of this Government, flying our flag, under the provisions of this bill, should run into a mine laid by a belligerent power and loss of life and property should follow, the flames of passion and anger thereby engendered would precipitate an outbreak as surely as did the destruction of the Maine in the harbor at Habana. If a ship owned and controlled by private interests should suffer similar misfortunes, there are a number of ways by established usage and custom and through diplomatic channels by which this Government could secure proper and satisfactory reparation, but such would not be the case with a ship owned and controlled by the Government itself.

No Senator in this Chamber, no citizen of this Republic, is more anxious that the United States shall continue to develop and grow in wealth and prosperity, to the end that our people, the farmer, the artisan, the manufacturer, the laborer, may have and enjoy for himself and his family the comforts of life, and that the products of our mines, farms, and factories may find a profitable market both at home and abroad; but I submit to the serious thought and sober judgment of this Senate, Is it not the better course of wisdom and statesmanship to forego, for the present at least, the adoption of this bill, which seeks to send into the war zone of the East our cargoes of freight, with all its attendant dangers of seizure and confiscation under the laws of warfare, take chances on the consequences of an insult to our flag and Nation in order to fill our coffers with gold? Rather would not the American people prefer to await the future, when the struggle is over and these people in their efforts to restore their loss in business, trade, and industry will demand of us that which we have to sell, than now to take the chance for the increased profits that will accrue directly to some and indirectly to others? The fate of these nations at war hangs in the balance, and rather than go down in defeat, so desperate will the struggle become, they will not hesitate to involve this country upon any pretext or reason. So why should we, for mercenary reasons alone, place ourselves in the path of danger?

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the fact our foreign shipping is paralyzed; that higher rates are exacted, naturally due to the conditions which obtain in the East; that insurance rates are excessive; and that the Government, by its superior authority, could in some measure under the provisions of this bill relieve the situation and break down to some extent the barriers between our products and a foreign market.

I violate no secret of the Democratic caucus when I state, in explanation of my position with respect to this bill, that I submitted an amendment, a copy of which I hold in my hand, and which, in my opinion as well as the opinion of those Democrats who agree with me, would limit it solely to an emergency measure, avoid danger of war or foreign complications that might grow out of the purchase of interned German ships or other ships belonging to belligerent powers, save the good faith of the Democratic Party, pledged against Government ownership, and provide a valuable and necessary auxiliary fleet for our Army and Navy. The caucus rejected the amendment which I now read:

Provided, That in making purchases of ships during the continuance of the pending European war no purchase shall be made in a way which will disturb the conditions of neutrality.

Provided further, That at the end of two years after the conclusion of peace in Europe the Government shall cease to operate said vessels and shall dispose of them either by transferring them to the service of the Army or the Navy, or both, so far as they may be adapted to these services, or by leasing or chartering them for private operation.

And, therefore, honestly entertaining the views I have attempted to explain, with the conviction expressed by many eminent lawyers that the bill violates the Constitution, I declined to be bound by the alleged attempt to compel me to repudiate a cardinal principle of the party, adopt an untried and unheard of experiment, and violate the Constitution of the United States, which I have sworn to support.

If this amendment, in substantially the form and substance as stated, is now acceptable to the advocates of this bill, I will support it.

Mr. President, it is urged that all Democratic Senators are bound to support the bill, but it appears to me the first thing to determine is it a Democratic measure; and I ask for no better method of deciding that question than the one laid down by the President himself, who has on different occasions very clearly defined what is a Democratic measure, and, incidentally, what is Democratic.

A few weeks ago, when the cotton situation in the South was most acute, a large delegation of cotton producers came to Washington and, accompanied by Senators and Representatives, called on the President to make a plea for relief. The President listened attentively and most respectfully to their appeal, and when the delegation had finished he said:

The gravity of the situation is very manifest, and I want you to know that I have been giving a great deal of attention to it, with the earnest desire to see some way by which the difficulties could be solved without committing the Government, in principle, to any action which would plague us in the future, because the danger of the present situation is that under the pressure of what appears to be necessity we should make some radical departure from sound economic practice which in future years we should very much regret. We have got to make great sacrifices not to make fundamental mistakes.

Again, when a delegation of ladies called at the White House to enlist the President in their cause, the President replied that the Baltimore platform was the voice of the party, and that only the principles of that platform could be recommended by him to Congress.

In his message vetoing the immigration bill he asked this pertinent question:

Has any political party ever avowed a policy of restriction in this fundamental matter, gone to the country on it, and been commissioned to control its legislation? Does this bill rest upon the conscious and universal assent and desire of the American people? I doubt it. It is because I doubt it I make bold to dissent from it. I am willing to abide by the verdict, but not until it has been rendered. Let the platform of parties speak out this policy and the people pronounce their wish. The matter is too fundamental to be settled otherwise.

It is a serious question to build or purchase and operate ships at public expense in direct competition with private capital—in short, to engage in private enterprise—something never seriously attempted by any Government on the face of the earth, when the same funds could more profitably be expended on works of internal improvement in our rivers and harbors or in the aid of the construction and maintenance of post roads, giving employment to people out of work, or in the creation of a rural-credits system to enable the farmer to obtain funds on long-time loans, at low rates of interest, with which to improve his farm, increase the quantity of his products, lift the mortgage, or pay for his home. Such use of the public funds will meet with the approval of the country rather than the construction of a railroad in Alaska, recently authorized at a cost of $40,000,000, or the purchase of ships that will serve no one except a small proportion of the people directly interested, and at the expense of all the people. Do something like this and you will keep faith with your promise to the people who transferred to the Democratic Party the reins of government; you will afford relief to those who need it and whose contributions have supplied the funds you propose to spend; you will avoid in a much greater degree the possibilities of war with some other nation and help to start moving the wheels of industry. Until the war is over there will be depression in certain avenues of trade, which no arbitrary legislation will relieve; but let us not abandon the old ship of state and ground it on the rocks of socialism and untried experiments.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, when the shipping bill was originally proposed it was announced that there were two purposes intended to be attained by it—one to provide for a temporary necessity and the other for building up a merchant marine. I understand that the conference report which has been presented and which is now on the table has eliminated the provision for the first of those two purposes; in other words, we have now before us a proposition to go into the shipping business permanently, the Government owning and operating lines of ships. It is to that particular phase of the question to which I wish to address myself this afternoon at considerable length.

Before doing so, however, I want to call to the attention of those in charge of the bill the fact that there are many Senators who had prepared themselves to discuss this measure before it was sent to conference two weeks ago. I have been handed a list of those Senators, and I wish to furnish the list to the RECORD, so that there may be no question about the desire of Senators on this side to discuss the bill, especially because it is probable that on account of the limited time all of them will not be able to make the comments which they desire. The list includes Senators BURTON, ROOT, LODGE, OLIVER, JONES, GALLINGER, PENROSE, TOWNSEND, SMOOT, LIPPITT, POINDEXTER, MCCUMBER, BRISTOW, CUMMINS, SHERMAN, CLAPP, SUTHERLAND, NELSON, STERLING, CLARK of Wyoming, WARREN, WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, and DU PONT.

Those Senators have informed me that they wish to discuss the bill from one to several hours each, and I think that statement would justify——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield for a question or a statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, after the statement that has been made by the Senator from Massachusetts, it is perfectly evident that it is impossible to pass the shipping bill at this session. I regret exceedingly the determined opposition to the measure. I am myself quite convinced that this bill, if enacted into law, would mean much to the prosperity of this country and for the welfare of our people. I believe it would meet not only a pressing emergency at this time, but one which is likely to continue for many months, and in addition to that it would form the foundation, certain and permanent, for an American merchant marine.

I will not now, of course, take the time to discuss the merits of the measure. I simply rise at this time to say that I appreciate that we have but few precious hours left in which to complete the work of this Congress. I realize that it is in the power of the opponents of this bill to defeat it, and, further, that to press it upon the attention of the Senate would be to deny the consideration of various important matters, such as conference reports, such as the bill which has just been laid aside, such as matters on the calendar, and other work which demands our attention. In these circumstances, Mr. President, I would not feel justified in continuing longer this struggle.

I ask at this point if I may, in concluding what I am saying, to be permitted to insert in the RECORD, without reading, some clippings, communications, and statements bearing upon the substantial phases of this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Journal of February 27, 1915.]

OCEAN FREIGHT RATES KEEP AT HIGH LEVELS—TONNAGE DEMAND STILL IN EXCESS OF FACILITIES—REGULAR LINES HAVE DISPOSED OF MOST OF MARCH FREIGHT ROOM—CHARTERING MARKET ACTIVE, WITH RATES TENDING HIGHER—NO PROMPT BOATS AVAILABLE—MORE STEAMERS WITHDRAWN FOR TROOP TRANSPORT.

With the chartering market continuing its upward trend and berth rates on the regular trans-Atlantic lines holding firm at the highest levels of the war, conditions in the ocean freight market still attest the shortage of tonnage and its inability to cope with the movement of freight from this country to Europe.

"There is an absolute lack of prompt steamers," said a prominent factor yesterday. "I have inquiries for 10 steamers for March loading which I can not fill, and while some steamers can be obtained for late March delivery, it means that the vessels will not begin loading until April. This condition means that freight rates have not by any means reached their crest, and that the probability of rates receding with the advent of summer is exceedingly dim."

The month of January was a spectacular period in the ocean freight market; rates for the movement of grain, cotton, provisions, timber, and general cargo advanced steadily. The upward movement continued in February, but about the 10th of the month the advance halted and rates began to hold firmly around the top figures. Since that time the market has been exceedingly active, but on the whole the upward movement has for a time stopped. The freight market yesterday bore little indications of recession in rates, but, on the other hand, there were few signs of further advances.

There are quite a few controlling factors in the ocean freight situation at the present moment, and it is apparent that the steamship lines are awaiting developments in Europe. The situation as outlined by various factors in the market may be summed up as follows:

1. The effect of the German war zone declaration on the movement of freight to the United Kingdom. The destruction of steamers, at present limited to English coastwise vessels, may extend to ocean steamers.

2. The demand for freight room is very active and the large steamship lines report having disposed of most of their space on the March sailings, with an active demand for room on April steamers.

3. The freight movement from Europe to this country is small and westbound voyages are productive of losses which must be made up by the eastbound movement.

4. The withdrawal of big trans-Atlantic steamers for use in transporting English troops to France has again diminished the facilities of the regular lines, and it is expected that more steamers will be requisitioned by England before the end of March, thus forcing the lines into the chartering market for more vessels.

5. Owners of tonnage available for charter are demanding high rates for single voyages as well as time charters, this being a factor in supporting the market and tending to force rates higher.

Conditions in the chartering market continue firm, with an active demand for tonnage, both prompt and forward. The demand for grain steamers continues heavy, fully 30 steamers being reported as chartered for March and April loading during the past week. To the Mediterranean 11 shillings has been freely paid for March grain steamers with demurrage guaranteed, while to Scandinavia 14 and 15 shillings has been given. To the United Kingdom steamers have been fixed at 8 shillings, but owners are demanding higher rates in view of the submarine hazard.

There is quite an active demand for cotton tonnage, with somewhat of a lull in the volume of chartering in the German cotton trade. The latter factor is due to the inability to secure American steamers and not to a falling off in the demand for vessels. American steamers now returning from Germany are being quickly rechartered to go back to Rotterdam and Bremen with second cotton cargoes.

One of the features of the chartering market is the demand for sail tonnage in the lumber trade and the South American business. Southern lumber mills have received large orders from England to supply timber and lumber. The closing of the Baltic has created a scarcity of lumber in England, while the demand for this commodity has increased owing to the need of building huts to house the many refugees from Belgium and France. Square-rigged tonnage from the South Atlantic ports to the United Kingdom are being paid 150 to 170 shillings for March and April loadings, while prompt boats are obtaining 180 shillings.

Fully 25 American schooners have been chartered to take lumber cargoes to South America. High rates are being paid for these vessels, which are expected to secure good return cargoes of hides from the River Plata and ore and coffee cargoes from the River Plata.

Long-distance lines, especially those to Australia and China, are in urgent need of tonnage, but the demands of owners who are content to keep their vessels in the grain trade has caused rates to advance to such levels that the steamship lines are unable to charter steamers. Owners of tonnage are willing to let out their vessels for the long-distance trades on time charter basis, but refuse all voyage offers. The net result of this situation is that while the volume of freight moving to Australia, China, Japan, and South America is not very large, the cost of obtaining steamers for these trades has placed freight rates on a very high level.

How berth rates have fluctuated since the beginning of the war is shown in the following compilation, giving the rates paid on August 1, just before the outbreak of the war. The figures demand on January 1, February 1, and yesterday:

VESSELS FOR SOUTH AMERICA—NEW ENGLAND SCHOONERS TO TAKE COAL TO BUENOS AIRES.

BOSTON, February 25.

The Boston five-masted schooners Margaret Haskell and Marcus L. Urann have been chartered for the South American trade at rates understood to be the highest ever paid sailing vessels for such voyages as they will undertake. Both will load coal at Norfolk for Buenos Aires, and will return from the Argentine port with cargoes of wool and hides. The Marcus L. Urann is to take 3,700 tons of coal, while the Margaret Haskell will carry 3,200 tons.

[From the Boston Post, February 18, 1915.]

BILLINGS ANSWERS CRITICS—COLLECTOR QUOTES FACTS TO SHOW THAT BOSTON NEEDS MORE SHIPS.

Edmund Billings, collector of the port, last night issued a statement in reply to those who have criticized his recent report to the Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that Boston is in need of more ships.

Mr. Billings gives facts and statistics in support of his contention.

He states that the exports of January, 1915, compared with those of January, 1914, have doubled, while ships cleared last month showed a decrease of 40 per cent from the corresponding month of 1914.

MR. BILLINGS'S STATEMENT.

Replying to an inquiry addressed to me by the Secretary of the Treasury some few days ago, asking for information with reference to the general situation of the movement of export freights, I sent the following telegram:

BOSTON, February 8, 1915.

WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

Telegram 6th instant received Saturday afternon after collector and principal officers had left. Replying to telegram of to-day, personal investigation made. Interviews with steamship agents, principal shippers, and forwarders show great lack of vessels in export trade. Those in service mostly slow and limited capacity. At present sailings are fixed and freight accepted only equal to the limited carrying capacity of vessels. Shippers are holding merchandise until booked. Bookings must be made from two to eight weeks in advance of sailing. This avoids the appearance of congestion in some instances. Many wharves filled to capacity with cargo awaiting shipments to Europe. Grain elevators filled with grain, and cars of grain on side tracks unable to be unloaded. Will be more congested unless relieved by increased service. Can give details if desired. Coastwise conditions normal.

E. BILLINGS, Collector.

This telegram was made public in Washington and has brought forth unfavorable comment in a portion of the Boston press, and has found its way into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, indicating that the writers regard this report which I have made to the Secretary of the Treasury respecting the existing shipping facilities at the port of Boston as matters of politics rather than of transportation.

My report was neither political nor haphazard. I have given careful consideration to the subject from the outbreak of the war until the present time, and have been in constant touch with all its phases. Before the Secretary of the Treasury had asked me to investigate the situation I had interviewed railroad officials, members of the chamber of commerce, steamship agents, proprietors of warehouses, and shippers, in addition to consulting the official records of the customhouse.

I desire to reiterate publicly my report to the Treasury Department, and to state in the strongest terms that this port is without sufficient vessels to meet the demands of its foreign commerce. In January, 1914, 27 steamships of a tonnage of 129,032 tons cleared for Europe; in January, 1915, there were cleared 22 steamships of a tonnage of 77,265 tons, a decrease of 51,767 tons, or 40 per cent.

SAYS EXPORTS DOUBLED.

In the meantime exports had doubled, having increased from $5,575,293 in January, 1914, to $11,234,818 in January, 1915. These are the official figures, and they constitute the best explanation of the conditions which I can offer. Efforts to minimize the unfortunate position of the port by general statements that there is no congestion are ridiculous.

While reports made to me by my subordinates have shown the docks in many cases to be congested, the real congestion lies in the fact that shipments of freight from interior points intended for exportation are refused by the railroads unless the shippers can first show that the shipments have been booked by the steamship companies.

Exporters are constantly being refused such bookings, and if a merchant or manufacturer is unable to deliver a foreign contract it makes little difference to him whether a railroad will not carry his goods or whether a steamship line can not. Three British lines were recently canvassed in connection with a consignment for the British Government, which was refused.

Freight rates on staple exports have doubled and doubled again during the war, and are still increasing. There may be a dozen reasons for this, as claimed by my critics, but the chief cause according to the principal steamship agents in this city, is a dearth of ships. In the recent past American commerce had been carried practically altogether in British and German vessels.

German shipping is wholly out of commission, and the British Government has requisitioned for war purposes one-third of the British tonnage. If American exports have doubled in the rest of the country as they have at Boston, how any man in the presence of these facts can say that we do not need more ships than we have at present passes my understanding.

NOT CONCERNED WITH POLITICS.

I am not at the moment concerned with the politics (if any) involved in this question, nor with the press or individuals who are apparently anxious to suppress or misrepresent the real situation for partisan ends.

I am, however, concerned to refuse the implication which is clearly indicated in the news notices referred to, that the collector of this district is either distorting the facts or is ignorant of the actual conditions which prevail, and is thereby injuring the best interests of the port.

Whether the statement of conditions which I have given indicates more or less congestion than may have existed at some previous period in our history is beside the question, and I am not attempting to pass upon that, neither do I draw any conclusions as to what should or should not be done to relieve this situation.

That there is congestion here, and much more than is apparent to the casual observer, which is detrimental to the business interests, is plain to me and is, I believe, clearly shown in this statement, which can be verified by any man or group of men who honestly desire to know actual conditions and are not primarily interested to prove the contrary.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing letter, reply to a list of questions sent out by a Mr. John H. Law, of Columbus, Ohio. I imagine these questions are for the purpose of getting answers that will strengthen the opponents of the ship-purchase bill, but he asked the wrong ones.

CHARLESTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Charleston, S. C., February 24, 1915.

Mr. JOHN H. LAW,
27½ East Twelfth Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 18th instant, in which you ask several questions, has been received and noted. I will answer the questions in the order they appear in the letter:

1. Are there cargoes of cotton being held up by the scarcity of ships?

Answer. We have exported since August 1 only 175,449 bales, against 375,792 same period 1913–14. Very little cotton was shipped prior to the middle of December, due to the fact that we could not get ships to carry it. The cotton exporters are not finding it as difficult to get ships now as they did 90 days ago, provided they are willing to pay the price. If we had more ships it would be impossible for the shipowners to charge the rate of freight they are getting now. The rate to Bremen, $15; normal rate, $2 to $2.50 per bale—nearly 700 per cent advance.

2. Are the goods consigned to neutral countries being delayed by the present emergency?

Answer. Cotton, cottonseed-meal cake, and lumber are about the only commodities exported through this port in volume. There is a limited quantity of cottonseed-meal cake exported and we have not experienced any serious delay. The exportation of lumber has ceased. Lumber can not pay the high rate of freight.

3. Are owners using the war situation as an excuse for advancing rates?

Answer. They are, without doubt, using the war situation as an excuse for advancing the rate, due to the fact that there are so few ships available. I am satisfied if we had the usual number of ships it would be impossible for the shipowners to charge the high rate of freight they are charging now. The rate to Liverpool is between $6 and $7 per bale on cotton. The normal rate is about $1.25 and $1.50; nearly 500 per cent advance. One of the largest exporters stated the reason they are able to get such a high rate, even to Liverpool, is because so many English ships have been taken out of commercial use for the use of the war.

Germany has been paying from 16½ to 20 cents per pound for cotton for some months, but the producer has not been able to get one penny benefit from the high prices. The producer of the cotton is being paid 7½ cents per pound at his local railroad station; the railroad rate to the port will average about one-half cent per pound, which will make the cost of the cotton delivered in the port 8 cents. The exporter has to pay in advance 3 cents per pound, making total of 11 cents, and it will probably cost him in the way of insurance, exchange, etc., 1½ cents per pound (this is a full allowance), which makes total cost to the exporter of about 12½ cents per pound. He sells the cotton in Germany at 18 cents, which will leave 5½ cents per pound, or $27.50 per bale, absorbed somewhere. Some of us feel if we had sufficient ships it would be impossible for anyone to absorb $27.50 per bale between the farm and the German ports. Two hundred thousand bales of cotton could be secured at a fair price for every ship that carries 10,000 bales until Germany's wants are supplied; therefore, if we had the ships to carry the 200,000 bales, the man or men who absorb the $27.50 per bale would have to divide it with the producer to get the cotton.

It is said by many that the consumer pays the freight. It is true, except the raw material produced by the farmer. The farmer has to eggs at the same price, 30 cents. The reason the farmer has to pay the freight on what he consumes. If the farmer ships a crate of eggs to a market, the commission merchant sells them, for example, say, 30 cents per dozen; the commission merchant remits the proceeds of the sale, less his commission and freight charges. If the farmer brings eggs to market on his wagon, the commission merchant will sell the eggs at the same price, 30 cents. The reason the farmer has to pay the freight on what he produces is because the price of that commodity is fixed in the market to which he ships it.

The fact that we have not sufficient bottoms to move the cotton crop in this section has cost our farmers an enormous amount, which means that the retailer, the jobber, the manufacturer has to bear his proportion of the burden. It goes beyond that; every manufacturer throughout the entire country is bearing part of the burden. The cotton farmer buys everything he uses, except a little corn and meat. When a farmer goes into his field to plow, what he wears, the farming implements, and the gear on the mule, represents 37 different factories. His household effects represent 32 more, making a total of 69 factories. Give him $20 per bale more for his cotton than he is getting now and every factory in the United States will feel the effect of it. What the farmer receives for his products is like the leaven in the loaf—it permeates the whole loaf. The money he gets permeates every industry in the United States.

If you can do anything to aid in getting the ship-purchase bill through the United States Senate you will be doing every industry in the United States a service, as well as the cotton producer.

Yours, very truly,

B. F. MCLEOD, President.

SHIPPING FACILITIES BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND NEW ZEALAND.

[From American Consul General (signed) J. I. Brittain, Auckland, New Zealand, Jan. 14, 1915.]

Endeavoring to increase our export trade to New Zealand is very discouraging under present conditions. An important importer of American merchandise, who recently placed large orders in New York for several lines of merchandise for the Auckland market, has within the past two weeks received two cablegrams informing him that it will be impossible to ship the merchandise, as there is no available cargo space. To cap the climax, he received a third telegram telling him to submit no orders until further advised, as there are no available ships. A letter received at this consulate general from the Pacific coast tells virtually the same story.

Another importer says a consignment arrived via the Panama Canal over two weeks ago, but owing to the documents having been sent through London instead of direct, he has not yet been able to obtain delivery of the goods.

There are already sufficient difficulties to contend against in selling American merchandise in New Zealand during the war, but when the merchandise is once sold it is doubly discouraging to find our orders turned down by the American manufacturer and exporter because there are no available ships.

To make the situation still more discouraging, another leading importer of American merchandise received a telegram from his New York representative January 9 saying that freight rates from American to New Zealand ports would be substantially increased. The minimum for heavy case goods is to be increased from 32s. 6d. ($7.90) to 55s. ($13.38) a ton, and the maximum from 62s. 6d. ($15.19) to 105s. ($25.54) a ton. The increase since the war commenced is from 60 per cent to 67½ per cent.

Regardless of the slight feeling against merchandise other than British and the preferential tariff in favor of the British Empire, the United States could largely increase her exports in New Zealand if it were possible to ship in American bottoms instead of being obliged to let our apples rot in the orchard because Uncle Sam has no market wagon of his own and his neighbor is busy marketing his own crops by his own wagons.

DEAR SIR: The shipping bill now pending before Congress, providing for the reestablishment of an American merchant marine, was discussed at the regular weekly meeting of our board of directors last Tuesday, and it was unanimously indorsed by this body.

We realize the importance of the passage of this bill, and write to offer our cooperation in any way possible.

Hon. JOSEPH P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to President Wilson, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are traffic representatives for a number of industrial concerns who make export shipments to foreign countries and also ship by water between Atlantic and Pacific coast points.

Since the beginning of hostilities in Europe the water rates have increased so that it has made it impossible for our clients to continue shipping to foreign ports or between American ports.

Take as an example: The rate on steel fence posts, a commodity which loads 50 pounds to the cubic foot and is not liable to damage, the rates have been increased more than 50 per cent. The steamer lines are now asking $14 per ton from New York to Buenos Aires. The action taken by the steamship lines has certainly throttled American commerce, and we will be pleased for you to place our communication in the proper hands with a view of having some way devised whereby more reasonable charges will be applied to this traffic.

Thanking you for your attention in the premises, we are,

Yours, very truly,

B. ROBESON,
Vice President and Manager.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose an interesting letter received from Mr. L. P. Tolman, of Seattle, under date of February 15, together with copy of letter sent by him on January 18 to the Seattle port commission. It is commended to your thoughtful reading.

SEATTLE, February 15, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As emphasizing our present lack of shipping facilities between Atlantic and Pacific coast ports I attach copy of my letter to the Seattle port commission under date of January 18.

During the discussion which this letter brought about the fact was emphasized that navigation laws are not favorable to American shippers and should be revised. However, you are doubtless familiar with the situation in this respect.

Matter of regulation was also discussed, although this is apparently a disputed question, on which there is a difference of opinion.

Am referring this letter to you, as it serves to emphasize the need of better shipping facilities between the Atlantic coast and the Northwest.

Respectfully, yours,

L. P. TOLMAN.

JANUARY 18, 1915.

SEATTLE PORT COMMISSION,
Central Building, Seattle, Wash.

GENTLEMEN: At the request of one of your members, I wish to call your attention to the unsatisfactory condition existing with reference to water transportation between Atlantic and Pacific coast ports.

Briefly, the most serious objection is the uncertainty as to how long a given rate will remain in effect and the refusal of protection over a specified rate for a definite and reasonable time, particularly with material such as structural steel which has to be fabricated after order is received.

Further, the apparent lack of space in proportion to actual requirements and the difficulty of arranging to make prompt shipments by water present another serious difficulty which deserves your earnest consideration.

It is also a fact, doubtless well known to you, that water rates have been given decisive advances during the last 60 days. I mention this as it has a direct relation to the lack of shipping accommodations. However, matter of rates in themselves is not the main question at issue.

So far as the port of Seattle is concerned, and as regards water traffic between the two coasts, the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. may be said to dominate the situation, being the largest of the steamship companies regularly handling freight between the East and West coasts. This company is able, in a large measure, to control rates and to stipulate terms to shippers.

In order to emphasize the unsatisfactory workings under the present system, I have been asked to bring to your attention a recent transaction which I handled for the Phoenix Iron Co., Phoenixville, Pa. One of the representative Seattle concerns placed an order with me on January 6 for about 350 tons of structural steel, based on proposal submitted to them under date of December 21. The next day I called on the acting agent here of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. in order to reserve space, the desire being to begin shipping in three or four weeks. The gentleman representing the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. treated my request with consideration and wrote their New York office in order to arrange for shipment of this material. In the meantime it developed that the freight rate had just been increased, the advanced rate to go into effect January 9. I promptly asked the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. to protect us by allowing us rate originally quoted us and used as a basis in this transaction. We had made a delivered price, as is customary, in quoting on structural steel. Not being able to secure promise of protection at this end, I immediately wired the Phoenix Iron Co. to take the matter up with the traffic manager of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. at New York. However, it was found to be impossible to secure this protection or any promise that the rate would not be still further advanced before shipment of this order could be completed; moreover, the steamship company stated that they would be unable to handle shipment of this material before the latter part of February, and there was considerable uncertainty in regard to any definite time of shipment.

When I received wire from the Phoenix Iron Co. apprising me of the situation I immediately took the matter up with other steamship lines and shipping brokers, searching the transportation field thoroughly, both here and at San Francisco, with the result that no relief was to be had, most of the other lines declining to make any rate on account of having all the freight they could take care of for a reasonable time. As illustration of this Sudden & Christenson Steamship Line, San Francisco, wired me as follows:

"Replying to your night letter 8th, we can not give you rate and shipping dates asked for at present, as we have nothing now scheduled to leave New York on which space has not already been taken. Will be glad to advise you later if we can care for this business."

On account of all of this uncertainty the Phoenix Iron Co. finally withdrew their proposition, and we therefore lost the business entirely on account of transportation difficulties.

The purpose of submitting this report to you is twofold:

First: To emphasize that while we now have well-equipped harbor facilities, yet comparatively few steamship lines running between Atlantic and Pacific coasts avail themselves of this port, with the result that traffic with the few lines which do make Seattle is badly congested. This would seem to urge the need of making further traffic arrangements.

Second. Present steamship lines make any rates they see fit and lay down their own terms to shippers. Present conditions seem to warrant the conviction that steamship lines should be brought under some form of regulation in a similar manner as the railroads, so that the shippers will not be subjected to the uncertainty over rates, as at present. In this connection would call your attention to a bill entitled "proposed regulation of carriers by water," which has been drawn up by one of the committees of the House of Representatives. I believe Mr. W. A. Mears, of the transportation bureau of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, is familiar with this proposed legislation.

I have submitted the general lines of this report to a number of practical transportation men, and I believe in the main they agree with me that the time is ripe for action of some kind. If the various commercial bodies, such as the chamber of commerce, commercial club, transportation club, and the Seattle Port Commission could get together and agree on a plan of action, much good could doubtless be accomplished.

Respectfully submitted.

L. P. TOLMAN.

MEMORANDUM ON THE SHIP-PURCHASE BILL.

I. The root principle of the ship-purchase bill, as contrasted with the various subsidy schemes favored by influential chambers of commerce and large financial interests, is that international sea transportation, like interstate rail transportation, tends to become, under modern conditions, a "natural monopoly"; it is therefore absolutely necessary that public authority shall begin to have a voice in this matter.

"Natural monopolies" are social services that are of such a character, in the nature of things, that the failure to put them under public control destroys liberty and free competition in all other services.

That international sea transportation is of this character has been proved by recent and exhaustive investigations of shipping rings and marine freight rates on the part of a British royal commission (report published in 1909) and of the United States House of Representatives (Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries acting under resolution of the House passed in February and June, 1914, report published in four volumes).

In both these reports it is made clear: First, that unregulated competition leads to ruinous rate wars and general demoralization, tending to monopoly of trade by the largest shippers; second, that the warring steamship factions are obliged to come together or else leave the whole field to the most powerful carrier engaged in the conflict; third, that the shipping rings thus formed are grossly unsatisfactory from the point of view of political science and public service.

To remedy this state of affairs the British royal commission proposes the cartelization of shippers and merchants, in order that they may present a united front to the shipping rings. (Report of Royal Commission on Shipping Rings, vol. 1, p. 85.)

The remedy proposed by the committee of Congress is "that navigation companies, firms, or lines engaged in the foreign trade of the United States be brought under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission as regards the regulation of rates, the approval of contracts entered into with other water carriers, with shippers, or with American railroads." (Report, vol. 4, p. 419.)

Now the pending ship bill is addressed to the needs of a pressing emergency. But it is foolish to abstract that emergency from the facts and experiences of ordinary commercial life. The emergency should be met with a measure that has solid and permanent validity.

A ship-subsidy bill might be cheaper than the present measure, or might not. But subsidies would only strengthen the private interests that stand opposed to economic law and order on the seas.

The ship-purchase bill takes the only summary and practical course. It introduces a principle of order into the chaos of oversea traffic—the principle of public control—exercised as a matter of public right.

II. Exorbitant freight rates on staple commodities—wheat, cotton, etc.—shipped from the United States to Europe, are, in the main, paid not by Europe but by the people of the United States.

This follows from the long-standing and unchanged fact that such commodities are bought and sold at a world price in a world market, and this market centers in Liverpool or elsewhere in Europe. It does not center in the United States.

The home price of these commodities is about what the combined trans-Atlantic carriers may choose to make it.

The cash price—for domestic consumption as well as for export—tends to rise as the freights fall, and to fall as the freights rise.

But the price for future delivery, which reacts upon and dominates the cash price, breaks loose from the natural law of supply and demands, and tends to rise indefinitely, in proportion to the pressure and power of the transportation monopoly and the monopoly of credit.

Thus it comes to pass that the shipping ring can at one and the same moment filch the fair profits of the farmers and give the citizens G-cent bread.

The Senate will not dare reject the ship-purchase bill after the fact has been advertised to the people—the fact, to wit, that those who oppose this bill are the assistants of the food forestallers.

Make it a bread question and it will be settled right.

SHIPPING PROFITS.

Particulars of dividend payments of some of the best-known steamship lines. These particulars are taken from the yearbook (1910 edition) of the London Stock Exchange.

Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. (White Star Line): Paid 10 per cent in 1908; paid 20 per cent in 1909; paid 30 per cent in 1910; paid 60 per cent in 1911; paid 30 per cent in 1912 (this was an interim dividend and nothing further was paid that year on account of the loss of the Titanic); paid 65 per cent in 1913. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £3,890,669, or over $19,000,000.

Cunard Line: Paid 10 per cent in 1912–13. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £1,242,154, or over $6,000,000.

Orient Steam Navigation Co.: Paid 5 per cent and 50 per cent bonus in 1911–12; paid 5 per cent and 50 per cent bonus in 1912–13. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £525,765, or over $2,500,000, after deducting bonuses.

Peninsular & Orient Steam Navigation Co.: Paid 13 per cent each year for 23 years ending 1912–13; paid 15 per cent in 1913–14. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £1,892,234, or over $9,000,000.

Anchor Line: Paid 20 per cent in 1912–13; paid 20 per cent in 1913–14. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £386,962, or about $1,900,000.

Clan Line: Paid 15 per cent and 50 per cent bonus in 1913. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £622,898, or over $3,000,000, after deducting bonus.

Strick Line: Paid 10 per cent regularly since inception of the company in 1905, in addition to regular dividend; paid 500 per cent cash bonus which the stockholders reinvested in the increased stock of the company. In 1913, in addition to regular dividend, paid 50 per cent cash bonus which the stockholders also reinvested in the further increased stock of the company. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £541,781, or over $2,600,000, after deducting bonus.

Furness, Withy & Co.: Paid 10 per cent 1911 to 1914, inclusive. This company has reserves and surplus amounting to £1,131,329, or over $5,000,000.

Ellerman Lines: Paid 13 per cent in 1911; paid 12 per cent in 1912; paid 22 per cent for 21 months ending September, and 100 per cent bonus.

Many steamship lines refuse to give out reports of their earnings—perhaps we should not blame them for wishing to conceal such earnings as here shown—and such notations as "Company is a private concern and no information is obtainable," or "Reports are not issued to the public," frequently appear in the London Stock Exchange Year Book.

The yearbook shows that in 1912 the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. paid for the entire capital stock of the Union Castle Line £32 10s. (about $160) per share, the par value of that stock being £10 (less than $50) per share; and they paid to Donald, Currie & Co., the former owners of the Union Castle Line, £700,000 (nearly $3,500,000) not to compete with them for 10 years.

It should be borne in mind that these dividends, large as they are, represent only a conservative portion of the net earnings of the various lines. This is proved by the large reserves and surpluses shown and the huge bonuses distributed from time to time.

As far back as the year 1912, Shipping Illustrated (New York), in its issue of September 21, 1912, referred to the earnings of "tramp" and other cargo steamers, as follows:

"At present it is the easiest thing in the world for cargo steamers of any description to make large profits of 40 per cent on present freights."

This, it should be noted, was in 1912, when the present war was not ever dreamed of. Steamer earnings have continued to increase right up to the outbreak of the war, and at the present time it is possible for steamers to earn 500 per cent net per annum on their full value.

United Fruit had surplus in 1913 of $16,284,212, after paying extra dividends of 10 per cent in 1908, 1909, 1910, in addition to regular dividend of 8 per cent.

We have no American steamship companies in foreign trade except the American Line of the International Mercantile Marine (four ships) and an occasional ship on the Pacific, and records of their earnings are not readily available, but that line receives a subsidy from the United States of about $735,000 a year for its four boats.

The United Fruit Co. is owned principally in the United States, and their earnings are so large that when they increased their stock twice recently they were able to obtain 100 per cent premium on first occasion and 50 per cent on second occasion.

APROPOS EDITORIAL IN BOSTON HERALD.

The 24,538 vessels stated to compose the coastwise American merchant marine consist for the most part of catboats, catamarans, cutters, luggers, barges, yawls, yachts, fishing boats, etc., ranging as low as 5 tons register and carrying a crew of one person. It also includes all such vessels on all of the navigable waters of the United States, including lakes, bays, rivers, etc. The total tonnage of all of the above, including the large steamers owned by the railroads and combinations, is stated to be 6,852,536 tons. The utter absurdity of these figures is seen when I tell you that the total merchant marine of Great Britain is, in round figures, only 10,000 vessels, with a total tonnage of about 20,000,000 tons, and of Germany only 2,000 vessels, with a total tonnage of about 5,000,000 tons. Yet the Boston Herald makes a long-winded editorial attack on the shipping bill based on the ridiculous proposition that the 24,000 catboats, etc., of a few tons burden, scattered over the vast domain of the United States and Alaska, is an answer to the claim made that the railroads and shipping combinations control about 90 per cent of the real commercial freight and passenger transportation of our coastwise trade.

Mr. FLETCHER. Now, Mr. President, I wish to end this matter in order that the business of the Senate may proceed regularly and that we may finish our work by withdrawing the motion, which I shall not again renew.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the motion of the senior Senator from Florida has been withdrawn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, I insist upon the regular order, which is the claims bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I have the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. That, however, does not prevent the Chair from recognizing the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to have the omnibus claims bill laid before the Senate. I realize the Senator can speak to that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 8846)— making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section No. 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I yielded the floor only while the claims bill was laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That may have been in the mind's eye of the Senator, but it was not in that of the Chair.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thought that was the understainding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when the shipping bill was sent by the Senate to a committee of conference on February 18——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the claims bill now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The claims bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Everyone knew that it has been sentenced to death by strangulation. The agreement of which that order was the result was reached by a parliamentary process which is wholly inconsistent with the due and orderly conduct of modern legislative demands. Six weeks ago a minority of the Senate, composed in part of men possessing good bodily health, a large vocabulary, loaded for endless repetition, versed in the elements of orthography, etymology, syntax, and prosody, and familiar with fixed and applied science, history, the development of the talking machine, the theory of the fourth dimension, the disputations of the schoolmen, the philosophy of the ancients, and the progress of civilization, determined to elaborate their stores of information and to exhibit their powers of physical endurance by exhausting the short session of the Senate in order to defeat this great and much-needed measure of legislation. Their verbal bombardment has been successful. The majority was forced to surrender to government by obstruction, and the Sixty-third Congress will expire by limitation with the shipping combine in full possession of its monopoly at home and overseas, subject only to the disturbing pronouncements of the German and British Empires. Foreign commerce now available to us through the conflict of commercial competitors will probably beckon to us in vain. Our hands and feet have been tied by talk. The fingers of monoply, thanks to the rules of the Senate, are closed upon the throat of the Government, while its agencies pick the pockets of our producers. The minority rules by power of speech, and the Stars and Stripes are forbidden the seas until they shall appear with the flag of subsidy floating above them. Gentlemen of the minority, I salute you. Who shall have the temerity to assert in your presence that the people rule, that the majority governs, that the popular expression is the public will? These are lies. The Senate rules of procedure, contrived more than a century ago, and cunningly adapted to the needs of privilege, are thicker than the loins of the people. They are the submarines of intrenched interest. Their ammunition is exhaustless. Their explosive force is lung power and their projectiles the English lexicons. These agencies can be operated by anyone at any time and at all ranges. No enemy, large or small, can demolish them or survive their deadly and far-reaching consequences. Age has not impaired their vigor. On the contrary, it is declared to be the real secret of their effectiveness. Antiquity has petrified them into everlasting inflexibility. The Government may be shaken to its foundations by some vast social or political upheaval, but the Senate rules must remain undisturbed and uninjured.

Such, at least, is the assurance given us. True, we are admonished that the rules are subject to change, but since their invincible batteries may be turned as well against those who dare to lay the hand of profanation upon them as against those who would seek to use the powers of Government to serve the public need, it is evident that no change can be effected save by unanimous consent. Hence we can act only as a gracious minority may permit and under such conditions as the wisdom or the caprice of its members may impose. And those of us who feel the chafing of the chain, who would rebel against an intolerable and un-American situation and who declare their abhorrence of it, who would make war against it, who would demand a reformation in our procedure and who strive to do so, are able to invoke nothing more serious than a commiserating glance or an occasional word which mingles pity with contempt. And I am forced to admit that such conduct finds justification in the singular but almost universal influence which this code of rules seems sooner or later to exert over the minds and hearts of those who, at the outset, abhor them. Pope must have had something like this in mind when he said that—

> Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
> As to be hated needs but to be seen;
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Why, Mr. President, we need not delve farther into the records of this Senate than 1893 to find abundant material in condemnation of the vicious and indefensible practice of unlimited debate from the lips of men some of whom are still honored Members of the Senate. At least two distinguished Senators upon the minority side and identified with the filibuster just ended have abjured the early faith that was in them and have detailed the incidents of their later conversion from themselves. That of Saul at Damascus was a glacial movement compared to the swift transformation which the views of these Senators underwent when the Sherman silver law no longer disturbed their slumbers nor vexed their constituents. During the long and tedious filibuster over that measure, in 1893, unlimited debate was to their eyes a painted Jezebel, arrayed in the flaunting colors that never change. These distinguished gentlemen were young and lusty then, and they turned their faces away from her. They said, "Go to, thou brazen jade, we will have none of thee," and they passed by on the other side.

But they looked again, and she smiled. And they looked the third time, and she held their gaze. And she drew them toward her, and they have not again departed from her presence. And for her sake they abjured themselves, and have since worn her colors and been her champions. One surrendered without compunction; the other was beguiled by the music of a captive Democrat. Now she is again assailed, and she summons them to her defense. And they respond with more than the alacrity of youth. They are old now, but there is still that subtle something in the bedizened priestess of unlimited debate which wakens tender memories and kindles the smoldering embers of a once virile and vigorous manhood. They eagerly testified to their apostasy and proved it by the zeal with which they advocate what they once condemned. They would fain cover the mistakes of impulsive youth with the mantle of oblivion. For they have years of usefulness before them which should not be dimmed or weakened by things said when the judgment was immature.

Age o'er their brows has wrinkles flung,
But their hearts, their hearts are ever young.

But, Mr. President, we can not surrender duty to the impulses of respect and affection. We must inform the people of the earlier view of our elder statesmen upon this important subject and quote the defenders of this despotic system against themselves. And, if I mistake not, the echoes of the early protests of these distinguished Senators, coming fresh from their minds and voicing just and indignant condemnation of a practice which is as damnable as the theory of divine right, will be heard much farther than the loudest recantation which they may sound upon the floor of the Senate.

Yet I have been assured that I, with others of my present faith, will surrender to the potential charms of this ancient practice and become its loyal votary; for it is said that no man has ever scoffed at it who did not remain to defend it. But I have faith that those now resolved that the events of this session shall not be repeated save in opposition to a change which must be made will not be dismayed by such a prophecy. For they believe that representative government becomes a mockery when unlimited discussion can be utilized to prevent a ballot upon any legislation which may be obnoxious to half a score of Senators. Such a power is despotic, inhuman, and indefensible in a self-governing community.

Joshua, as the servant of the Lord, commanded the sun to stand still, and the sun did not go down for a whole day. The luster of his deed is dimmed by that of the Senator from Utah, the high priest of the minority. He submerged the legislative machinery of a hundred millions of people in a torrent of language and paralyzed all its functions for six weeks. Joshua's feat exhausted his capacity. The Senator from Utah can respond to an encore whenever privilege demands it.

On February 18 more than 225 bills were upon the Senate Calendar; the greater part of them were there when the verbal current was turned on. All of these were important, a number of them tremendously so. I need only mention the supply bills, the water power, omnibus claims, convict labor, land, and safety at sea bills. Some of these measures are demanded by every consideration of public policy and welfare. Nearly all of them are opposed in some direction. Unless acted upon before March 4 they must die. The shipping bill has been used as a screen behind which nearly all save the supply bills have been doomed to certain death, and some of these are in extremis. They have been deliberately butchered upon the altar of obstruction under the eyes of a helpless majority. The blood of our slaughtered legislative offspring is sprinkled into our very faces as we are taunted by the assurance that the rules which make such things possible are as the laws of the Medes and Persians.

Mr. President, the power of unlimited debate, like every other unrestrained power, is always abused until it becomes intolerable. Every parliamentary body of any consequence in Christendom, with the possible exception of the Canadian House of Commons, save the Senate of the United States, has rebelled against its tyranny and turned upon and crushed it.

When this session ends its unfinished business disappears. It must be done over again after the next session begins if it is to become effective. New subjects of legislation and changes in existing laws made necessary by experience must take their chances with this legacy of the filibuster. And they are all subject to its reappearance whenever the minority shall invoke it. Senators, the filibuster must go.

Curiously enough, senatorial obstructionists who have talked the longest were the loudest in their condemnation of the caucus. All of them joined in the chorus of disapproval. Indeed, it would appear that a test of fidelity to the filibuster is eternal hostility to the caucus. It would seem that the obstructionist instinctively recognizes the caucus as the natural enemy of the filibuster. If this be true, and I think it is, the caucus needs no other defense, for in this fact it finds full vindication.

Mr. President, I shall enter at this time into no defense of the caucus. I shall content myself with the reiteration of my belief in its necessity and its efficiency. Its value has been demonstrated in the work of the Sixty-third Congress. It presents and emphasizes the will of the majority as it can be done in no other way. Its political enemies pay it the tribute of their respect by adopting its methods, disguised under the more alluring names of "conferences" and "consultations." They whisper in groups and flock in bunches. They reach the same ends by the use of the same means, then rail at those whose methods they adopt. They swallow the conference camel without winking an eye, but strain at the caucus gnat by pretending that their stomachs reject it. The sincere and candid opponents of the caucus are equally averse to conferences. These get nowhere. Without cohesion or unity of purpose they either drift with the organized majority or voice vain protests against its purpose and policy. The caucus discusses and deliberates. It listens and determines after every man is heard. Its decision represents the composite view of all its members. Its ultimate minorities are nearly always negligible. The mysterious and myopic influence with which the terrible two-thirds is invested is but the hobgoblin of timid or perverted imaginations. If it be wrong for the majority of a party to shape its policies and determine its action, then is it much more wrong to enact or defeat any measure in the Senate by a mere majority of its members?

Mr. President, no task committed to the hands of a body of men can be performed without community of action. This presupposes organization of some sort. The more effective this is the easier the task becomes and generally the better it is accomplished. The body itself, whatever it may be, organizes as a matter of course. If legislative, the organization is effected by the majority of its members. These control and are therefore responsible for it.

And it is as natural as it is necessary that the majority and minority establish and maintain each its own organization within the larger one. Congress has done this from the beginning. The Senate has its majority and minority conference rooms. Each division has its chairman and secretary, its rules and regulations. Each meets and deliberates in secret. None save its own members may be present or take part in the proceedings. Because one of these bodies has prescribed perfectly reasonable conditions which bind all, thereby making its work speedy and its responsibilities effective, the members of the other condemn its procedure with a vehemence and denunciation having all the earmarks of a sincerity which nevertheless is only simulated. Yet the loudest of the protestants pay tribute to the policy of their own organization by the display of a unanimity in action which many of the Democratic caucus members might well emulate.

Mr. President, I would rather be the member of a caucus, submit my views to it, participate in passing upon those of my associates and standing by the final pronouncement of two-thirds of all its members, given after full and exhaustive discussion, than to stand alone upon the firing line, or at best stand with others between whom and myself there is nothing beyond allegiance to the same political party. We are a Government of parties, and individuals are potent only as they cooperate with their fellows upon a common faith for the attainment of a common purpose.

Time was, and not long since, if prominent Republican Senators are to be credited, when the ipse dixit of one man determined the conduct of this body. He was the caucus, the party, and the majority. Conferences were, of course, useless then, as they will be again should the Republican Party return to power, for they will bring their old systems with them. We may not reproach them for surrendering to two-thirds of themselves, for they will either accept or submit to the domination of a single personality. We shall not abandon our caucus, gentlemen, much as such a course would please you. In union there is strength. With its aid we have during the last two years wiped out many abuses, changed many oppressive and antiquated statutes, and made a record whose splendid contrast with your own the people recognize and appreciate.

You abhor the caucus. But the President's leadership is your chief abomination. You can not without grievous apprehension of grave consequences to American liberty bear to witness the Chief Executive in the rôle of a party chieftain. But this, too, will go on, however deeply you may resent it, and the Republic will go on as well. A President who does not lead is a President who can not lead. A President who leads, and leads in obedience to the people's will, performs the highest and the noblest duty which can be imposed upon an American citizen. He is the representative of all the people. He is elected by their votes. He must speak for and of them. Upon his head falls all our mistakes and his own. To him is awarded the merit of our achievements and his own. The great Presidents were leaders who spoke for all, who impressed their personality upon the events of their times, who recommended and promoted necessary legislation, who bore their part of the heat and the burden. Those who failed, failed because they could not lead, because they dared not lead, or because they led in wrong directions. Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, Roosevelt, Wilson—these were leaders who never quailed before opposition nor heeded the protests of those apprehensive souls who cried out lest somewhere the even balance between the Executive and the Congress might be disturbed.

The President is a part of the legislative division. To become effective laws require his approval or a two-thirds majority of both Houses after veto. He must advise the Congress upon matters of public concern, and recommend legislation which seems to him expedient or essential. The Executive who contents himself with mere suggestion, leaving Congress to pursue its own way thereafter, may please those sensitive Senators who see in his every statement an invasion of their prerogative, but his peace of mind will be rudely disturbed by those whose votes lifted him into the White House. A genial and well-beloved President a few years ago convened the Congress in special session and in a short message suggested a revision of the tariff. He then serenely pursued the even tenor of his way, not daring or caring to use either his influence or his voice toward making his counsels effective. The great protected interests were delighted beyond measure with this policy and took swift advantage of it. And the President approved the revision which they dictated, then became its apologist. He heard from the people then, and discovered to his sorrow that they held him responsible for the sins and the omissions of his party. Vain were his explanations and remonstrances. Vain his efforts to reverse his policy and avert the consequences of his error. He failed in the supreme test of leadership, and met the fate which failure always brings.

Woodrow Wilson may not always command the public confidence, but he will never lose it from any lack of leadership, of the courage which underlies it, of the assumption of responsibility which it incurs.

If it be true that "the silent spirit of the unconscious masses is the source of all great things," it must follow that he is the interpreter of that spirit who divines its broodings and shapes it into being. Such is the President of the United States. Only those who fear his influence protest against its exercise. These, perceiving the confidence which his great talents have inspired, the sincerity and earnestness of his devotion to the people, would avoid the certainty of a renewal of his term of office by assailing his judgment, his policy, and his leadership. But with eyes fixed upon the goal for which he is striving, his serene courage will not fail. And we, the people's Democratic representatives, will follow him, not as servants but as associates, animated by a common purpose, bound in mutual compact, and striving to achieve the task which our masters, the people of the United States, have committed to our hands.

You have beaten the shipping bill, but you have not beaten the President. He is as resolute and undaunted as when he assumed the duties of his office. But let me prophesy that you have beaten the filibuster. We shall return here at the appointed time and the rules will then be amended so that the minority may no longer successfully obstruct the orderly course of legislative procedure. That is the next milestone upon the highway of Democratic progress. You have hastened its accomplishment by your unwarranted and unreasonable abuse of the privilege of debate and thus unconsciously made yourselves the instruments of the next great reformation in public affairs.

Mr. BRYAN, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. NEWLANDS, and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it is now 5 o'clock. I understand there are a number of Senators who desire to discuss other matters than this bill. If the Senate is to spend its time to any purpose at all we will get through this bill, and Senators will postpone what they have to say upon other matters until after it is disposed of. There will be on the bill disagreements between the two Houses on hundreds of items, if it is passed as it is reported to the Senate, and a conference will have to get to work and work fast in order to make a report in time.

Mr. President, before the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] proceeds I wish to appeal to the Senate to allow this bill to be considered. If there is to be any discussion upon the bill let it be upon the bill before the Senate. Senators will have an opportunity to-night to make speeches. Senators who make long speeches, Senators who filibuster a great deal, will have a chance to-night to denounce the filibuster and filibustering.

Mr. President, if the Senate does not want this bill to pass it will be very soon evident. If Senators want to let it pass I appeal to them to confine the discussion to the bill. We ought to deal with each other here in good faith. If there is a purpose not to allow the bill to pass, and any Senator says so, I will agree to lay it aside and let us get to something else.

I make the appeal with all the earnestness of my soul. Let us go on with the bill. I do not object to debate upon the bill, but the time is getting late, and I hope Senators will confine their discussion to the question before the Senate. I appeal to my good friends who want to make speeches upon other matters to wait a little while. Let us get through with this bill one way or the other, either defeat it or let it go to conference.

Mr. CRAWFORD obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota has been recognized.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to ask——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether the Senator from South Dakota will yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I decline to yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I appeal to the Senator from South Dakota to permit me to ask unanimous consent to present a couple of joint resolutions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not if they are to be considered.

Mr. BRYAN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I have no object in view except to characterize some of the items in this bill, and when that is done, so far as I am concerned, the Senator from Florida, I hope, may be able to have the reading of the bill proceed. I have felt that because of the examination I made of every one of the items involved I ought to make a statement with regard to some of them.

For instance, on page 86 of the bill, the item which was in it when it passed the House has been left in the bill. It is an item appropriating $600 to the trustee of the Salem Baptist Church, Clark County. It is a Virginia item. The trustees of this Salem Baptist Church appear in the title, but when we examine the finding of the Court of Claims and the claim there appears to be a single individual claimant. In his petition this claimant states that he is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the county of Clark, and that he is duly elected, qualified, and acting trustee of this church. The name of this gentleman does not appear anywhere in the record. He appears to be the sole representative of this church organization. There does not appear ever to have been a claim made in behalf of this church building until in 1904, 40 years after the war had closed. It was sent to the Court of Claims in 1904. In a proceeding instituted by this sole individual he sets forth in this complaint his citizenship and that he is the trustee of this organization. In the finding of the court there is nothing to show that it has remained in existence or is an existing institution except so far as he individually alleges these facts in relation to himself.

To further characterize him, there is not a thing to indicate what sort of a building was destroyed; whether it was 8 by 10 or 40 by 50; whether it was made of wood or brick; whether it was a building that had been standing there for a hundred years or had just been erected; whether it was totally destroyed or only damaged. There is nothing of that sort; but this man has gone over here and just put in enough to come before the Congress on a pretext that $600 should be appropriated for him. Through this omnibus bill there is claim after claim of that sort. It if were only one, we might consider it as an accident and let the good claims go through.

Here is another claim which has been stricken out of the bill by the Senate committee, but it was passed by another branch of Congress, where the Overton Hotel Co., in Memphis, claimed for the rent of a hotel during the war. It had claimed $53,333 rent. It had gone through the Court of Claims and had that allowance made in its behalf, and secured an appropriation for it and gave its release. It was for rent of a hotel in Memphis during the war, when values were destroyed, when business was destroyed, and they were probably very fully compensated when they got $53,333 through the Court of Claims. They got this money, and now they come here with a claim that the court, through inadvertence, had not made the computation correctly, and put in a claim for $11,000 more for rent, and that item gets into this bill. It passed through the House. The Senator from Florida and the committee have stricken it out, and I am glad of it. In some cases they have corrected those abuses, but in others they have not. It was in the bill as it passed the House and it was stricken out in the committee.

Here is another that was in the bill as it passed the House, and which characterizes it. It is a claim of Mrs. Perkins. The Senator from Florida has stricken it out here. It was in the bill as it passed the House. He has done some good work, but he has not done enough of it. The Court of Claims finds that there had been an administration of the estate and the administrator was N. C. Perkins. Perkins was a Confederate officer. He was administering the estate of a Mr. Todd, who had died just before the war and left his property to his daughter, who was the wife of this Confederate officer. She was undertaking to establish loyalty within the meaning of the act that would allow her administrator to recover for property taken by the Union soldiers, and here was the proof. There is the Court of Claims on the part of the widow of this Confederate officer who was fighting under a Confederate flag and against the Government at the time.

Mrs. Perkins desired her husband to keep out of the Confederate service; she did not desire him to take up arms; she did not wish him to join either army; after the war actually began she did not desire the subjugation of the South and she did not wish for the defeat of the Confederacy to secure the perpetuity of the Union. It does not appear that she gave assistance or practical sympathy on either side.

There is a statement of fact which looks both ways. The situation was this: Her husband was a Confederate officer and he was the administrator of the estate, and that is the way she undertook to qualify, so far as loyalty was concerned. The Senator from Florida has stricken that item out of the bill, but it went through the House.

Now, let me refer to one or two more items to characterize a great many of these items and I am through with that part of it. For instance, these are the claimants, who were children of tender years at the time of the Civil War. Here is the case of a man by the name of Lindsey L. Brown, which was not referred to the Court of Claims until 1894, 40 years after the war was over. This property had belonged to a man named William R. Brown. He died in 1863 and left a wife and five children. There is no proof that Brown, the father of these children, was loyal. There is nothing at all upon that subject. The statute requires proof of loyalty on the part of the claimant at least. This is her father. There is no proof in regard to him. It was proven, and the Court of Claims finds, his widow was disloyal. Now, there were two adult sons. The proof shows that they were disloyal. Then there were two others who were found to be loyal because they were not of age. Here they were in a State that was in rebellion and at war with the Government. There is no proof that the father was loyal; there is positive proof that the surviving widow was disloyal and that the two boys who were of age were disloyal, and yet the two children who were under age are found to have been loyal and entitled to this money because of their tender years. Those two children were minors. No claim was ever presented in their behalf. That claim slept after they became of age and had a right to prosecute it. It slept there for about 35 years. Then these two children, after all these years had elapsed, with no proof of their father's loyalty, with the direct proof of the mother's disloyalty and of the disloyalty of the brothers who were of age, and after all these years of silence, come in and undertake to establish their loyalty and their right to recover because of tender years.

I do not believe there is anything in such practice as that to appeal to the equity of Congress in the exercise of its discretion in paying a claim for damages.

Now, I want to show the character of some of these claims for churches.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator give me a reference to the page of the bill on which the last item he has criticized is found?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will look that up. I do not know about it being carried in this bill. The Senator from Florida has cut some of those items out, I know, but I am satisfied it was in the bill as it passed the House.

For instance, here is a claim for a church. In one case they go into the Court of Claims and describe the building, when it was erected, how old it was, whether it was brick or stone, and then state how long it was occupied, giving the period—four or six months—then they give the specifications of what damage was done to it, and the court makes its findings of the amount it was damaged. In every case with a church that was injured in that way, the committee two years ago recommended the payment; and that has been done as respects this bill. I think an item of that kind ought to be allowed.

But I want to contrast a claim like that with claim after claim that you will find in this bill for damages to churches. There is no description of the building. Some of them were churches belonging to colored people. I do not imagine they were worth very much money nor that they were very extravagant or palatial churches; but there is no description of the building or of the age of the building, whether it was occupied 24 hours, 24 days, 1 year, or 4 years; there is absolutely nothing. It is not stated how it was damaged or to what extent, or if at all, but there is merely a lump sum finding that it was occupied, and that the rental value is so and so.

Ingenious attorneys—and you can see the play all the way through—hunt up old claims of that kind and put in just enough of colorable stuff on which to base an anomalous sort of finding which means almost anything, because they wanted just enough to come up here and ask Congress to appropriate some money. The omnibus claims bill is and has been just crammed full of items of that kind. I do not think they ought to be paid. For every honest claim that is paid, with real merit in it, I think there are many in the bill that ought not to be paid.

I regret that we are right down here in the last hours of Congress, where we can not take these items and do justice to the deserving claims which are in the bill. The trouble with it is that for a goodly number of honest claims, which ought to be paid, there are 2 for 1, I dare say, of claims that have no merit whatever. It is just upon that ground that I shall be unable to vote for the bill.

I am glad to say that the Senator from Florida has always been fair and reasonable from his viewpoint. He presumes always, and indulges in the presumption, that where these general sort of findings are made, without any specifications whatever, the presumption must all be to pay the claims, while I have insisted that when these people, after 40 or 50 years have come here and asked us to take money out of the Treasury and pay it over to them, and they have undertaken to go to the Court of Claims and make out a case there upon which we are to pay the money, it was up to them to present to Congress some facts instead of just a line or two of generalization.

With that statement, I have no desire to further occupy the time of the Senate; but when the bill is read I shall reserve the right to move to strike out a claim whenever one is arrived at where I am able at this time and in this difficult way to present facts in regard to it which are adverse, and ask to have it eliminated from the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be first read for committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read for committee amendments.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am now, and will be, very reluctant to interfere with the dispatch of business, and especially am I disinclined to interfere with this bill. I feel that way because so many Senators are interested in it. I know also there are other bills here, quite a large number in the aggregate, in which Senators are deeply interested. I wish to say, however, that before this Congress ends—not now, but between now and noon Thursday—I intend to take the floor at some stage of the proceedings and give expression to some views with respect to the shipping bill and also to express my views with respect to the filibuster by which the bill was killed.

Mr. President, I am deeply grieved that the shipping bill has been killed in this way, and I want it understood that there is more than one mourner at the obsequies. I shall not express myself now; but I do intend, as I already have said, before this session ends to have something to say about the way in which this great public measure was so incontinently strangled. I shall now yield the floor, that the consideration of the pending bill may proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 7, after line 13, to insert:

To Sallie A. Kinnaird, administratrix of the estate of William H. Kinnaird, deceased, of Warren County, $1,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 31, to insert:

To J. H. Maratta, administrator of the estate of Caleb Maratta, deceased, late of Spencer County, $417.
To M. C. O'Hara, administrator de bonis non of William O'Hara, deceased, of Caldwell County, $4,829.
To Sarah Posey Brown, sole heir of Thomas B. Posey, deceased, of Shelby County, $280.
To Elias J. Riley, administrator of the estate of John Riley, deceased, of Logan County, $2,480.
To James A. Seebolt, administrator of the estate of John H. Seebolt, deceased, of Jefferson County, $4,675.
To Ambrose D. Vallandingham, of Owen County, $550.
To Julia F. Yates, of Lawrence County, $125.
To the trustees of the Baptist Church, of Bloomfield, $325.
To the trustees of the Christian Church of Crab Orchard, $500.
To the trustees of the Colored Baptist Church of Lebanon, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Louisiana," at the top of page 38, to strike out:

To James A. Verret, administrator of Adolph Verret, deceased, late of Terrebonne Parish, $4,067.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 7, to strike out:

To Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, late of West Feliciana Parish, $27,800.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment on lines 8, 9, and 10. That is a bill that has passed the Senate three times and passed the House twice, and it is a matter that I understand very thoroughly.

The SECRETARY. The item reads:

To Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, late of West Feliciana Parish, $27,800.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the facts in this case are these: Mr. White owned a steamboat which was taken and used by the Federal Army, and he gave a receipt finally for $7,000. The receipt which he signed stated "that said sum is received in full accord and satisfaction for all claims against the United States or its officers for said boat and its value."

When the boat was taken there was some sugar on board, some barrels of sugar of the value of $27,000. The case was afterwards tried by the Court of Claims, and the court came to the conclusion that, while the receipt did not mention the sugar or the cargo, it was clearly the intention of the parties to settle all claims and to pay the $7,000 in full satisfaction of the claim, and that the claimant accepted the $7,000 in settlement. Now he comes back afterwards, after getting the $7,000, and wants this appropriation, which the Court of Claims finds was the value of the cargo.

It seemed to the committee that the receipt was intended to be in full, although it did not mention the cargo. It said, "The boat and its value." Certainly the officers of the Government so understood it, and the court in passing upon the claim held that they had a right to and were justified in that belief.

That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy much time. I was in the country where this occurred at the time it occurred. I know something about the circumstances in Louisiana about Port Hudson. They took this man's ship and cargo for the use of the Government, and continued to use it long after the war without paying him anything for the use, for the cargo, or for the boat. He made his claim in due season to the commission, and they sent it to the court. He proved his loyalty, had his case settled in court, the United States had it appealed to a higher court, and never perfected that appeal or took it to a higher court. Several years afterwards, in 1865, the Government took advantage of his poverty and offered him $7,000, which they said was what the ship was finally sold for by mistake. The Secretary of War admits that it was sold by mistake, after the Government had had full use of the vessel for eight hundred and twenty-odd days, the stipulated price for the use of vessels of this kind being $28 a day.

Now, here was a man who had a good ship and who was loyal. The Government took his ship and took the cargo, and used the ship until long after the war closed, and then, by mistake, sold it at auction for $7,000 and took a receipt that does not state that it was in full for the use of that ship; and he supposed when he signed the receipt that he was signing only for the value of the ship left after its use, and that he still had due him the value of the use of the ship all of this time.

Through a misunderstanding, I did not have an opportunity to appear before the subcommittee or the committee when this matter was considered; but it is a matter that I investigated very thoroughly when I was chairman of the Committee on Claims, and all the more so because of the associations that surrounded it with which I was familiar so long ago. It was a just claim. It passed in with other claims, and we were compelled in one instance to take out several hundred thousand dollars of claims of $20,000 or more, and this among the others, simply to lighten the load. Since that time it has passed the Senate twice, and it has passed the House twice; but they failed to connect. I think we ought to disagree to the Senate amendment striking it out.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will disagree to this item. These parties live in my State, and this item, in my judgment, should certainly be paid if anything in this bill is paid. It is clearly proven. The only objection to paying it is that this man White did give a receipt in this language:

Being in full accord and satisfaction for all claims against the United States and its officers for said boat or its value, $7,000.

We are not claiming for the boat. We are claiming for the use of the boat 825 days, which the court found was worth $23,100, and for sugar and molasses, $4,700; a total of $27,800. Does any reasonable man claim that when this poor fellow went to the Government and gave a receipt, just after the Civil War, when everything was in confusion, for $7,000 in full for the boat, that should debar him from getting paid for the sugar and molasses and the use of the boat for 825 days? Why, it would be an awful hardship; and I can not believe that the Senate is going to inflict that hardship on him.

This claim has been up time and again, and, as stated by the Senator from Wyoming, it was approved and passed the Senate twice. I was not familiar with the circumstances when it came up this time and was acted on unfavorably. I sincerely hope that act of injustice is not going to be done to a citizen of my State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 17, to insert:

To Henry Comeaux, of Lafayette Parish, $420.
To A. A. Goodwin, jr., administrator of succession of Emile Rost, deceased, late of Natchitoches Parish, $4,590.
To the heirs of Pierre Sauve, deceased, late of the city of New Orleans, $7,900.
To William H. Waters, heir at law of Thomas B. Waters, deceased, late of Rapides Parish, $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how it comes that these four claims at the bottom of page 38 were not in the bill as it passed the House or in the omnibus claims bill of two years ago. What are those four claims beginning with "Henry Comeaux"?

Mr. BRYAN. Well, take the first: The Army took 6 horses, 9 cows, and 30 hogs.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How does it come that that was not in the omnibus claims bill two years ago or in this bill as it passed the House?

Mr. BRYAN. It was reported at the beginning of the Sixty-third Congress. All of these are claims since the last bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just a word there, Mr. President. It seems to me that the time has arrived now, half a century after the war closed, when we ought to stop sending in these claims for horses and chickens and hogs and corn and rails and cordwood that it is alleged were taken by the United States Army during the Civil War. The Court of Claims has done all that it ought to do in the way of findings on stale claims; and I will ask the Senator—I have not had time to examine it—whether there is a provision in this bill to put an end to the further reference of these claims?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state that there is not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then it is all the more reason why the bill ought to be defeated.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 39, to strike out:

MAINE.

To Jacob B. Loring, of Knox County, $148.23.
To Whitman L. Orcutt, of Aroostook County, $878.47.
To William L. Ross, of Penobscot County, $47.56.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maryland," on page 43, after line 5, to insert:

To A. Rosa Bevans, sole heir of Thomas Bevans, deceased, of Washington County, $570.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 7, to insert:

To Sarah C. Harsh, of Washington County, $655.
To Charles H. Stonestreet, administrator of the estate of Nicholas Stonestreet, deceased, late of Charles County, $960.
To Francis L. Ward and Eliza C. Ward, administrators of Marjorie Ward, deceased, of Howard County, $700.
To the trustees of the German Reformed Church, of Boonsboro, $60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Massachusetts," on page 43, after line 16, to strike out:

To William W. Dutcher, of Essex County, $457.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 20, to strike out:

To William B. Kimball, of Hampshire County, $21.84.
To Susan Shatswell, executrix of Nathaniel Shatswell, deceased, of Essex County, $244.90.
To Horace P. Williams, of Boston, $1,604.14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Michigan," on page 44, after line 1, to strike out:

To Harriet C. Begole, mother of William M. Begole, deceased, of Genesee County, $19.33.
To Myron C. Bond, of Adrian, $18.04.
To Lemuel C. Canfield, of Mason County, $587.68.
To Guy M. Claflin, of Lenawee County, $499.79.
To William A. Clark, of Ann Arbor, $329.30.
To James S. De Land, of Detroit, $202.88.
To Lucius E. Gould, Abby E. Allison, and Mary I. Todd, children of Ebenezer Gould, deceased, of Shiawassee County, $42.70.
To Elvira D. Gregg, widow of Judson H. Gregg, deceased, of Ingham County, $116.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 15, to strike out:

To Frederick S. Hutchinson, of Ionia County, $118.80.
To George J. Lockley, Joseph F. Lockley, and Sarah E. Todd, children of George Lockley, deceased, $99.50.
To Maria N. Swain, widow of Elisha R. Swain, deceased, $361.86.
To Edwin A. Wells, of Lenawee County, $116.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Minnesota," on page 44, after line 22, to strike out:

To Omar H. Case, of Fillmore County, $191.63.
To Frederick Lambrecht, of Ramsey County, $324.73.
To Warren Oman, of Clay County, $39.74.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Mississippi," on page 45, line 8, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$13,500" and insert "$10,125," so as to make the clause read:

To Antonio Q. Lovell, Rosalie Q. Duncan, Fredrica Q. Ogden, Eliza T. Routh and Louisa Q. Lovell, deceased, and Eva C. Lovell and Alice Q. Lovell, children and heirs of Louisa Q. Lovell, deceased, or to their legal representatives, the sum of $10,125.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Missouri," on page 50, after line 12, to strike out:

To Caroline E. Bagg, widow of John Bagg, deceased, of Adair County, $922.90.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what reasons the committee have for striking out the claim of Mrs. Caroline E. Bagg, widow of John Bagg, deceased, of Adair County? I find no reference to it in a somewhat hasty examination of the printed report.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can tell the Senator from Missouri. That is a soldier's claim for increased pay, and it belongs to a class all of which come under one condition. They were officers who drew the salary allowed to them according to the commission they held from the Government, but they were performing the service of an officer of the next grade higher. They were not able to secure the pay at that rank because of the fact that the command was not up to its minimum. The statute of 1864 prevented their securing pay unless their command was up to the minimum. I do not recall the particular year, but I think it was in 1903, when Congress passed an absolute limitation upon the consideration of those claims, and that statute remains in force. The statute of 1864 remains in force against these claims. There are about 100 or 200 others exactly like it, all of which we cut out of the omnibus bill two years ago, and I think they are not included in this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to state that this is one of a class of claims all of which have gone out of the bill. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] made a statement at the opening of the discussion on this bill explaining the matter more in detail.

Mr. REED. Has the Senator from South Dakota the law? While it is a little out of order, we will save time, I think, and I desire to ask him as to the other claims which have been stricken out on page 51. The names of William C. Brummett, Joseph P. Grisson, and John R. Hamacher are in the same class and stricken out for the same reason?

Mr. ROBINSON. They are.

Mr. REED. Is that true of all the other claims stricken out of this bill, so far as it applies to the State of Missouri?

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is true of all claims of that class.

Mr. REED. It is impossible for me to tell by the bill what the class of the claim is, of course, but I thought the Senators perhaps could give me an explanation.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the exception of the Sheppard claim, on page 53, I am assured that they are all in that class.

Mr. REED. What is the reason why the Sheppard claim is stricken out?

Mr. ROBINSON. Sheppard was a gambler, it is stated, and it did not seem reasonable to pay the claim of a gambler in a game called chuck-a-luck. I suppose the Senator from Missouri never heard of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is a gambler's claim.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from South Dakota is perfectly familiar with that class of cases.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that this man Sheppard was an all-around gambler, and he was teaching his associates the game of chuck-a-luck. Gen. Hazard ordered him arrested and took the money away from him. He claims that they took $830 and that a part of it was not won by him in gambling, and he wants the surplus that was not won in gambling paid back. But it was handed over to some officers, and they lost it; it never went into the United States Treasury. The Government has not got it. It is the claim of this gambler for that portion of the money which he claims they took that was not the proceeds of his winning.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator used a western term that is not familiar to those of us who live east of the Alleghenies. He has referred to a game of chuck-a-luck. I hope he will explain the nature of the game.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The floor is not mine. It belongs to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Down East in pious Pennsylvania they refer to the game that the Senator is discussing as society bridge. Out West they use a plainer term.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not hear the Senator, but I have no doubt his explanation is very good.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that with this humor we are wasting rather valuable time of the Senate, and I ask that we proceed with the bill.

Mr. REED. I recognize the fact that the Senate is in its closing hours, and it is impossible to give these claims that have been stricken out any full consideration at this time. I therefore simply make the statement that I shall not insist upon their reinsertion because of the lack of time, and I expressly state that by so doing I in no manner want to be understood as waiving the validity of these claims, but shall probably bring some of them forward at a more convenient season.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 4, to strike out:

To William C. Brummett, of Cass County, $390.93.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 16, to strike out:

To Joseph C. Grissom, of Jasper County, $1,208.19.
To John R. Hamacher, of Ray County, $42.38.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 10, to strike out:

To Mary E. James, widow of Thomas James, deceased, of Jackson County, $149.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 17, to strike out:

To Benjamin F. Lutman, of Cole County, $388.96.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 53, to strike out:

To Jay H. Neff, administrator of Andrew J. Neff, deceased, late of Jackson County, $240.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 17, to strike out:

To Francis M. Sheppard, of Charlton County, late of Company I, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $830.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 13, to insert:

To John R. Adams, of Goodland, $240.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to know from the Senator in charge of the bill if those are also late reports from the Court of Claims.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think they are. That is my recollection.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 14, to insert:

To E. P. Ament, administrator de bonis non of John Ament, deceased, late of Cass County, $850.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to reserve the right to object to these claims being acted upon in this way that have only recently been reported and where there has been no opportunity to investigate them.

Mr. JAMES. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I reserve the right to vote to strike out these new claims that have come in so recently that we have had no opportunity to examine the reports.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 16, to insert:

To Arren Bray, of Christian County, $215.
To Will Clemments, administrator of Peter S. Clemments, deceased, of Cass County, $340.
To Ethelbert Barrett, administrator of the estate of M. W. Garrison, deceased, late of Cass County, $785.
To Thomas L. How, heir of J. J. and Isaac S. How, deceased, of Jackson County, $600.
To John W. Clements, administrator of the estate of Alfred Laws, deceased, late of Jackson County, $1,325.
To Sam B. Strother, administrator of the estate of Samuel G. Mason, deceased, of Jackson County, $2,086.
To the county of Newton, State of Missouri, $250.
To Levi W. Revelle, of Franklin County, $1,825.
To the curators of Central College, of Fayette, $1,771.
To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Warrenton, $480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 5, to strike out:

MONTANA.

To Mary E. L. Callaway, widow of James E. Callaway, deceased, of Madison County, $53.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 8, to strike out:

NEBRASKA.

To Margaret C. French, widow of Columbus P. French, deceased, $176.40.
To Michael Trucks, of Cuming County, $377.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 23, to strike out:

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

To Eleazer L. Sarsons, of Sullivan County, $40.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the following amendment——

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is understood that the committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the item is disposed of I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill why that lone item for New Hampshire was stricken from the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is one of the minimum class, belonging to the same class referred to by the Senator from Missouri. All that class went out of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has any provision been made for the payment of those claims?

Mr. ROBINSON. There has not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator in charge of the bill regarding the claims under the head of Nevada. I see four or five claims allowed there all the way from $400 or $500 to $3,000 to different persons formerly of Nevada, now residents of the State of California. Will the Senator state the character of those claims?

Mr. ROBINSON. They are all so-called Piute Indian claims, if my impression is correct.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 25, to strike out:

NEW JERSEY.

To John H. Arey, of Mercer County, $20.39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "New Mexico," on page 57, after line 6, to strike out:

To Mary W. Littell, widow of William J. Littell, deceased, of Lincoln County, $632.18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 8, to strike out:

NEW YORK.

To Luther S. Bryant, of Franklin County, $45.31.
To Josephine Campbell, widow of George Campbell, deceased, of Rensselaer County, $272.14.
To Benjamin Fenton, surviving partner of the firm of Fenton & Co., of the city of Buffalo, $9,562.34.
To Anna Cavanaugh, sister and sole heir of John Fryer, deceased, of Otsego County, $60.80.
To Harry V. Hoes, administrator of Theodore Hoes, deceased, of Columbia County, $491.08.
To Emily A. Lockwood, widow of Harrison Lockwood, deceased, of Warren County, $484.11.
To Abby C. McNett, widow of Andrew J. McNett, deceased, of Allegany County, $816.77.
To Martin H. Mullin, of Oneida County, $351.68.
To Lucius V. S. Mattison, of Oswego County, $490.44.
To Cornelia P. Beckley and Maude P. Clark, daughters of Hamilton S. Preston, deceased, of Delaware County, $104.05.
To Allee A. Sheldon, widow of Allen Sheldon, deceased, of Columbia County, $274.54.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "North Carolina," on page 58, after line 22, to strike out:

To T. L. Love, surviving partner of Robert Love & Son, of Wake County, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 7, to insert:

To James W. Adams, in his own right, and as heir of Solomon N. Adams, deceased, of Pamlico County, $2,325.
To George H. Bellamy, administrator of the estate of John H. Thees, deceased, of Brunswick County, $1,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 11, to insert:

To the trustees of Beulah Primitive Baptist Church, of Johnston County, $420.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is to be disagreed to?

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment appears elsewhere in the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 13, to insert:

To the trustees of the Catholic Church of Washington, $4,000.
To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Washington, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 17, to insert:

To the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Washington, $4,500.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to be in the position of estopping myself, because an amendment is agreed to, after these amendments have been passed, to be heard on a motion to strike them out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was understood before, that they can be returned to.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Does the Senator mean to make a motion in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 19, to strike out:

NORTH DAKOTA.

To Martha A. Mullery, widow of James W. Mullery, deceased, of Stutsman County, $260.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I think there are five items here. The last item I had any knowledge of—and I have none as to the other items, though I think we did have a little correspondence as to the item in line 25——

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that these claims stricken out by the committee are for so-called minimum-pay claims. They are of the same class as the amendment referred to by the Senator from Missouri. All that class of provisions have gone out.

Mr. POMERENE. For my own information, I desire to ask what is the nature of the claim of Jeremiah Cain, of Urbana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will look it up if, meanwhile, the reading may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, under the subhead "Ohio," on page 60, after line 23, to strike out:

To Henry L. Biddle, of Montgomery County, $362.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 61, to strike out:

To Amanda W. Clancy, widow of Charles W. Clancy, deceased, of Jefferson County, $374.88.
To John Hamilton, of Franklin County, $272.77.
To Barton A. Holland, of Hardin County, $182.82.
To George W. Northup, of Montgomery County, $482.40.
To David Skeeles, of Carroll County, $245.85.
To Ellen R. Smith, widow of James R. Smith, deceased, of Lucas County, $514.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Oklahoma," on page 61, after line 12, to strike out:

To George W. Clark, of Oklahoma, late a resident of the Indian Territory, $106.26.
To Robert C. Cozine, son of John S. Cozine, deceased, of Eda, $520.22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 16, to insert:

To Susan Sanders, only surviving heir of Ebbie Love, deceased, of Vinita, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 18, to strike out:

OREGON.

To John E. Butler, of Lane County, $417.31.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pennsylvania," on page 61, after line 21, to strike out:

To William Ashworth and Adam I. Ashworth, heirs of James Ashworth, deceased, of Philadelphia, $44.57.
To John H. Black, of Blair County, $361.28.
To John Craig, of Carbon County, $88.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 62, to strike out:

To John Danks, son and sole heir of John A. Danks, deceased, of Allegheny County, $187.81.
To Frank E. Foster, of Warren County, $569.52.
To Eliza J. Houston, widow of John Houston, deceased, of Indiana County, $136.78.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 18, to strike out:

RHODE ISLAND.

To Willard H. Greene, late of Company E, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, $701.26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 22, to insert:

To the vestry and wardens of the Episcopal Church of the parish of Christ Church, South Carolina, $1,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 64, to strike out:

SOUTH DAKOTA.

To John B. Geddis, of Beadle County, $391.31.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 16, before the name "Carter," to strike out "F" and insert "E," so as to read:

To William E. Carter, administrator of the estate of Melvina A. Carter, deceased, of Hardeman County, $240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 4, to strike out:

To John Hughes, of Shelby County, $43.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Tennessee," on page 69, after line 11, to strike out:

To Richard M. Johnson, of Dekalb County, $183.26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 15, to strike out:

To the receiver of the Overton Hotel Co., of Memphis, Tenn., for rent of hotel used as a military hospital from June 6, 1862, until December 31, 1862, $11,388.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill upon what ground that item was stricken out?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have the record here. I mentioned that claim a little while ago. We struck it out two years ago, as will be shown by the report of the committee on the last omnibus claims bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I may ask the Senator a question, was it not on the theory that the claim had been paid?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The claim was for rent. It was referred in 1885, and was dismissed by the Court of Claims; but it went back there in 1896. Under the second reference the court made a finding in favor of the claimant of $53,333, which was paid and payment of the claim receipted for. That was for the occupation of a building in Memphis during the war, at a time when I do not think rents were very high in Memphis. Then they came up here and claimed that the Court of Claims had made some technical mistake in the computation of the rent. They went to the Court of Claims and asked for another reference in order to get a recomputation, and under that they claim $11,000 more. There is no equity in the claim.

Mr. SHIELDS. Did this case go before the Court of Claims?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It went before the Court of Claims, and they found for $53,333, which the Government paid. These people released the claim, and then their attorney claimed that they had not added the figures correctly, and that they should have $11,000 more.

Mr. SHIELDS. Was the $11,000 more allowed by the Court of Claims?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I only understand that this man comes in and makes a claim, on the theory of computation of the finding made by the Court of Claims, that we should give him $11,000 more than we have already given him, namely, $53,333, which he took, and he gave his receipt for the claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 72, after line 13, to strike out:

To Hiram F. Lyke, of Waukesha County, $188.56.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 96 I notice that a committee amendment has been agreed to striking out the provision, reading:

To Joseph Hinson, of Pierce County, $115.41.

I was called out for a little while. At that time there were nearly 50 pages to be read, and I did not expect that page 96 would be reached before my return. I want to ask why that provision was stricken out? I ask that it may be reconsidered. I will not take more than two or three minutes, in any event.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that in the bill two years ago the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] made a most exhaustive examination of this class of cases and inserted in his report the findings of the court and acts of Congress to the effect that claims of this kind should be left to the Secretary of War. I have stated that two or three times, though I presume it must have been when the Senator was not present.

Mr. JONES. No; I was not.

Mr. BRYAN. This class of cases arises from the fact that in the Civil War governors of the States would issue commissions to officers, and with those commissions the officers would go to the Federal authorities and ask to be mustered in. The War Department, under an act of Congress, would refuse to muster them in unless the regiment or company or unit of which the officer was in command was recruited up to a certain minimum. The Government had to do that, otherwise there would have been colonels commanding as regiments a number of men not exceeding the requirements for a company.

Mr. JONES. Is that the situation in this case?

Mr. BRYAN. That is the situation in this case.

Mr. JONES. I will, then, ask the Senator if all similar claims have been stricken from this bill and have been kept out?

Mr. BRYAN. They have been.

Mr. JONES. I could not ask, then, of course, that the item be retained.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from South Dakota is present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is this one of the minimum command cases?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Hinson was a lieutenant colonel and was commissioned by the governor as colonel.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All such claims have been stricken from the bill. There is one from my own State that went out in just the same way.

Mr. JONES. I should like to see that item remain in the bill, but I can not ask the Senate to change the course which has been adopted in order to relieve this particular case.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sure the Senate would not vote to include claims of this character.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 102, after line 18, to insert:

SOLDIERS' CLAIMS FOR TRAVEL PAY FROM PLACE WHERE HONORABLY DISCHARGED TO HOME.

ARIZONA.

To John G. Evans, of Maricopa County, $37.44.

ARKANSAS.

To Francisca Bale, widow of Edward T. Bale, deceased, of Sonoma County, $132.38.
To Philo J. Beveridge, son and one of the heirs of John L. Beveridge, deceased, of Los Angeles County, $173.87.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out in line 6, page 103, the words "son and one of the" and insert the words "and other," so that it will read:

To Philo J. Beveridge and other heirs of John L. Beveridge.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, let me make this statement now with reference to the remainder of the bill down to section 3, on page 130: These cases are all court findings and are known as "travel-pay" cases, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered as having been read down to page 130. We will not learn anything more by hearing them read. They are exactly as reported from the Court of Claims. I ask unanimous consent that we may consider that portion as read. I do not think there will be any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent that the course indicated by the Senator from Florida be pursued? The Chair hears none.

The portion of the bill referred to, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims as an amendment, was to insert the following:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for a moment to offer a committee amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer, as section 4 of the bill, on behalf of the committee, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida offers the amendment which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill, on page 131, after line 8, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That no part of the amount of any item appropriated in this bill in excess of 20 per cent thereof shall be paid to or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim.

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which in the aggregate exceeds 20 per cent of the amount of any item appropriated in this bill on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who is absent, I offer an amendment, which I will send to the desk. Before doing so, I call attention to the fact that the amendment is Senate bill 6120, which has been favorably reported by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], from the Committee on Claims, and is reported in lieu of Senate bill 5489.

This bill covers two classes of cases, as I understand: First, the claims for overtime due employees in the United States navy yards; second, claims of officers of the United States Army for additional pay, commonly known as longevity claims, so as to include the period of the cadet service at the United States Military Academy at West Point and enlisted service in the Regular Army.

I call attention to the fact that this bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Florida, the chairman of that committee. It covers a class of claims that certainly ought to be allowed, in my opinion, and I have no reason to assume that the Senator from Florida would be opposed to it. I will ask the Senator if that is the case?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there is but one reason why I would object, and that is because the House committee with which we are going to go into conference is from the Committee on War Claims, and the committee of the House which would consider the bill to which the Senator refers has nothing to do with war claims but is known as the Committee on Claims, simply. Those are not war claims, and I am sure that the Committee on War Claims would never consent to that amendment. I want to be perfectly frank with the Senator. I do not see how we can maintain it. It would be another committee to which that bill should go in conference. That was the avowed attitude of the committee in the last Congress.

I stated to the Senator from Massachusetts that I would undertake, before we adjourned, to take this bill up and have it considered and passed, if possible. I have no objection to its going to conference, but I am sure I can not maintain it as an amendment to this bill. I am sure the House would not consent to it, and I appeal to the Senator to let it remain on the calendar and we will try to get to it to-night.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I will ask the Senator from Florida if it is not the understanding that we are immediately going to proceed to the consideration of that bill as soon as this bill is passed?

Mr. BRYAN. I have just come into the Chamber, and I do not know what the understanding is.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. That is what I understand the understanding is.

Mr. BRYAN. It could be considered very quickly.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I assume that the Senators who are interested in that bill will vote to take it up when this is concluded.

Mr. BRYAN. This bill is confined to certain classes of claims.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we have similar conditions, in the fact that we have here only one Committee on Pensions, while the House has two Committees on Pensions. It often happens that we have a bill that is referred to only one committee here, and yet the House will have two committees and two sets of conferees to deal with the matter, as it belongs to the one committee or the other. So I do not think the Senator would have that difficulty.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me suggest this to the Senator: Here we will go into conference with House conferees who know nothing at all about the merits of that bill. On the other hand, the Committee on Claims of the House are familiar with this. It concerns matters with which they deal, but the Committee on War Claims would know nothing about it. They have not even had the hearings. They have not even had the findings of the Court of Claims. In that situation the Senate conferees could not very well insist upon the House agreeing to the amendment; and the result would be that we would have to come back to the Senate and say that the House would not agree. They would be considering a matter about which they had no information.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think he overestimates the difficulties in that direction.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well, then; I will let the Senator take whichever course he prefers.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I will conform to the request of the Senator if he will only allow me to finish my sentence. I think the Senator would have no difficulty, both of them being Senate bills, both of them coming from the single committee here, and it would be a very proper thing if they were both in the same bill and could have been passed together. It is not necessary that they be separated simply because the House has two committees that pass upon the same subject, any more than it would be necessary that we should separate our bills in the Committee on Pensions so that they would conform to the two committees in the House, although we frequently have done that.

I am offering this amendment at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who expected to be back before the time this bill was disposed of, and he asked me to offer it as an amendment; but if the Senator assures me that this bill will be immediately taken up and considered by the Senate, I think I can justify myself in saying to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania that I have taken it upon myself not to conform to his request to have it voted upon as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I will undertake to have it considered. I do not know what the plans are here; but, whether we get it immediately considered or not, I have no doubt it will be considered.

Mr. McCUMBER. With that understanding, I will not press that amendment.

I also offer, on behalf of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, who is temporarily absent, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The Secretary informs the Chair that there is a committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment on page 73, lines 18 and 19, was passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is that amendment, Mr. President? I should like to have it stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment proposes to strike out the following words:

To Mrs. Sallie H. Perkins, daughter and heir of J. J. Todd, deceased, of Shelby County, $5,684.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. What has become of the amendment I just offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been considered yet. This is a committee amendment which was passed over, and it is not yet time to consider amendments offered by individual Senators.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I insist, upon the record produced in the House and before the committee, that this claim ought to be allowed. As I understand, it was allowed in the House and rejected by the Committee on Claims in the Senate on the question of loyalty; that is to say, on the ground that the loyalty was insufficiently proven.

I wish to read briefly from the report of the Committee on Claims of the House upon the subject. I read from page 175 of that report:

J. J. Todd. (Mrs. Sallie H. Perkins, daughter and heir.) (S. D. 15-56-2.) Tucker Act. Sent to court July 17, 1897. Facts reported by court are practically as follows: J. J. Todd died in August, 1861, leaving his property to his minor daughter, who later became Mrs. Sallie H. Perkins. This girl married during minority; she married a Confederate soldier, who, immediately after marriage, left the army and devoted his attention to the care of his wife's property; the court states that Mrs. Perkins desired her husband to keep out of the Confederate service; did not desire "subjugation" of the South, but gave no assistance or practical sympathy to either side. It appears that the property was taken in 1862 and 1863, while Mrs. Perkins was still a minor.

Court further reports that Army supplies worth $5,684 were taken. The only question is whether the claim should be paid, in view of the finding on loyalty. It has been held that a presumption of disloyalty arises only from a voluntary residence in an insurrectionary State. It has further been held by the Supreme Court that a minor has no legal power to change his residence. (See Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S., 452.) It would thus appear that there was no presumption of disloyalty against this girl during her minority. Before she became of age Tennessee had ceased to be seat of war under the President's proclamation of January 1, 1863. The committee believes that under these facts the claim may properly be paid.

Passed House in Sixty-second Congress.

It seems to me that the objection of disloyalty found by the Committee on Claims is not sustained upon this record. This was a minor. She had no possible chance to take any part in the Civil War, and the only possible ground alleged against her is that she subsequently married a Confederate soldier. The Committee on Claims in the House and the House itself thought there was no disloyalty in this case, as did the Court of Claims, and it seems to me the facts sustain their view. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not see how anybody can argue that Mrs. Sallie H. Perkins was a loyal citizen during the Civil War. The court says at the conclusion:

It does not appear that she gave assistance or practical sympathy on either side.

Here was a woman who lost $5,600 worth of property trying to get it back. She could not qualify. The rule of the Committee on Claims is that if there is any doubt as to loyalty, if the court expresses a doubt about it, the claim will not be reported favorably. Mrs. Perkins's husband was in the Confederate Army, an officer in the Confederate Army. We do not have to ask with which side she sympathized. She would not come out and say she was loyal. On the contrary, perhaps unconsciously influenced by the amount of money she might recover, she said that she did not desire the subjugation of the South; she did not desire to see the Union Army win; she had no sympathy for either side; she was absolutely impartial. Yet she was the wife of a Confederate officer.

I can not see how that claim can be sustained. I hope the committee amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the Senate two years ago left this claim out. The Senate committee appears to have agreed to leave it out this time. I examined that record very carefully and have a clear recollection of it. This property was taken from this Confederate officer, N. C. Perkins, who was the administrator of the estate of her father. The Union Army took it from her husband, who was the administrator of the estate of her father, and he had been up to that time practically in the active service of the Confederacy as a Confederate officer. He simply came home to take care of this property.

Now, if the long practice and the provision of the law that loyalty must be affirmatively proven is to control, in view of this lady's statement that she did not desire the subjugation of the South, and she did not wish to defeat the Confederacy to secure the perpetuity of the Union, and her husband being a Confederate officer, and her testimony being as weak as that, I fail to see where the Senator can even presume loyalty upon her part.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, it is the administrator of this deceased lady that presents this claim. To show the inaccuracy of the Senator's statement, to see how he has utterly forgotten this whole case, he speaks of N. C. Perkins as her husband. Why, her husband had been dead for 20 years, and N. C. Perkins is her son, born since the war, and is now her personal representative and presents this claim. This property was taken, as appears by this record, while she was a minor, before she was married. Her husband married her and immediately left, and I have never heard that it was a crime to be the wife or the widow of a Confederate officer. That is what they are urging here; it is because after this loss she married a Confederate officer. That is no ground for disallowing a claim that was just and right at the time the supplies were taken and appropriated to the use, support, and maintenance of the Federal Army—just such claims as are considered of the most meritorious class.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have an amendment at the desk which I should like to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The senior Senator from North Dakota offers, for the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], the following amendment:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. the sum of $26,400.30; Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., the sum of $65,792.53; and the estate of the late Henry A. V. Post, deceased, the sum of $50,359.35, as a refund of import duties paid in excess of the duties imposed by law on steel blooms, as found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that is a claim for taxes collected in time of peace, since the war, which these people claim should not have been collected. I have stated so often that this is only a war-claims bill. I am familiar with that claim. It has no place in a bill of this kind. It has been to the Court of Claims, I believe.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been to the Court of Claims, I understand, and the Court of Claims has found that there is that much money that has been collected by the Treasury Department from these parties that does not belong to the Government and does belong to these individuals.

Mr. BRYAN. It is a miscellaneous claim.

Mr. McCUMBER. What difference does it make what particular bill it is on if the Government has the money which belongs to these parties?

Mr. BRYAN. I will try to make that clear—because this House committee only consider claims growing out of the Civil War. They will not consider anything else. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the passage and approval of this act the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States based upon or growing out of the destruction of any property or damage done to any property by the military or naval forces of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; nor to any claim for stores and supplies taken by or furnished to or for the use of the military or naval forces of the United States, nor to any claim for the value of any use and occupation of any real estate by the military or naval forces of the United States during said war; nor shall said Court of Claims have jurisdiction of any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned I have no objection to that section. I am perfectly willing to have it adopted and go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to see the amendment. [After a pause.] Mr. President, I would have to oppose that amendment. It is a broad, sweeping amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I am going to discuss this bill. That is all there is about it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am getting a little tired of having the conduct of the Senate controlled by the desperate threat of a desperate man that he is about to make a speech.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the amendment agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair declared it was agreed to without objection. The Senator from Missouri has objected.

Mr. REED. I appeal to the Senator from South Dakota to be fair about this matter. Let me say this: Here we are without any time to discuss a proposition of this sort. It affects the claims possibly of hundreds of people, it may be thousands of people, and now it is proposed to cut them off without a moment's discussion. Of course in after years to the hundreds of people to whom hundreds of thousands of dollars may be justly due it may be a sweet consolation to them when they feel in their empty pockets to know that the depreciation of their money was in a measure compensated by the fact that the Senate was deprived of the privilege of hearing the Senator make a long speech that he is threatening us with. I hope he will not do that. This is too important a matter to be settled that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I think my statement will stand comparison with the statement of the Senator from Missouri when I say that I have occupied very little time of the Senate during this session. The time occupied by the Senator from Missouri compared with the time occupied by myself will represent a very, very large extension.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? I see the Senator, with his usual determination, intends to carry out his threat. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, my position here is not one to be dismissed simply with a smile. I have some convictions about this bill. I have no desire to punish the Senate with the sound of my voice or taking up time to present stale claims that have had the opportunity to be heard during a half century, pouring over here into the Court of Claims and coming back with ambiguous findings, in so many cases very little merit in them, with the generation that sustained the loss long since laid away to its final rest, with affidavits and claims being brought up by grandchildren and great-grandchildren, through the instrumentality of attorneys who are hunting up these claims to speculate on the chance of getting something out of the Government.

I have seen that until I think the time has arrived to put an end to the reference to further claims growing out of the taking of property during the Civil War. If this is simply being thrown in here to persuade me to abandon my contention that it ought to go into this bill and stay there with a view to having it thrown out in conference and then be brought back here and put through without it, I am not going to play a part in any such transaction.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator doubtless observed that the chairman of the committee accepted his amendment, and every Senator on this side supported it except the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want this amendment; and if I can I shall bring it about to go into the bill and stay in the bill.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I am sure the Senator will find also that in the conference the conferees will be loyal to the amendments adopted by the Senate, and if they should not succeed in impressing their wish on the House conferees I do not think the Senator ought to oppose the bill and cause it to fail.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. Then I want to call attention to a few cases in this bill, and then I shall not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to offer an amendment that I believe will be agreed to without discussion?

Mr. CRAWFORD. All right.

Mr. GALLINGER. In behalf of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I present an amendment which I understand comes within the rule laid down by the committee. It is for the taking of a book, I understand, for which only part compensation was paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the proper place insert, under the subhead "Utah":

To Moylan C. Fox, of Salt Lake City, executor of Joab Lawrance, deceased, $4,078.75.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Utah spoke to me about that amendment. I have not had time to examine it, but I am perfectly willing that it shall be agreed to by the Senate and go to conference and we can look at it there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is the bill now open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have been disposed of. The Senator from South Dakota has the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not going to be able to begin with the first case and go through that way, because I have not the notes at hand which will enable me to do it. I want to test the claims of this character here and see what the disposition of Senators is in regard to it. On page 86 I move to strike out lines 7 and 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 86 strike out lines 7 and 8 in the following words:

To the trustees of the Salem Baptist Church, of Clarke County, $600.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to be heard just a moment with regard to that claim as reported in the report on the last omnibus claims bill. It is the claim to which I referred awhile ago. It is represented by one individual claiming to be the trustee of that church. I find in the report submitted with the bill two years ago that the petition which this man filed in the Court of Claims in the name of that church appeared to be represented by that individual alone. In his petition, which was not filed until 1904——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that I am no more anxious to pay to an individual for his benefit the claim of a church than he is. I will agree to let the paragraph be stricken out and let it go to conference, so that we can find out the situation there, and if there is an explanation to be made it can be made there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, I want to get the sense of the Senate on one of these cases which will test this principle and the position of the Senate in regard to the minors who on account of tender years come in and make claims of loyalty. There are probably 100 of them in this bill, where the only ground for sustaining loyalty is that the claimants who are asserting the claims here were minors. I will take this one. It is the heirs of Lindsay Brown. At the bottom of page 32, I move to strike out lines 19 to 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 18, strike out the following:

To Sarah Bushnell, of Rapides Parish, $1,725; to Rosa Brown, Meeker Brown, and Jennie May Brown, of said parish, heirs of Lindsay L. Brown, deceased, in equal shares, $1,725; and to Elmira Jones, William Brown, Bertha Brown, May Brown, and Ether Brown, of said parish, heirs of Talton E. Brown, deceased, in equal shares, $1,725.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply wish to get this issue before the Senate. Lindsay L. Brown and Talton E. Brown are the two minors. This claim was referred to the Court of Claims in 1904. The property in question belonged to William R. Brown, who died in 1863, and left surviving him a widow, Elmira Brown, and five children, William, Henry, Sarah, Lindsay L., and Talton E. It was not shown that William R. Brown before his death was loyal. There was no proof. On that issue all the findings are silent. It is shown that his widow, Elmira Brown, was disloyal. That is found in the record, and that the two sons, Henry and William, were not loyal. The other children, Sarah, Lindsay L., and Talton E., are found to be loyal. These two, Lindsay L. and Talton E., being minors, the finding that they were loyal rested solely upon the fact that they were minors. That is the situation. No claim was presented for this property to the Southern Claims Commission or to any department of the Government, or under the Bowman Act or the Tucker Act, provided for it until 35 years after the property was taken. These children became of age, obtained their majority, and remained silent during all those years, and finally, in 1904, 40 years after the war closed, practically, they go to the Court of Claims and base their loyalty merely upon the fact that they were not of age. Residing in a disloyal State, in rebellion against the Government, with a disloyal mother and a brother and sister who had attained their majority disloyal, with no finding one way or the other with reference to the father, after all these years, in 1904, they go here and establish loyalty simply upon the claim of tender years.

I move to strike it out because of lack of sufficient proof.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota moves this amendment to test the sense of the Senate upon the question of whether the Senate is disposed to visit on the children disloyalty during the Civil War. The Senator says that Louisiana seceded. The Senator also knows that there were a great many Federal troops raised in Louisiana who were loyal to the Union during the Civil War. This is one of the few States in all the South of which that is true.

Mr. President, there is no reason on earth why it should be attempted to visit the disloyalty of an ancestor upon the children. I had always supposed that attainder was not in existence in this country. The Senator must know that a child in its mother's arms was not capable of deciding whether it was in sympathy with the Union or with the Confederacy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me there? I understand this statute requires affirmative proof of loyalty. Suppose the child is not capable of any affirmative active influence one way or the other, what can we do to comply with the requirement that there must be proof of its loyalty when the fact that every influence about it, the influence of the parent, the influence of the family, the influence of the State, the attitude of the whole society in which you find it is that of disloyalty?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I come back to my original proposition that it is not a principle of reason or good conduct to undertake to defeat a claim to say that the child in its mother's arms was disloyal during the Civil War. Congress has never undertaken to establish any such doctrine as that, and I hope it will never undertake to do it. It is half a century after the close of the war, and the fact is that now they have been loyal all their lives, loyal to this Government, and they are loyal to it to-day. What is the use of talking about what the father thought back in the sixties?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will not take up the time of the Senate in taking up one after another the one hundred and more other cases. I simply wanted to get that issue here before the Senate and have it passed upon.

I wish to offer another amendment. I move to strike out, on page 56, from line 14 to line 23, both inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, it is proposed to strike out from line 14 to line 23, both inclusive, as follows:

To John Allman, formerly of Virginia City, now a resident of the State of California, $2,358.

To John M. Forsyth, formerly of Carson City, now a resident of the State of California, $2,728.

To Frank J. McWorthy, formerly of the State of Nevada, now a resident of the State of California, $450.

To Thomas Rodgers, formerly of Virginia City, now a resident of the State of California, $440.

To the legal representatives of James M. Thompson, deceased, late of Carson City, $3,730.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is here, I see; and I simply wish to call attention to the facts as they appear in the record in reference to these five claims.

It seems that in 1859 there were some raids made upon settlers out there by the Piute Indians. The settlers at Virginia City, at Carson City, and in the surrounding country voluntarily organized a company, made up of recruits, numbering some 125 to 130 men. They had an officer named Ormsby. They engaged in a battle with the Piutes at Pyramid Lake, and were defeated. There was no military force of the United States Government employed in it; there was no command given, no authority of the Government of the United States at all; but these volunteers in this fight with the Indians lost some property and supplies, abandoned some, and returned to their homes.

This old claim is for provisions, horses, and ammunition contributed by some of the citizens to the volunteers in this Indian uprising; and it seems that Maj. Ormsby received them, and distributed them among his men. There was no authority for it, and nothing representing any authority of the Government. It was an uprising such as has occurred probably in every State in this Union at its early history, of settlers to protect themselves; and yet that is the fact upon which this claim is based. Not one thing occurred from 1860 to 1891—that is nearly a generation—when a claim was presented for that amount. That is all the Court of Claims finds. I submit there is no reason why the Government should pay a claim of that sort. I move to strike it out of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I think this is a very just claim. These forces were engaged in the discharge of duties that ought to have been performed by the United States Army. They did a great service to the country and to civilization in meeting promptly an uprising of the Indians. They incurred certain expenses in this war, the expense of which ought to have been borne by the United States. The sum aggregates only $7,000 or $8,000. The facts have been ascertained by the Court of Claims. It seems to me that no just exception can be made to the justice of these claims.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, this omnibus claims bill is full of just such driftwood as that. If there were only one or two such claims contained in it we might wink at them and let them go, but the idea of coming in here and appropriating in the neighborhood of a million dollars for any such rubbish as that is preposterous. For instance, here are some claims from New Mexico. Is my friend, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] here? I do not want to take advantage of him, but I move to strike out the items from line 1 to line 7, on page 57.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, it is proposed to strike out from line 1 to line 6, both inclusive, as follows:

NEW MEXICO.

To Anastacio de Baca, administrator of Francisco de Baca, deceased, of Santa Ana County, $1,325.

To Edward H. Bergmann, of New Mexico, $1,200.

To W. J. Goodwin, of New Mexico, formerly of Woodruff County, Ark., $2,980.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, let me call attention to the first item here. Francisco de Baca claimed that his property was taken in 1862, and he attempted to prove the claim before the commissary general at that time. He could not prove that he owned the property, and he failed because he could not prove that he was loyal.

Mr. BRYAN. I consent to that amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then the claim slept for 38 years, and he comes in here and brings a report from the Court of Claims and gets his claim into this bill, and it is allowed here; you have not stricken it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I could consent that these items should go out while the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] is absent.

Mr. BRYAN. If there is anything in the bill for a disloyal citizen it ought to go out.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The finding is that he was disloyal.

Mr. BRYAN. Loyalty is a prerequisite.

Mr. BORAH. How did the item get in the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They went through the Court of Claims; they did not get anything from the Court of Claims; but because it went through the court it was inserted in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, I want to test one other amendment, and then I think I shall give up the struggle.

Mr. BORAH. I do not see why the Senator should be discouraged, as he secures the elimination of four items at a time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are so many of them that I fear it would take all night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would it suit the purpose of the Senator from South Dakota just as well to offer his amendment in the Senate?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are only two more items of this class to which I wish to direct attention. I move to strike from the bill under the Tennessee items the provision for the Humboldt Female College.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if I understand the objection of the Senator, it is that he thinks perhaps it is a case where an individual is trying to take advantage of a corporate name.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The institution has not been a going concern for long years; and now, after its doors have been closed and the corporation has become dormant and has practically gone out of business, a man comes up and has himself appointed receiver and initiates a claim for damage to that property.

Mr. BRYAN. I am willing for it to go out, and let it go into conference and let the claimant show that the claim is for the benefit of the institution, and not for the benefit of an individual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On what page is the amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can not give the page just now, because there are so many of these items.

Mr. BRYAN. The item is embraced in the first two lines on page 77.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 77 it is proposed to strike out:

To G. S. Lannom, receiver of the Humboldt Female College, of Gibson County, $4,100.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, I want to call attention to the item for St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Franklin. This is one of a class. Of course if the Senate wants to indorse that method of appropriating money I can not help it, and I am not going to pick out one after another of these items and consume time here.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator give me the page on which the item is found?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is the item for St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Franklin, on page 76, lines 18 and 19.

The basis of the claim with reference to the church arose in 1863, but no claim was made and no reference was made to the Court of Claims until 1902. Then they went to the court and submitted some evidence, and what does it show? It shows that a number of wardens and vestrymen of that church were in the Confederate Army; that the last official act of the wardens and vestrymen was in 1859; and that they never met again until 1869. No dates are given, but a general finding is made that some forces of the United States took possession and occupied the building. There is no finding as to how long it was occupied. It may have been occupied 20 minutes or 24 hours. A little company of soldiers might have stopped there over night. There is no description of the building. We do not know whether it was worth $150 or $5,000 or $25,000. There is no testimony whatever as to the way in which it was damaged or injured, but merely a statement that it was occupied; and upon the strength of that statement we find these vestrymen, some of whom, as I have said, were officers in the Confederate Army, after keeping quiet until 1902, coming here and asking to have an appropriation of $2,450.

In looking over these claims I can not help believing that some of the people down there thought this a nice way to get a contribution to construct an addition to their church or give it a little financial help. So, when they found it had been occupied a little while, they take a snap shot at it, come here, and get some findings that are so scant that they give the Congress no information at all, except that there was a church and an organization, some of the members of which served in the Confederate Army. Nothing else is given, except the mere statement of occupancy. They ask us to vote money in a case like that. That is a sample. There are dozens and scores of just such claims in this bill. I move to strike that item out. If you want to leave it in, there is no need of my going over 50 more of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, in the petition in this case it was stated by the officers of the church that it was used and occupied for two years, and that the repairs were reasonably worth $4,900. There was a claim of $6,100.

The Senator says that the findings do not show how long the church was occupied; that they do not show whether it was for a few minutes or longer; that they do not show the value of the church, nor enter into the details of the damage. Well, Mr. President, courts do not usually do that. The court states the ultimate facts. The testimony is produced in court in order to lead the court to a conclusion. Here was a claim for $6,100. Did the court sit there and let the claimant fix the amount of damages? The court found the damages to be reasonably worth $2,450, showing that the court had some idea of its duties, showing that the court, as I think might be assumed until the contrary appears, is not in the habit of reaching conclusions of law without something upon which to base its conclusions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if this were a case where the court entered judgment and enforced payment and had entire control, the remarks of the Senator would be in point; but the whole theory of the Court of Claims, so far as its findings are to be utilized at all, is that they shall ascertain the facts and transmit them to Congress in such a way as to give Congress full information upon which it may feel justified in voting money out of the Treasury of the United States and into the pockets of claimants.

When Congress made a provision of that kind in the law, it was certainly intended that the claimants should be able to submit to the Congress some facts. When it comes to presenting one or two statements of what the Senator calls "ultimate facts," without giving any information that will enable Congress to act intelligently in voting money to these claimants, I say that they should be the ones who should suffer by not having presented here in the form of findings something upon which we could act intelligently. Therefore I think this claim should be disallowed.

It is in marked contrast with other findings. You will find claims here where there are such specific findings that the court states, "This church was built in 1848. It was a large brick structure of certain dimensions; was in good state of repair; it was occupied from January, 1862, to March, 1864, by military forces of the United States, who used the pews for fuel or to heat their bake ovens, or took down the brick chimneys to construct bake ovens," and so on. When a case comes to Congress with findings like that, giving the value, the extent of the damage, and facts as to what the property was worth, I am perfectly willing, even although the claimants did delay presenting their claims, to pay them; but when they come here with no information as to whether the building was a good one or an old, ramshackle place, without any statement as to whether it was worth $50 or $75, with nothing but a mere statement that it was occupied, and then ask us to pay them three or four or five thousand dollars out of the Treasury, I do not believe we ought to pay such claims.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Is this a claim for use and occupation of the church?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are divided. Some of them are.

Mr. STERLING. I refer to the particular claim about which the Senator has been speaking, carrying an appropriation of $2,450.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is for use and occupation; I am quite sure it is.

Mr. STERLING. Do the findings state for how long a period the church was used?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, sir; only that it was used; that is all.

Mr. STERLING. That is one of the facts that ought to be found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Over and over again there are scores of claims here for rent because of churches that were used for hospitals and occupied from one day to six months; but the findings give you no information as to how long, and tell you nothing about the church, except that there was a church there and it was occupied, and that the reasonable value of it was so and so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, Mr. President, I am through. I simply wanted to get some of these cases which are typical before the Senate, and I hope the conferees will insist on putting an end to sending these stale old war claims to the Court of Claims, and that the jurisdiction will end. I believe that every Senator from the States where these claims arise down in his heart will be gratified to have an end to that sort of thing come, and I think you ought to come in now and help to put an end to it. Fifty years is long enough to have these old claims of this character hanging over Congress, and a new grist coming in every year.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am going to vote against this bill, but I shall not do anything to prevent a vote being reached. I have an amendment that I should like to see on the bill. It is a bill that has passed the House of Representatives and has been reported by the Senate committee; but if the Senator in charge of the bill thinks that placing it upon the bill would prevent its passage I will not offer it, though under those circumstances I do not see how it could prevent it. I refer to the child-labor bill, which I would very much like to see passed.

Mr. BRYAN. Why, Mr. President, it will take a number of hours to have the amendments to this bill printed and considered by the conferees. If we take 25 or 30 minutes longer on the bill, the bill is gone.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator thinks that offering this amendment would prevent a vote on the bill, I shall not offer it.

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senator from Nevada not to offer the amendment to this bill. There is a bill going to be taken up immediately after this that covers the subject of the amendment, which is for overtime for services rendered to the Government. A great many other Senators have been asked to offer amendments to this bill. I have been asked to offer 20 of them, by institutions as well as by individuals, but I have restrained from it, as every other Democrat has.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state my position with reference to the amendment. I will offer it first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Nevada," it is proposed to insert:

To John Glanzmann, Carson City, $3,296.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, this is a claim for $3,600 for overtime due to John Glanzmann——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if the Senator wants to put that amendment on this bill, in view of what I have said, in view of the fact that the War Claims Committee of the House will not consider claims of this kind, I will let it go on without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I demand a roll call on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. BRISTOW as managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed showing the committee amendments numbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be done anyhow.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in behalf of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 209, a bill to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield to permit me to present a couple of joint resolutions. They will take but a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not any doubt that we will reach the calendar now in a very little while, and this is virtually carrying out an agreement.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. All right, as long as I am not shut out.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe the Senator will be.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill has been read twice, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is, on page 4, line 24, to strike out the words "three-fourths" and insert in lieu thereof "one-half."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 1, after the word "Army," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following words:

Provided further, That the payments provided for in this act shall not be made or inure to the benefit of anyone whose income, together with that of his wife, exceeds $2,400 per annum, and the Secretary of War shall make such regulations as may be appropriate to make this proviso effective.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill—thoroughly opposed to it. I had intended, had it been reached earlier in the session, to present somewhat elaborately my views in opposition to it; but for reasons that are evident it will be useless to take up the time of the Senate now to do so. It will probably come up again at the next Congress, and there will be ample time then to discuss the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does it not require unanimous consent to take up the bill at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been taken up. It is in the Senate now, and on its final passage.

Mr. REED. I wish to inquire if unanimous consent to take it up was asked?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent was asked, and granted.

Mr. REED. Then I shall have to ask for a little better order in the Chamber, because I was not able to hear the Chair.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND subsequently said: Mr. President, I want to refer to the volunteer officers' retired list bill, which was passed in my absence. There are two amendments to that bill which I am sure every Member of the Senate would have agreed to reject if attention had been called to them. The object of passing the bill was to pass it in such form as to satisfy the beneficiaries of the bill. One of the amendments was to change the provision from one-half to three-fourths pay, and the other to strike out the property qualification.

I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, so that the two amendments may be disagreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now I move to disagree to the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN CLAIMS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Claims gave me the assurance that if the southern war-claims bill was passed he would call up the other claims bill that it was not advisable to attach to the war-claims bill, because of the fact that there are two committees on claims in the House. He was very much worn out and asked me to call it up for him. He has left the Chamber, but I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this companion piece, really, of the war-claims bill, Order of Business No. 594.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6120) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims without amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if I may be allowed a word I can perhaps expedite the matter.

This bill contains two classes of claims. One consists of claims of employees in the Government navy yards; and the claims arise out of an order made by the Secretary of the Navy before the eight-hour statute was enacted, but at a time when in practice they were enforcing eight-hour employment. He issued a general order that the timekeeper should keep a record of the labor performed by these workmen over the eight-hour period, and that they should be paid for that extra labor pro rata at the rate per hour that they were receiving for eight hours. The Secretary of the Navy made that order. It was posted in the navy yards, and was acted on there by the foremen in charge of these shops. The timekeeper kept a record of this extra time of these employees. Subsequently, of course, an eigh-hour-day law was enacted and has since prevailed.

These claims have been sent to the Court of Claims, and they have in each case taken testimony and reported what the wage of the workman was, what, according to the record, the extra time served was, and at that rate per hour how much the Government owes him. There is no dispute in regard to the facts. In each case where the Court of Claims rendered a finding it sets out this order of the Secretary of the Navy, and the finding of the extra work performed, and the rate.

There is another class of claims here in which it seems that a test was made of the right of Regular Army officers, who are allowed an increase under a longevity system, to have the period begin at the time of their entrance to the Military Academy at West Point, at which time they practically enlist and place themselves under the control of the Government.

A number of these men were settled with without having the benefit of that four-year period, and it made a considerable difference in their pay. The matter was taken over to the Treasury Department, and an adverse decision was rendered by the auditor; and then, subsequently, a test case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court held that the period did begin to run with their entry into the Military Academy at West Point. In the test case the court allowed the officer this additional compensation. Now, additional legislation for these cases that arose prior to that determination by the Supreme Court appears to be necessary to enforce equal treatment of these officers; and the second group of these claims is of that class entirely where the facts are not in dispute, but the decision of the court does not authorize the Navy Department to adjust the claims of these officers.

I make that statement so that the character of these claims may be understood.

Mr. REED. Why is it that they can not be adjusted under the decision of the court? Are they barred?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They claim that the comptroller is practically a law unto himself, and that no appeal can be taken from his decision; that one of the rules of martinets is that one will not reverse a position taken by the comptroller ahead of him, and that this legislation is necessary.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I offer the following amendment to be inserted at the appropriate place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. the sum of $26,400.30; Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., the sum of $65,792.53; and the estate of the late Henry A. V. Post, deceased, the sum of $50,359.35, as a refund of import duties paid in excess of the duties imposed by law on steel blooms, as found by the Court of Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following amendment to insert under the heading "New Hampshire."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add, under the heading "New Hampshire," the following:

To Emma M. Gay, widow and executrix of Thomas S. Gay, deceased, of New Hampshire, $477.65.

To Elvira S. Hardy, widow of James L. Hardy, deceased, of Hillsborough County, $293.85.

To Hazel O. Goodsoe, Perle E. Nute, Leonora W. Goodsoe, and E. Shirlet Rundlett, children of Augustus O. Goodsoe, deceased, of Rockingham County, $293.70.

To S. Augusta Tasker, widow of George E. Anderson, deceased, of Belknap County, $48.59.

To Marie S. Perrimond, widow of Xavier Perrimond, deceased, of Rockingham County, $60.

To Emma G. Jenness, widow of Thomas B. Gammon, deceased, of Rockingham County, $208.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GORE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,936,382"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$125,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Columbia" insert the following: ", but this shall not prevent the continued use for official service of motor trucks in the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals, which in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend, in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease, including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States, of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, wherever found and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances, when such owner has complied with all quarantine regulations, and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay not more than one-half of the expenses incurred by the owners of a certain herd of show cattle now in quarantine at Hawthorne Park, near Chicago, Ill., such expenses being incident to and on account of the quarantine of such cattle by the Government, but the total expense shall not exceed one-half the beef or dairy value of such cattle"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert:

"That there is hereby constituted a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to consist of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, and the chairmen of the Committees on Banking and Currency of the two Houses, and two other members of each of said committees, to be designated by the chairmen of the respective committees, and it shall be the duty of said joint committee to prepare, after such investigations as may be deemed necessary, and report to the Congress on or before January 1, 1916, a bill or bills providing for the establishment of a system of rural credits adapted to American needs and conditions. The sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, the same to be immediately available, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray all necessary expenses of said joint committee, payment of said expenses to be made upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said joint committee, who shall be selected by the committee."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,971,582"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS P. GORE,
HOKE SMITH,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if it is in order, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee making the conference report to state briefly what became of the rural-credits amendment? What disposition has been made of the matter? I could not gather it from the reading of the report.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, the Senate agreed to an amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In the House that amendment was concurred in with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. It was, indeed, an entire substitute for what I may call the McCumber amendment. The two measures differ radically from beginning to end. There are so many differences and they are such material differences that the conferees were unable to agree. As a consequence of that, the conferees on the part of both Houses receded from their respective propositions, and, in effect, report in favor of creating a joint committee of the two Houses to consider and prepare and report a bill or bills upon this subject to Congress on or before January 1 next.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, both the Senate amendment and the House amendment are eliminated from the conference report?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; they are.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the part of the conference report relating to rural credit be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be again read.

The Secretary read the part of the report indicated.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I offered the other day an amendment to this bill providing for rural credits. I became satisfied some time ago that any scheme for rural credits which would have the effect of decreasing the interest rate to the farmer must be a scheme that would have back of it a certain degree of national credit. I therefore prepared a very simple bill in which I avoided any independent banking system for the use of the farmers. I can see no necessity for another great top-heavy system as extensive and as far-reaching and as complex as the Federal reserve bank system. I was opposed to that method for the reason that the overhead charges in conducting such a system of banks and corporations and societies would be so heavy that the effect would be that the interest which would have to be charged the farmer would not be any less than it is to-day.

I therefore proposed to utilize the present system of banks of the United States, making each one of those banks, State as well as Federal, Government agencies, through which farm mortgages should be received and transmitted to the bureau of rural credits, such mortgages not to exceed in value 50 per cent of the value of the farm property; that when a few thousand of these mortgages were received in the bureau of rural credits in the Treasury Department, the Government might then issue its debentures to the face value of the mortgages which would run from 10 to 20 years, bearing 4½ per cent interest and sold to investors, preference being given to small investors, and the debentures to be made in multiples of $100, the idea being that we would receive for these farm loans money from the same source as that which goes into the farm loans of the country to-day; that we would bring the farmer and the investor together through the medium of the Government acting rather as broker than lender.

While my bill provided that the Government should issue its debentures, the Government was well protected, holding not only the mortgages themselves in double the value of the debentures issued by the Government, but having, in addition to that, the liability of the maker of the mortgage.

Senators can easily see that under that system the Government would in reality be investing nothing, because whenever it advanced money in payment of mortgages it would issue its own debentures and receive the money back from the investor to which the debenture was sold.

The only objection I heard to this scheme was that I provided in my bill for the sale of the debentures at par. I judge from the discussion in the House that the idea was that the Government should have the right to sell the debentures for whatever it could secure for them, and if it could secure a premium it should be allowed a profit on them. That was not the purpose of my amendment. By providing that only the small investor should be recognized first in the application it was sought not to allow these debentures to become the subject of speculation by great moneyed institutions, but to dispose of them solely as a means of bringing the farmer and lender together.

I know, and I think anyone who has studied the farm-loan business will know, that there are a great many investors in the country—widows who have been left with little sums of money, trustees, and so forth—who would be perfectly willing to loan at 4 or 4½ per cent on good, long-time paper; but if we were to allow these debentures to be sold to the highest bidder they would simply be bought up by the great financial concerns of the country and again sold for speculation. That is what I tried to avoid, and that was why I made provision that they should be sold at par, preference to be given to the small investor.

Mr. President, that proposition was amended in the House by what was known in the Senate as the Hollis bill, with an amendment which provided that the Government should borrow money on Panama Canal bonds and use the proceeds of such bonds, not to purchase farm mortgages, but to purchase the bonds of the banks that were to be created under this new system, which bonds, of course, would be backed by the farmers' paper.

The great trouble about that system, as I have suggested, is that it is so complex that it necessarily would be very expensive, even if you could get people to invest their money in a corporation of that kind.

Then, there was no fixed rate of interest, but, on the contrary, each bank was left to get about what interest it could get, provided the rate did not go above what the State laws would allow. There was nothing which would insure a lower rate of interest than what the farmer is now paying.

I regret very much, Mr. President, that this simple method which I proposed could not be adopted. I am making no complaint against the committee of conference. As suggested by the chairman, there was a very radical difference between the House and the Senate measure. I shall have to vote against this conference report for the reason that I think it ought to have contained a provision for farm credits that would have been actually beneficial to the farmers of the country. The conference committee has cut out all present legislation for rural credits and substituted a commission for further investigation.

Mr. President, I received a telegram a short time ago, and I have received several others during the last few days, from Mr. Herbert Myrick, who is the editor and the owner of a number of farm papers. He has been extremely interested in securing a good farm-credit bill. I ask that this telegram may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., March 3, 1915.

Senator MCCUMBER,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of farmers of America I have this moment wired conferees on rural credits suggestions for basis of agreement that should satisfy both sides upon the moot problem of Government aid. Market for these farm bonds will be broad and active. The bonds will be greedily absorbed by investors. If the one point at issue is solved, along lines of my suggestion, Hollis rural credits amendment should be so workable as to become a practical success. The Republican Party can not afford to antagonize this greatest of all reforms.

The vast agricultural constituency which I represent has conceded much to all three parties. We beseech you to concede something likewise. Withdraw your filibuster and promptly enact rural credits. Am assured this morning President would approve bill.

HERBERT MYRICK,
President National Farm Power Periodicals, including Northwest Farmstead, of Minneapolis; Orange Judd Farmer, of Chicago; Southern Farming, of Atlanta; American Agriculturist, of New York; New England Homestead, of Springfield; Farm and Home, of Springfield and Chicago; Dakota Farmer, of Aberdeen.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to call especial attention to the last paragraph, which reads:

I beseech you to concede something likewise. Withdraw your filibuster and promptly enact rural credits. Am assured this morning President would approve bill.

I think that Mr. Myrick has had some wrong information concerning any filibuster upon this bill, which has been in the committee of conference. I am certain that that committee has worked diligently and earnestly to secure an agreement between the two Houses and to secure a farmers' credit bill, if it were possible to do so. I wish to correct that error here. The bill has not been filibustered by either Democrats or Republicans. I certainly was willing to concede anything that might bring about an agreement which would give any rural credit law. But when a matter is in conference no one except the six conferees can act, and I must assume they have tried to compose their differences.

He also states that the President would sign this bill. I can hardly conceive, from what the President said the other day, that he would sign a bill that either contained the measure which I introduced or the measure which was adopted by the House. His objection seems to be based upon opposition to any kind of governmental liability. And inasmuch as the bill which I introduced and which I offered as an amendment provided not for the Government loaning to the farmer, but simply a guaranty of his paper, which would require practically a very small sum of money to initiate it, and inasmuch as the amendment which the House attached as a substitute for the one which I introduced provided for $50,000,000 a year to be expended by the Government to purchase the bonds of this new banking system, I feel quite certain that there would have been the same objection of the Executive toward that measure that he had toward the one which I introduced. In any event, I think that the committee has undoubtedly handled the subject in the best way it could. We are right at the close of the session. These bills have not been thoroughly considered by the Senate; and I appreciate the fact that it is a very short time indeed to put through a proposition of such magnitude as this, but I sincerely hope that the commission, which has been provided for in this amended proposition, will bring about some effective and good results; and, above all, that whatever measure shall be brought forward will be divested of the complexity contained in the measure which was adopted in the House, and which will also be devoid of the everlasting red tape, and which will not add an enormous machinery to the present system of banking.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is impossible to know exactly what the conference committee did by simply listening to the reading of the report. I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma two or three questions. I first ask the Senator what became of amendment No. 35, in regard to the National Forest Reservation Commission?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, is that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. GORE. I will say, Mr. President, that the amendment was given serious consideration. One of the House conferees is a member of the forestry commission to which the Senator refers, and feels the deepest interest in the consummation of the plan. The House conferees, however, were unwilling that this measure should go in the agricultural appropriation bill at this time. I think, however, that I betray no confidence or secrets of the committee when I say that it was agreed among them that they would take the matter up early in the next session and would have a hearing on the subject and would give it prompt attention.

I may say that no member of the conference committee on either side questioned the justice of the amendment. It provided for the payment of two payments which have heretofore accrued and which lapsed on account of circumstances which I need not relate. There is no doubt that it is an obligation due on the part of the Government, and it will be met in due season.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, Mr. President, I infer from the observation of the Senator that the amendment really received sympathetic consideration?

Mr. GORE. I think it did.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that those of us who are interested in the matter may well hope that in the next Congress that lapsed money will be appropriated for the purposes of the commission?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is a plain obligation of the Government, and is necessary to the carrying out of the plan which the Government has undertaken. I assume that there is no doubt of the appropriation being made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator about three other amendments, and then I will not detain the Senate further.

Mr. GORE. I will be glad to answer the Senator so far as I am able.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are three amendments, numbered, respectively, 66, 75, and 76. Amendment numbered 66 made an appropriation for experiments in dairying and live-stock production in the semiarid regions; amendment numbered 75 contained an appropriation for experiments in live-stock production in the cane and sugar growing districts; and amendment numbered 76 carried an appropriation for live-stock production in the New England States. I will ask the Senator if he can offhand tell what became of those three amendments?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will take pleasure in doing so. The appropriation for the experimental demonstration work in connection with live-stock production in the State of Louisiana was retained in the bill. An appropriation of $60,000 for the same purpose was made in the appropriation bill of last year. The work is in process of being carried out by the department now, and a good deal of the appropriation has been expended, just as a good deal of the money in connection with the forest reserve, to which the Senator referred a moment ago, has been expended, and the appropriation of $3,000,000 to which he adverted will be necessary in order to carry out that scheme in good faith. The department thought that another appropriation of $60,000 was essential to the consummation of the work in Louisiana, and in default of the appropriation it felt that the money heretofore expended would have been indeed wasted.

The appropriation in reference to demonstration in connection with live-stock production in the arid regions was proposed for the first time this year. It was estimated for and recommended by the department, but the House conferees would not consent to the retention of that item. It was their policy not to institute any new work this year, so far as it was possible to avoid so doing. That reason controlled them in their refusal to accede to that amendment.

I may say, with reference to the amendment in connection with the demonstration in the production of live stock in New England, that the proposition was submitted to the Agricultural Department, and they stated that it would not be possible for them to carry out such a plan in so brief a time; that they had no organization for the expenditure of the money or for the conduct of the service successfully. They stated that it would be necessary to make a preliminary survey upon which to base such demonstration work, and I assume that that course will be pursued. I have no doubt it will be, if the Senator from New Hampshire prefers such a request or suggests it to the department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his lucid statement as to these amendments. I anticipated that that would be about what would happen, and I do not find any fault with the conclusions that have been reached. I thank the Senator for the suggestion that possibly in the near future New England may have an opportunity to participate in this most worthy enterprise, and that an appropriation will be made for that purpose.

Last year when an appropriation was made for the cotton and cane growing sections I favored it very strongly, and I believe I said that I looked upon it as a consolation prize to Louisiana for having had her sugar production destroyed by the ill-advised tariff legislation of the Democratic Party, and I am glad that the work is to be continued.

So far as the interests of New England are concerned in that regard, if I am here at the next session, I shall endeavor to persuade the committee that we have a section of country admirably suited for an experiment of this kind, and I shall hope to be successful in getting an appropriation. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that no one will take more interest than I shall in the institution of any infant industry in New England, even of the character of live-stock production.

I may say, too, as it will concern and interest the Senator, that an appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars was made to maintain the quarantine in the State of Maine in the interest of the potato producers; that $50,000 was appropriated for the exchange of lands in the State of Washington; that an increase of $170,000 was made in the item for the extermination of wolves in the Northwest, making $280,000 in all for that purpose; that $60,000 was appropriated for demonstration in live-stock production in Louisiana; and an increase of 40 per cent was granted in the appropriation for the eradication of cattle ticks in the South, making it, as we thought, a pretty harmonious measure and a pretty fair distribution of these merited considerations.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question about the conference report upon the Agricultural bill. I just came into the Chamber, and therefore I am not familiar with the report of the conferees. I desire to know what became of the amendment adopted by the Senate providing for payment to people who had blooded cattle taken care of at great expense in order to prevent the authorities from killing them upon the supposition that they had the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. GORE. The Senator refers to the stock-show cattle at Chicago?

Mr. JAMES. The stock-show cattle—the blooded cattle.

Mr. GORE. That item was retained in the bill.

Mr. JAMES. So the bill provides, then, for payment to the people who own these cattle and who went to this very great expense to prevent their being slaughtered?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. I am very glad to know that. I should like to ask the Senator, further, if there was any amendment adopted in the House which came to conference providing that in case cattle had to be killed on account of the foot-and-mouth disease, where they were blooded cattle or breeding cattle, the owners should be paid not more than four times their beef value; or, in other words, such owners of cattle of this kind according to their utility value?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; there was no amendment of that sort.

Mr. JAMES. There was no amendment of that sort in the House?

Mr. GORE. No, sir.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question about the item with reference to sinking artesian wells.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the Senate conferees were obliged to surrender that item.

Mr. JONES. I am very sorry; but I know that the Senate conferees did the best they could in relation to the matter.

I also heard a statement with reference to an appropriation for the exchange of lands in Washington, but my attention was distracted and I did not gather just what action was taken.

Mr. GORE. That item was retained in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word about our action upon the propositions presented by the different Houses with reference to a rural-credits system.

For many, many years the owners of small tracts of land in rural sections, when seeking to make loans, have found it necessary to pay exorbitant prices for the money obtained, together with high charges for obtaining it. This has been due largely to the fact that their loans have been made in small sizes, and that those investing money in this way were not familiar with the local conditions of the various rural sections where the farmer sought to obtain a small loan on his farm.

For the past two years there has been a most earnest study of this subject with a view of presenting a plan by which these natural difficulties might be overcome, and by which the farm lands of the country, furnishing as they do the very best basis for credit, might be known and their owners have recognized their real value as a basis for loans. This will lower rates of interest and lessen the cost to the farmer when borrowing money secured by farm lands.

So many different measures have come before the Senate and the House, and these measures have been prepared on such diverging plans, that it has been difficult to reach a conclusion and determine a plan. Nothing illustrates this fact more clearly than the entire difference between the House provision and the Senate provision. One covered about 2 pages and the other over 90 pages. One had practically no machinery and the other had a vast detail of machinery. It was simply impossible for the conferees to get together, however deeply desirous they were of perfecting a bill.

I only wish to add that the most intense purpose to perfect a satisfactory measure, which will bring to the small landowner in rural sections the power to obtain money at low rates, and thereby falicitate the opportunity for tenants to become the owners of the farms upon which they work, inspired every member of the conference committee. I confidently hope that before the 1st of next January the joint committee provided for in the resolution, if it be adopted, will be able to lay before the Senate and the House a measure which can be accepted by both.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to make a report from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and ask for the adoption of the resolution. It is a resolution referring the bills to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object to the consideration of that resolution now.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the Senator will not do that. It will take only a moment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, there are a hundred or two hundred cases on the calendar. They have been on the calendar for a long time, and I do not propose to consent to have any reports made and passed upon now until we take up the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WHITE. Then I will ask to withdraw the report.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma what became of the amendment to the Agricultural bill providing for the appropriation of half a million dollars for the construction of lakes and reservoirs on the lands of the West between the ninety-eighth meridian and the foothills of the Rocky Mountains?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that that was one of the reasons why the committee was so late in reporting. The House conferees refused to accede to that amendment, and owing to the proximity of the end of the session we felt obliged to surrender on that point. I appreciate the earnest interest which the Senator from Kansas has taken in this measure. I have discussed it with him frequently. I think it is possibly fraught with great advantages to that section; but unfortunately there are two sides to these conference commitees, and we found it impossible to prevail upon the House conferees to accept that amendment at this time. I may say that they expressed it as their earnest conviction that they would be unable to prevail upon the House to consent to that amendment even in case the conferees should acquiesce in the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he feels that the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate at the next session can take up that matter and give it consideration with a view of organizing a plan by which this work can be started?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there is no doubt but that the proposition ought to be preceded, if it has not been, by a thorough survey and all the data obtained upon which so vast a plan, promising such benefits in case of its success, should be worked out with great care and great deliberation. Otherwise, the money would not be advantageously expended; but if the plan can be brought to success in accordance with the Senator's desires and wishes, it would rescue in great measure that vast and splendid section from the affliction of hot winds which would bring under the dominion of the plow one of the most magnificent sections in this or any other country.

I may say that my home is situated west of the ninety-eighth meridian, in the very section to which the amendment related, and I, therefore, had every motive to sympathize with the purposes of the Senator from Kansas. I, of course, could not make any definite promises or assurances, as I should be unwilling to mislead the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I have no doubt of the Senator's desire to promote legislation of this kind; but I desire to state that, as he will remember, last year we obtained the insertion by the Senate of a provision in the bill which looked to a survey of the region referred to, the location of the sites of lakes and reservoirs, and the measuring of the streams, the run-off water of that vast area. Unfortunately that appropriation was lost in conference. The effort was renewed, as the Senator well remembers, at this session of Congress in an effort to have a plan formulated to care for the water which runs to waste, which when it leaves the plain becomes in the valley of the Mississippi and its tributaries an element of destruction, while if impounded upon the plains it would be a source of vast production, making life more attractive as well as producing vast wealth; and this country of ours can not begin this work too soon. There is no provision in this bill, as full as it is of experiments and efforts to benefit the productive resources of our country, that has such vast possibilities for good as the one which I regret to say the Senator advises me has been lost.

If there were anything I could do, if there were anything within my power under the rules of the Senate, any means to which I could resort to force that appropriation back into this bill, I would not hesitate to do it, because I think that by leaving it out an injustice is done to that region of the country which has received very little benefit, directly at least, from the Federal Government. The seashores, the rivers, and the harbors receive millions and millions every year. With few exceptions the millions that are expended there are far less productive of benefit to the country than equal amounts would be expended along the lines suggested by this amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I have been informed since coming into the Chamber—I was not here when the report was brought in and read—that the appropriation of $87,000 made by the Senate for experiments in live-stock and dairy farming in connection with the dry-farming experimental stations has been stricken out in conference. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if that is true?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I regret to say to the Senator that that is true. I think there is no amendment in the bill of greater importance. I think it is a duty which our Government owes to the people whom it has induced to settle upon the arid lands of the West to make demonstrations in live-stock production and in dairy production that will enable them to concentrate their products and sell the produce of the farm in the form of live stock. I think it is an obligation which this Government owes to those people.

I felt the keenest interest in that amendment. I think it ought to be done. I think it will be done. I will say to the Senator, however—he probably was not in the Chamber—that this is the first time this amendment has been proposed. It was estimated for by the department. The House conferees adopted a policy of rejecting all new propositions in this bill, and adhered to it with great decision, and I think almost without variation. I need not suggest to the Senator the reason for that policy on their part. It was the state of the national finances. That policy, however, was adopted by the House conferees and was adhered to. This being a new proposal, submitted for the first time, it fell under the ban of that policy. I regret that it did so, and I hope that in the next agricultural appropriation bill this item will be carried. If I can contribute to that result, it certainly will not be overlooked.

Mr. STERLING. I simply wish to say that after the estimate made by the department for this appropriation, after the very careful examination into the matter by the authorities of the Agricultural Department and the report of a commission appointed by, I think, the Secretary of Agriculture, and after what I know of the situation in that region, so far as it pertains to my State, it is a great surprise and a great disappointment to me that that has been stricken out in conference. As the Senator is perhaps well aware, it is a region of the country where only forage crops are raised, and to make farming at all profitable, to keep those settlers there, it is necessary that they have, in connection with this forage-crop raising, the dairy and the live-stock business. If they had that business, it would be a prosperous country, but as it is the country, of course, can not very well prosper.

I am glad to have some assurances from the Senator to the effect that he is friendly to this proposition, and I believe that hereafter it will have his support.

Mr. GORE. Let me say that I keenly appreciate and heartily indorse every word the Senator from South Dakota has said.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish time permitted that I might submit some observations on this very great subject of rural credits.

It has been my privilege to have something to do with that matter for some three years, and I should have been glad if the committee could have reported a bill upon that subject. I believe the time is not far distant when such legislation will be placed upon the statute books. There is a widespread public demand for it, and a great need. If the conference committees had been hunting for a solution of that problem, I should have recommended to them, if given the opportunity, the bill which the United States commission, composed of seven members appointed by the President under the act of 1913, reported to the Senate and to the House. That bill had the approval not only of the members of that commission but of the President in its essential and substantial features, as well as the Secretary of Agriculture and others well informed upon the subject.

However, it seemed impossible for the conferees to thrash out and put into shape the measure at this time; and while disappointed in that respect, I would not delay the adoption of this report by urging that they give that matter further consideration.

I would also remind the Senate and those concerned that there is now a commission that is considering this subject, appointed by the President pursuant to the act of Congress; and yet I am in perfect agreement with the conferees in establishing the commission proposed in the report. I am all the more gratified and in more agreement with them when I know that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate will be a member of this new commission, as he was and is a member of the existing United States commission.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that the report does not provide for a new commission; it simply provides for a joint committee of the two Houses.

Mr. FLETCHER. A joint committee—I understand. There seems to be no wide difference except in the name. I would observe further that in the raising of that committee I should be further gratified if a member of the United States Commission, Representative Moss of Indiana, a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the House, might be a member also of this joint committee. I shall indulge that hope if the joint committee be established.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting article on rural credits by the senior Senator from Florida, who has just addressed the Senate. It appears in the National Magazine for February. I commend its careful reading to everyone interested in the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

RURAL CREDITS.

[By DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, United States Senator from Florida.]

The popular picture of the farmer, rosy and rotund, riding in his automobile over splendid roads, attending fairs, picnics, and camp meetings, with the best of things to eat, fine clothes, and plenty of leizure, I regret to say, is overdrawn when applied to every, or even the average, farmer.

The idea that when he plows he simply jumps into a spring seat and guides his machine plow over the fertile fields while he views the landscape and whistles with the birds as he enjoys the beauties of nature, and when the glorious day is all too soon spent he comes home and turns on the electric lights throughout the barnyard, his elegantly furnished residence being already aglow, sets the machinery going to feed and water his stock, and, after a rich supper partaken to the music of Caruso, revels in Habana cigars and the latest novel until time for his bath, which he takes in his marble tub, where he turns on the hot and cold water supplied in the most modern fashion, as in the most expensive hotels of the city—is scarcely correct in all its details.

The figures given and accepted as substantially accurate show there are 12,000,000 farmers in the United States, and the value of farm property, including animals, amounts to some $40,000,000,000. The last report of the Department of Agriculture gives the value of all farm crops, farm-animal products, and farm animals sold and slaughtered as aggregating, for the last year, $9,872,926,000. Assuming that of this, two-thirds, or $6,500,000,000 worth went to market, the remainder being consumed on the farm, it is estimated the consumers paid $13,900,000,000 for that two-thirds, which means that some $7,000,000,000 disappeared between the farm and the breakfast table. The figures indicate that the average wealth of each farmer is $3,333, and the average gross income of each is $791.

Some farmers are worth more and have larger incomes. This means that others are worth less and have smaller incomes.

We also find that the farmers of the United States owe approaching $6,000,000,000, some $3,000,000,000 of which is secured by mortgages on their farms and homes. They pay from 6 per cent to 20 per cent per annum interest on this indebtedness, bench fees, commissions, and other charges. The annual interest charge is estimated at $510,000,000—about 8½ per cent.

This of itself is no small sum to be subtracted from the farmers' earnings. No other industry showing similar assets and liabilities is called on to carry such a burden. The market quotations show that industrial 5 per cent bonds are selling at par, 6 per cent at 102½, and 4 per cent at 90; United States refunding 2 per cent bonds are selling at 96, 3 percents at par, 100; United States 4 per cent registered at 108½ and coupon 109½, while Panama 3 percents are quoted at 99. The farmers, with their forty billions of assets, must pay an average of 8½ per cent on their indebtedness, and are often unable to get money at all for financing their operations. We can marshal the collective resources of those engaged in agriculture, make the mobilized resources a basis for credit, adjust the credit machinery so as to cut that interest in half.

We might as well own the truth and examine the conditions from a common-sense standpoint and deal with the situation in a practical way.

There is real and pressing need for the betterment of rural conditions, making country life more attractive, agriculture more remunerative, giving financial aid suited to the needs of agriculture, and improving business methods, which should be put into practice.

As presidents of banks and financiers, farmers are not much in evidence. The hard facts are that, generally speaking, there is no occupation exacting greater industry, toil, and stricter economy, amid more crude and rugged surroundings and fewer luxuries.

The farmer has to contend with drought, floods, frosts, fires, bad seasons, insects, and inability to get labor just when he wants it. The rain comes to spoil his hay or grain after he has made it, the sun refuses to shine when he needs it most. His cattle or hogs become diseased, his horses or mules get crippled, the rains keep the ground too wet to plow and grasshoppers take his crops; or the weather is so dry that the crop will not grow; the roads are in bad condition and he has great difficulty hauling produce to market; just when he wishes to sell there is a glut and no demand for his produce; his bills for supplies become due—to the merchant, to the fertilizer dealer, at the bank, to the doctor, the minister, the school-teacher—all to be paid just when the product of the year's toil will yield but little, if any, more than it cost to produce.

He has enjoyed the pleasures of unremitting and hard work, plenty of fresh air, plain but wholesome food, common clothes, and no luxuries. He finds himself generally about one year behindhand—that is, if he had in hand all that he can earn the next year, his assets would cancel his liabilities.

This is not a very much exaggerated picture. Unfortunately, it represents too truly the lot of the average small farmers, and they constitute a very large majority of those engaged in agriculture. It ought not to be the case. Those hard-working, honest, sober, sturdy, manly yeomen ought to have a much more satisfactory experience and a much brighter prospect.

They get less compensation for the same amount of labor than any other workers. Their industry yields smaller pecuniary returns than almost any other occupation. No wonder the outlook is discouraging to the country lad. No wonder the ambitious boy inclines to turn his attention to something else. What inducement does farming offer to him? What attraction does country life afford? These priests of nature who dwell nearest the fountain of life in the divine economy deserve better things and a more satisfying career.

How can they get it?

Chiefly in two ways: First, by lessening their burdens; second, by increasing their earnings.

You may say that sounds logical and reasonable, but then comes into your mind the query, what has Congress to do with that—how is that to be even helped by legislation?

I do not claim that these results can be wholly accomplished by legal enactments. There is no legal pulmotor we can invent that by itself will restore life to languishing agriculture. On the other hand, I claim we can provide certain machinery which, if the farmer himself will make proper use of—which I have no doubt he will do—we can put him in the way of working out for himself both those results.

We will have done all we can in blazing the way and giving him the tools whereby he will hew to success. Short of that we should not stop. Our duty to the greatest of all industries, to the largest number of people who fight the battles of our country in time of war and produce its food in time of peace, to every man, woman, and child in the land, because they must all eat and wear clothes, demands that we persevere until we have attained the ends desired. The experience of older countries where agriculture has attained its highest development furnishes us a guide. What has been done abroad in redeeming agriculture and placing the farmer in a prosperous condition, we surely can do. The spirit of Themistocles who exclaimed, "The trophies of Miltiades will not suffer me to sleep," and the nobler purpose of serving the industrious, conservative, patriotic tillers of the soil, and in doing this the highest and best interests of America and Americans should inspire us to shake off indifference and procrastination, and apply our whole strength to a solution of the problem.

Some elements involved we can not control. The seasons and the great laws and forces of nature we can not alter. The Department of Agriculture has done much for the farmer, by helping him to combat the diseases which beset his animals and plants, by pointing out the best methods of selecting seed, and planting, cultivating, and handling his crops; in road building, housing, caring for and using his produce, employing machinery, and even in marketing his surplus. It is also demonstrating how he can increase his yield and giving him the results of scientific experiments to his great advantage. This national work is most helpful in supplying a part of the remedies needed.

THE BURDEN OF INTEREST CHARGES—LACK OF FINANCIAL FACILITIES.

Even if we could do nothing more than reduce materially the enormous burden of exhorbitant interest and charges now borne by the farmers, we should enable them to save some $250,000,000 every year.

I am thoroughly satisfied such relief can be provided for by the commission bill, S. 4246, and in its modified form No. 7184—now pending—as the result of research in European countries, where the people have been obliged to meet and solve the problems with which we are just now face to face, and the studies of the United States Commission on Rural Credits in cooperation with the American commission under the act of March 3, 1913.

Such a plan is feasible and highly desirable. It contemplates the establishment of a system of farm-mortgage banks, under Government supervision. This is a field for Federal legislation—the problem is a national one.

Permit me, in order to preserve the true history of the development of the plan now under consideration, to mention briefly how the movement began, took shape, and step by step led up to this bill.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO MEET REQUIREMENTS OF AGRICULTURE.

While the subject of rural credits is not absolutely new in this country, reference to it in the past never received serious attention. There was no systematic or effective effort to make the subject understood. Of course, until that happened, there could be no intelligent legislative action.

American students and representatives in foreign countries had pointed out that the United States had made no suitable financial provision for the agriculturalist, but that was as far as we got until early in 1912, literature issued by the International Institute of Agriculture and correspondence with the American delegate, Mr. David Lubin, induced the Southern Commercial Congress to take up the matter with him and later with the State Department and President Taft. The Southern Commercial Congress invited Mr. Lubin to address our fourth annual convention at Nashville, and obtained leave of absence for him, and he accepted on condition that we assemble representatives from the various States a week prior to the convention and devote that time to a thorough study of the subject. Twenty-seven States sent their representatives to that conference. Mr. Lubin addressed the convention, and a resolution was adopted calling on the Southern Commercial Congress to undertake to assemble a commission to be composed of two selected men from each State to go to Europe and investigate, on the ground the various systems there in operation primarily intended to benefit agriculture. We took the subject up with the governors of the various States and with the farmers' organizations throughout the country, receiving a general indorsement of the plan. A joint resolution was passed by Congress and signed by the President accrediting such commission to foreign Governments. The agricultural bill was later passed containing provisions for a Federal commission of seven to be appointed by the President "to cooperate with the American commission assembled under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress." On April 26, 1913, we assembled in New York the American commission, composed of 2 from each of 35 States and 4 Canadian Provinces, and these, together with 5 of the United States commission, sailed for Rome, where they were received by the King and Queen of Italy at the home of the International Institute of Agriculture. Plans were made through the delegates to the institute, which is participated in by 52 nations, under treaty, for a tour of 14 European countries. The commissions were aided by every facility the various Governments could and did offer, and returned home July 28, 1913. As chairman of the American commission and also chairman of the United States commission, I feel that, in common fairness to them and to their work there, I should refer to these facts. Full justice to these public-spirited, capable agencies would necessitate a more detailed statement than I shall offer. The former made report to the governors of the various States and the latter to Congress. The evidence collected and data gathered from all these countries will be found printed in Senate Document No. 214, parts 1, 2, and 3, which is the most complete, authoritative, and instructive publication on the subject in print anywhere. A supplement to it is given as "Observations of the American Commission," Senate Document No. 261, part 2.

It would not be possible now, and probably never will be again, to avail ourselves of the opportunity for obtaining the information and collecting the valuable material furnished in that document.

The United States Commission, after a careful study of all this material, including the laws of the various countries, and conditions in the United States, prepared its report to Congress, known as Senate Document No. 380, parts 1, 2, and 3. The report, including the bill desired, was presented to the House by Congressman Moss, a member of the commission (H. R. 12585), and to the Senate by myself (S. 4246) on January 29, 1913, except that part 3, "Personal or short-term credit," was not presented until March 13, 1914. The bill was referred to the Banking and Currency Committees, respectively. They appointed subcommittees on rural credits, and these met in joint session for the purpose of giving hearings, and carefully considering the whole subject. They devoted much time and intelligent study to the question, and at the close of these hearings the subcommittees drafted and presented a bill which contains the main features of the commission bill S. 4246 (H. R. 12585), with some additional features, and that bill has likewise been referred to the Committees on Banking and Currency and is S. 5542 (H. R. 16478).

The whole country has been interested as rarly before on any measure, and a realizing sense of the importance of and the need for the legislation is nation wide.

The platforms of all three political parties contained pledges in behalf of the movement. President Wilson, as was President Taft, is in full sympathy with the efforts which have been put forth, and which I am certain are to result in effective and beneficial legislation. Nearly one-third of the President's great address to Congress on December 2, 1913, was devoted to this question, and in this he said, among other things:

"I present to you, in addition, the urgent necessity that special provision be made also for facilitating the credits needed by the farmers of the country. * * * The farmers, of course, ask and should be given no special privilege, such as extending to them the credit of the Government itself. What they need and should obtain is legislation which will make their own abundant and substantial credit resources available as a foundation for joint, concerted local action in their own behalf in getting the capital they must use. It is to this we should now address ourselves.

"It has, singularly enough, come to pass that we have allowed the industry of our farms to lag behind the other activities of the country in its development. I need not stop to tell you how fundamental to the life of the Nation is the production of its food.

* * * * * * *

"We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit constantly and easily available, and command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We lag behind many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this. Systems of rural credit have been studied and developed on the other side of the water, while we left our farmers to shift for themselves in the ordinary money market. You have but to look about you in any rural district to see the result, the handicap, and embarrassment which have been put upon those who produce our food.

"Conscious of this backwardness and neglect on our part, the Congress recently authorized the creation of a special commission to study the various systems of rural credit which have been put in operation in Europe, and this commission is already prepared to report. Its report ought to make it easier for us to determine what methods will be best suited to our own farmers."

Hitherto our financial system has been exclusively intended to serve the capitalist, merchant, manufacturer, and those engaged in industries other than agriculture. It is no wonder that it has been found incomplete as well as discriminating in its operations.

Under that system, created, supervised, and controlled by the Government, there was a direct, express prohibition against accepting real estate as security for loans, and we must agree with the farmer that he not only was not taken care of, but was absolutely discriminated against, because real estate has always been his chief asset. The one main resource of the 12,000,000 farmers in this country was stricken down by the law as a basis for credit. It is really astonishing that for 50 years we have neglected to provide any financial system to meet the needs of agriculture. It is more astounding, when we think, that the system we did establish made objectionable and unavailable for credit purposes, to a very large extent at least, their $40,000,000,000 worth of resources. The result might have been expected. It should have long ago been corrected. But for the quantity and quality of our lands adapted to agriculture we would have experienced a depression in this country and a high living cost which would have meant distress and national weakness beyond comprehension.

I hope it is not too late to remedy by legislation this discouragement of agricultural interests with all its evil and disastrous consequences, whose beginning we must already recognize, as it appears that:

(a) Production is not keeping pace with the increase of population.

(b) The number of tenants are increasing and occupying owners decreasing. The census shows that in 1880, 25 per cent of all American farms were operated by tenants; in 1890 this percentage had increased to 28, and in 1900 to 35 per cent.

(c) The tendency is away from the farms and toward the cities and towns.

(d) Our exports of foodstuffs are relatively decreasing, while our imports are increasing, as, for instance, we are already importing beef and even corn from Argentina; our farmers are paying higher rates of interest than those engaged in any other industry.

(f) Our farmers are unable to obtain financial accommodation except upon very burdensome terms.

(g) Agriculture does not advance and is losing spirit, and its products will soon not equal the home demand, greatly increasing the cost of living.

The objects to be gained by the proposed legislation now pending are:

(1) Securing cheaper money for the farmer. This will lessen his burdens directly, and to a larger extent indirectly, since the farmer requires capital just as those engaged in other industries require it.

(2) Providing sufficient financial accommodation on terms he can meet as to interest and payments to carry on his business and acquire and improve his home. This will increase his earnings.

(3) Enabling the farmer to liquidate past indebtedness out of his earnings, which must be from the soil and dependent on the seasons, as his returns come in. This will make it possible for him to improve his home and increase production.

This system will contemplate only an agricultural business. The farm-land bank will do no commercial business and therefore not compete with the commercial bank. The fundamental principles involved are:

(1) Making the collective resources of a community available to meet credit requirements through the medium of bonds issued against mortgages on land. The asset of the farmer is thus made liquid.

(2) Allowing the reduction of the principal by installment payments, such as the borrower can meet, known as amortization. In this way principal and interest will be paid in full, without excessive demands and within the time it is possible to earn the amount of the obligation.

The bill provides that 10 or more persons can organize a national farm-land bank in any given State. Such bank can issue land-bank bonds against mortgages in that State. General powers are given, with restrictions. Such bonds may be used as (1) security for deposit of postal savings fund, (2) as investment for funds accumulated as time deposits in national banks, (3) as investment for trust funds under certain conditions. One hundred thousand dollars is to be the minimum capital for the institution issuing the bonds; the volume of bonds shall not exceed 15 times the capital, nor the aggregate of the mortgages.

A bureau in the Treasury Department is created for supervising the operations of these banks, with a commissioner of farm-land banks as the head and a deputy commissioner assisting. Annual report to Congress must be made. Plans, rules, and regulations to govern the bureau are to be approved and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Our banking system now, as heretofore, is a commercial system. The system proposed is not. I should prefer the two systems be kept separate and distinct as far as possible.

The commissioner must publish amortization tables, which must be used in all long-term mortgages. Provision is made for cooperative institutions where desired.

Such a bank is empowered:

First. To make loans upon farm lands anywhere in the State not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of improved farm lands or 40 per cent of other lands.

(1) Such loans shall be made for not more than 35 years.

(2) All farm mortgage loans shall be on first mortgages.

(3) Loans shall be made only for the purpose of (a) completing the payment of the purchase price of the farm; (b) improving and equipping the farm; (c) and paying off existing liens.

(4) Each mortgage shall contain a mandatory provision for the repayment of the loan by amortization, and must run for not less than five years.

(5) The borrower may pay off the loan at any interest period after five years.

Second. The second specific power of the farm-land bank is to issue, sell, and trade in its own collateral trust bonds, which are designated as national land-bank bonds. The amount of outstanding bonds must not exceed the amount of the mortgages at any time.

The restrictions are:

(1) The rate of interest paid by the borrower shall not exceed the rate paid by the bank to the investor more than 1 per cent, which must include all charges of administration or expenses of the bank.

(2) All national farm-land bank bonds must be payable on a date specified, but subject to call at par.

(3) The bonds are secured by first mortgages of an equal amount in face value, maturing not less than five years from date.

(4) The amortization payments as made must be credited on the mortgages and bonds must be retired to that extent.

(5) The mortgages must be in the joint possession of the bank and the fiduciary agent of the Government. No bond shall be issued against any mortgage running for less than five years.

Third. The third specific power is the authority to use its capital, surplus, and deposits as a revolving fund for the negotiation of first mortgage loans, buying in its bonds or marketing short-term loans secured by first mortgages, maturing in less than five years.

Specific limitations are set forth:

(1) The amount of national land bank bonds that may be issued and outstanding at any time must not exceed fifteen times the capital and accumulated surplus of the bank.

(2) The charges of administration shall not exceed an annual charge of 1 per cent on the amount unpaid on the loan.

(3) The periodic payments by the borrowers must cover the administration charge mentioned, interest, and an amortization payment sufficient to pay off the principal within the time specified.

If a farm-land bank can sell its 4 per cent bonds at par, the farmer wishing to borrow $1,000 can be charged by the bank the 4 per cent plus 1 per cent for expenses, and 1 per cent more to be applied to the principal, making a total of 6 per cent or $30 every 6 months, which would pay off the loan—principal and interest—in 30 years. The farmer would pay 6 per cent semiannually and would pay off the debt in 30 years.

(4) The banks are not allowed to loan on their own or the stock of any other farm-land bank. No individual can borrow an amount exceeding 20 per cent of the capital and surplus.

Real estate holdings are restricted as in the national banking act.

So the exemption of capital stock and income from taxation is similar to the Federal reserve act. The mortgages and bonds are to be exempt from taxation.

It is provided further that a borrower may pay off his indebtedness by presenting to the bank its national land-bank bonds, of the same series as those issued against his mortgage.

The whole system is to supplement, and not to interfere with, our commercial system. The commission is unanimous in opposing direct loans or aid by the Government.

We are sustained in this not only by conditions in the United States but by the evidence obtained in Europe. "The National Government does not guarantee or finance the Landschaften, but controls them," (S. Doc. 214, p. 263. See also pages 405, etc.) Not only so, but, for instance, the Land Mortgage Bank of the Rhine pays the Government one-half of 1 per cent on the bonds it sells. (P. 322.)

Some progress has already been made growing out of the agitation of this subject, and it is most commendable in Congress that the Federal reserve act repeals the former national-bank law, prohibiting loans on real estate.

It is most gratifying that at last some attention has been given to the needs of the farmer.

But no commercial system can fully supply the requirements of agriculture, and so far as it was felt we could safely go under the commercial system was to provide for the rediscounting of the farmer's papers in the same way as other business paper and for loans upon certain terms and conditions on real estate security. At present this would make available something like $446,000,000 for such purpose, which would not go a great way even in taking care of maturing and outstanding loans. The regulations of the Federal Reserve Board covering real estate loans provide as follows:

"1. Real estate security must be farm land.

"2. It must be improved.

"3. There must be no prior lien.

"4. Property must be located in the same Federal reserve district as the bank making the loan.

"5. The amount of the loan must not exceed 50 per cent of the actual value of the property upon which it is secured.

"6. The loan must not be for a period longer than five years.

"7. The total of such loans by any bank must not exceed one-third of its time deposits and must in no case exceed one-fourth of the capital and surplus of the bank."

INSTITUTIONS FOR MAKING LONG-TERM LOANS ON THE AMORTIZATION PLAN SHOULD BE ESTABLISHED.

A separate and distinct system along the lines indicated will mean more homes, more development, and improvement of the farms, more production, better rural conditions, and increased prosperity generally.

Primarily the great benefit will be to agriculture, but as we must all look in that direction for food and clothing, the benefit will extend to all the people. Whatever will make attractive country life, reduce the burdens and difficulties which confront the farmers, will stimulate business and increase financial operations in all directions, and I am sure no one should take a narrow or selfish view of this great economic question.

You can readily understand that commercial banks must be in position to respond to their demand liabilities at any time, and therefore they could not safely employ their funds by making loans for any great length of time, but the farmer is not engaged in turning over his stock of goods day by day and depositing the proceeds in bank, thus meeting his obligations at the bank every few days. The farmer has no goods moving in trade which he is able to convert into cash by the time the bills for the goods become due. What the farmer needs is accommodation for such length of time as will enable him to purchase land, improve it, buy machinery, extend his development and operations over a period of years, meeting as much as he can, out of his earnings, year by year. He should get this accommodation at the rate of interest which will make it an investment rather than a debt. I have letters from various portions of the country which show that in many States the farmers are paying as high as 20 per cent interest, all the items considered. No business, no manufacturing enterprise, no commercial industry can stand such interest. The truth is that many of the farmers in many States would have been bankrupt long ago if it had not been for the rise in the value of lands. Some critics of this proposal have claimed that this plan is intended to make it easy for farmers to get into debt and people with money to get mortgages on lands, and thus enrich themselves and crush the farmer. This suggestion would have more merit if it were not that, broadly speaking, the farmers of the country are already enormously in debt. We have seen what the statistics show in that regard. No man is more afraid of debt that I am or will go further in warning against incurring it, but I submit that the farmers are already in debt, and that if we can do nothing more than save them one-half of their annual interest, say $250,000,000 a year, we will be doing a great public service. Furthermore, farmers need to go in debt as much as men engaged in any industry.

Rarely can any important industry be conducted on a strictly hand-to-mouth, cash basis, with any great success. The truth is, one of the great needs is for the farmer to adopt and apply more fully and completely, business methods in connection with his industry. Every business man is obliged to incur debts. Of course he has assets and resources which can always be applied to meeting these debts as they become due, but the very debt enables him to increase his assets and develop his resources, so necessarily the farmer, on an important and large scale, can not expect to conduct his enterprise strictly on a cash basis, nor is it to his interest always to do so. What we want is a financial system which will enable him to get accommodations on such terms as in the natural and orderly course of his business and industry he will be able to discharge without danger and without hardship. Some claim that it proposes to prevent the farmer from using the present banking system. This is not true at all. What is proposed is a system supplementary and additional to the present system. It is not class legislation, because every individual is dependent more or less upon agriculture. Every individual is concerned with the problem of the high cost of living. This question is directly involved. We have seen the enormous difference between what the consumers pay and what the farmers receive for what they produce. With proper organization and cooperation among the farmers this plan will enable them to largely solve the problem of distribution. It offers a plan under the operation of which the producers can get more for what they produce and the consumers will pay less for what they consume than at present. Considerable relief can be had if the farmer can be financed so that he will not be obliged to force on the market his products as soon as they are harvested, but can arrange to carry them until there is a profit in the price he can get. A large amount of waste, which now takes place in marketing, can be saved. The problem of economical distribution is yet unsolved in this country. One way of contributing largely to that solution is to provide an adequate and suitable financial scheme which will serve agriculture.

President Taft said in his letter to the governors of the States, October 11, 1912, "The need for the establishment of an adequate financial system as an aid to the farmers of this country is now quite generally recognized."

President Wilson gave out August 13, 1913, this statement:

"Special machinery and a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. * * * There is no subject more important to the welfare or the industrial development of the United States. * * * There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. * * * This is our next great task. Not only is a Government commission about to report, which is charged with apprising the Congress with the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture also has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive working together will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the countryside, and that very soon."

The conference of governors held last November in Madison, Wis., approved in general the work and plan of the United States commission.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in his report for 1914, page 26, says: "Closely related to production and distribution of farm products is the securing of capital by farmers on better terms. This problem has attracted the profound attention of the country and still awaits a full solution.

* * * * * * *

"The chief difference of opinion arises over whether there should be special aid furnished by the Government. There seems to be no emergency which requires or justifies Government assistance to the farmers directly through the use of the Government cash or the Government's credit. The American farmer is sturdy, independent, and self-reliant.

* * * * * * *

"It is the judgment of the best students of economic conditions here that there is needed to supplement existing agencies a proper land-mortgage banking system, operating through private funds, just as other banking institutions operate, and this judgment is shared by the leaders of economic thoughts abroad."

The commission said in its report—Senate Document 380—it "has been convinced that not only was Government aid unnecessary but that it would be unwise." In this Lubin, Herrick, and other authorities agree.

The governors' conference at Madison, Wis., November 10, 1914, adopted a report which said, "The establishing of a wise, just, or successful system of land-mortage banks can be accomplished without direct Federal aid, without subsidies or loans."

Let me in conclusion bring home to you by concrete illustration precisely what it is hoped will be accomplished by the establishment of such a financial system as the commission strongly urges. Take the Danish Mortgage Society law. Members of the company (farmers) under that law, on loans made by them respectively, pay a yearly amount of 4 per cent interest, three-quarters of 1 per cent amortization—that is, in reduction of principal—and one-quarter of 1 per cent for expenses, making altogether 5 per cent per annum, with the result that in 47 years their debt (principal and interest) is paid in full. Whatever the amount of the loan, whether $1,000 or $10,000, they have the use of the money; they pay 5 per cent per annum for that use, and at the end of 47 years the entire debt (principal and interest) is paid in full. Contrast that with the experience of the American farmer. If he borrows $1,000 or $10,000, he will have to, in the first place, agree to pay it back within three to five years. He will pay 8 per cent per annum interest for the use of it, and at the time when it becomes due he must pay the entire principal as well. Can there be any question about the advantages of the Danish system? The same principle applies under the German system. Take another illustration. Under the system practised in these European countries we will suppose that a farmer borrows $1,000. Suppose he wishes to liquidate the entire indebtedness in 18 years. The first year he would pay $40 on the principal and $40 on interest. The second year he would pay $41.80 on principal and $38.40 on interest, and so on, until in 18 years he would have paid $1,440, and the entire debt, principal and interest, would be paid in full. Under our present system only the interest of 8 per cent would be paid, $80 per annum, and the principal at the end of the 18 years of $1,000 would still be due. In this case the borrower would pay 4 per cent interest on his money, and the other 4 per cent would go toward the principal, and his debt, under the European system, would be canceled.

Take another illustration. Suppose a farmer wishes to borrow $1,000, and he was willing to pay as much as 6 per cent annually for the use of it. Under the European system he would pay 4 per cent as interest and 2 per cent toward a sinking fund or amortization. In 28 annual payments he would have paid $1,680, the interest which he would pay would be at the rate of 2.43 per cent per annum. In 28 years he would have paid the entire debt by paying $60 per annum, which would be 6 per cent on $1,000. Under existing conditions in this country he would have paid that amount, if he could get his money at 6 per cent, and at the end of 28 years he would still owe $1,000. Almost any farmer could make more than $60 a year by the use of $1,000, but the farmers of this country could rarely afford to borrow money or incur indebtedness on the terms and at the rates which they are obliged to meet now under our existing financial system, and no commercial banking system alone can afford them the proper accommodations. I want to see the farmers organize in their various communities, establish their local cooperative societies, and in this way take charge of their business matters, buy their supplies on the best possible terms, market their products in the best way, and finance their affairs in the most advantageous manner. They can do it. The two great words which should summon them to meet the situation are "organization and cooperation."

It is our duty to provide the machinery whereby these two forces may be set to work. The American commission with the United States commission called on the governors of the various States to appoint committees of three to prepare a brief statement as to the "agricultural needs of the State," and the result is shown in part 3 of Senate Document 214, which tells the story of the intense interest in the various States in this great question.

Mr. GRONNA. May I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry what became of the amendment on page 53? I believe it is No. 50. It provides for an appropriation of $10,000 for the improvement of Sullys Hill National Park.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the amendment was cut in the middle. An appropriation of $5,000 is carried in the bill, in addition to $5,000 appropriated in the bill of last year, making $10,000 altogether.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course that will be inadequate, but we hope next year that we may get a sufficient amount to construct the sheds, roads, and so forth, in this particular reservation.

Do I understand that the rural-credits provision was stricken out of the bill? Am I correctly informed?

Mr. GORE. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. GRONNA. I am informed that the amendment providing for a rural-credit system was stricken out of the bill altogether.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; and it is proposed that a joint committee of the two Houses shall be raised and directed to prepare and report a bill to Congress on the 1st of January next.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am very sorry, indeed, that it was necessary for the conferees to strike out the entire provision. Some three years ago I introduced a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to investigate the rural-credit conditions of Europe. The resolution which I introduced passed this body, but failed to pass the House. Later on we succeeded in incorporating it in the Agricultural appropriation bill. It became a law, the commission was appointed, and it has made the investigation and its report, and I will say it is a very valuable report.

I can hardly understand why it should be necessary to delay legislation of such great importance as this. The farmers of the United States have asked for legislation of this kind. The three dominant parties in this country indorsed legislation of this kind in their platforms. Not only the Democratic Party, but the Republican Party and the Progressive Party promised the people of this country that a rural-credit law would be enacted. The Democratic Party have now been in power for about two years. You have failed to fulfill your promises in this respect. It was no more important to pass a banking act benefiting the bankers of this country than it was to pass legislation that would be of substantial benefit to the farmers of the country.

I am informed that a provision has been incorporated in this bill providing that a committee shall be appointed to make further investigation and report to Congress. I want to say to the Senate that it is not committees the farmers are looking for, but it is legislation that will enable them to get money on the same basis that the banker gets his money. I wish to remind you of the fact that since the Federal reserve act was passed the farmer has paid a higher rate of interest than he had to pay before that legislation was enacted. I know whereof I am speaking. I know that the farmers of my State will indorse the statement I am making that they have to pay a rate from 1 to 2 per cent higher than the rate paid under the old banking law. There have been a number of rural-credit bills introduced in this body. I introduced three rural-credit bills myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator give any reason why there should be an increased rate of interest that the farmers have to pay under the new law? We were told that famous banking law was to be a panacea for all the financial ills of the country.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad the Senator from New Hampshire asked me that question. Before the Federal reserve banking law was passed it was a crime to consolidate capital such as it is possible to consolidate under the present act. It was extra legal, if not illegal, for any banking concern to place an unlimited amount in reserve. Under this law we say that they must do it.

Is there any reason why the rates of interest go up? I shall not take the time of the Senate to show the conditions of the Federal reserve banks, but I will make this statement: I have examined some of the reports, and I have one in mind which states that only 15 per cent of the bank's assets were invested, with 85 per cent of cash on hand. It does not require a financier to understand that that is a losing proposition.

Mr. President, I am very sorry, when I listened to the splendid address delivered in the House of Representatives by the President of the United States at the beginning of this session, when he said in substance that he did not think a rural-credits law should be enacted at the present session. As a member of the minority party, a party that also promised in its platform that rural-credits legislation should be enacted, I feel that we have not done our duty to this great mass of people, more than one-third of the population of this great country, who are living on the farms. I say I feel as one of the members of that party that we have not done our full duty.

But, Mr. President, there never has been a time during this session when I have not been willing to cooperate with the Senators or with the Representatives who are in the majority to enact a rural-credit law. We can not excuse ourselves by saying it was only a short session. We can not go before the people of the country and say to them, "We did not pass a law such as you commanded us to do, and such as we promised to you, because we did not have the time." We have taken more than a month to discuss a bill which no one in this country has demanded or asked for. We have wasted days and nights in this body talking upon the so-called ship-purchase bill, a bill the people of the United States have not asked for, a bill which I believe the people of the United States will not indorse.

Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the Senate any further, but this kind of legislation is of such great importance to the people of this country, and as it has been promised by the three parties in our country, I felt that I ought to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have not fulfilled our promises when, instead of enacting a rural-credit law, we appoint commissions or committees now after a full report has been made upon this subject. We have sufficient information now, Mr. President, to enact a law which will be satisfactory to the people of the country. We do not need any further information on the subject.

It is not as difficult, I say, to enact a rural-credit law as it was to enact a banking law. We have enacted a banking law which is a measure to protect the banker. We have failed to protect the farmer and the business man. But the responsibility should not rest upon the Members on this side of the Chamber. I do not know anyone on this side who has been unwilling to devote his time to the enactment of a rural-credit law during this session. The responsibility must rest upon you who are in the majority, and you said in your platform that if the people of this great country would give you the power you would give them such a law, and one satisfactory to them.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I am sure that some of the Members on the other side of the Chamber will agree with me that it is a very important question. I am also sure that there are some Members on the other side of the Chamber who have been willing to cooperate with some of us on this side to enact a rural-credit law which would be of benefit not only to the farmer but to all the people of the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On March 3, 1915:

S. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the Forty-ninth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in the months of September and October, 1915, and for other purposes incident to said encampment;

S. 5734. An act to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas;

S. 7555. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Suwanee River, in the State of Florida;

S. 7646. An act to authorize Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Ohio River from the city of Parkersburg, State of West Virginia, to the town of Belpre, State of Ohio;

S. 7723. An act authorizing the Texarkana Board of Trade to construct a bridge across the Red River between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex.; and

S. 7743. An act to incorporate the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from New York withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I will.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire unanimous consent to introduce two concurrent resolutions which will take but a second, and I should like to have them submitted and passed.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I would be glad to comply with any request of the Senator from New Jersey, but there is a very insistent desire, almost a demand, to have an immediate executive session to dispose of some important matters. The executive session will probably be followed by the consideration of unopposed bills on the calendar, at which time the Senator from New Jersey will have an opportunity to present his resolutions.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator declines to yield now?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I shall have to decline.

Mr. LEWIS. I understand the Senator from New York proposes that we shall resume the legislative session and take up the calendar?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Oh, yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, resuming at Order of Business 820, and that it also be in order to consider unobjected committee reports and unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me before that is agreed to—for after it is agreed to nothing else will be in order—to submit the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2789) to award the medal of honor to Maj. John O. Skinner, surgeon, United States Army, retired.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Engineering Congress to be held at San Francisco, Cal., September 20 to 25, inclusive, 1915; and

H. J. Res. 439. Joint resolution to empower the President to better enforce and maintain the neutrality of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4522) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3362. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas;

S. 7188. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Garden City, Kans.;

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRYAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 8, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 34, 37, 47, 51, 52, 55, 60, 69, 70, and 77.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 15, 17, 23, 24, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 53, 54, 57, 58, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, and 78, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "purchase," insert the following: ", until the end of the fiscal year 1916,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and on page 27 of the bill, in line 20, strike out "$26,735.36" and insert in lieu thereof "$26,864.72"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$36,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
NATHAN BRYAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
C. L. BARTLETT,
F. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is objection until we know what the report contains.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, of course one obtains very little information from the reading of a conference report. There was introduced and adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, which amendment provided for the payment of $800 extra to the clerk of the Committee on Pensions. I wish to ask the chairman what has been done with that amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senate receded from that amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator and the attention of the Senate. There are two committees in the House of Representatives, one known as the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the other as the Committee on Pensions. Each committee has its quota of clerks; each committee has one clerk delegated from the Pension Bureau; as I understand, each one of the clerks of that committee has this year, as I understand has been the case for the last 15 or 20 years, been paid the sum of from $1,000 to $1,200.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from North Dakota, of course, wants to be correct. It is $800 this year.

Mr. McCUMBER. I said I did not know what had been paid this year. I want to call attention to the fact, and I want to know some good reason why we should impose upon a clerk of the Senate the same work that is performed by two clerks in the House, and then pay each of the two clerks in the House $800 extra out of the National Treasury and refuse to allow the clerk of the Senate committee, who does the work, a single cent extra for his services. There ought to be some reason assigned for it.

I know of no injustice so great in this world as the injustice of unequal treatment; and I certainly feel that it is due the chief clerk of the Committee on Pensions, Mr. Long, that he be treated at least half as well as are the clerks on the corresponding committees in the House of Representatives. It does not make any difference that the sum is paid in the House out of the contingent fund, for it is the Government's money that pays it in each instance; and I can not conceive how the conferees of the House, after having in their body voted to give their two clerks $800 each extra on a proposition of this kind, can then insist—and the Senate conferees agree with them—that the Senate clerk, who does as much work as both the House clerks, shall have nothing extra in return.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the message from the House relative to Senate bill 4522 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate——

Mr. BRYAN. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has the floor and is discussing a conference report. It is not in order to submit any other report to the Senate while he is speaking.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. The Chair has a right to lay before the Senate at any time a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not mean that the Chair did not have the right to lay the message before the Senate, but the Senator from Iowa was not in order while the Senator from North Dakota was occupying the floor to move to proceed to the consideration of the message.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from North Dakota wants to lose the floor, there is no reason why he should not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota did not desire to lose the floor. I have not yet found out exactly what the Senator from Iowa desires at this time. I assume that when there is one motion to adopt a conference report, until that motion is disposed of another motion to adopt another conference report could not take its place.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. If I am not taken from the floor, of course I have no objection to granting any courtesy——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a question——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just one moment. I have no desire to take the Senator from North Dakota from the floor. I was about to move to concur in the House amendments to the bill, to which I have referred. They are inconsequential in their character. The bill is of great importance, and its consideration will require only a moment, while this conference report will require some time, I take it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has refused to yield for that purpose, the Chair understands.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Could not that be done by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not yet laid the message before the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. By unanimous consent, could not the Senator from North Dakota yield for the purpose of having that motion made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly he could.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think probably I had better go on. It will only take a moment to get through with this conference report, and we shall gain time by going on with it.

I want to call attention to some of the appropriations which have been made for these clerks during the past few years; and, as a basis for those appropriations, I want to call attention to the number of bills that have been reported during several Congresses.

In the Fifty-seventh Congress, which covered the period from 1901 to 1903, the number of special pension bills was 2,171; in the Fifty-eighth Congress, 3,555; in the Fifty-ninth Congress, 6,030; in the Sixtieth Congress, 6,600; in the Sixty-first Congress, 9,649; in the Sixty-second Congress, 6,350; and in the Sixty-third Congress, up to the present time, 5,249.

We are all tired, and we have a great many things in our minds; but I do not want this injustice done to either the chairman of the Committee on Pensions or to the clerk of that committee, and it is certainly a gross injustice to single him out and cut off the amount that has been granted year after year to his predecessor in that position.

I have called attention to the fact that the number of bills before that committee increased between the Fifty-seventh and the Sixty-first Congress from 2,171 to 9,649; and in the Sixty-third Congress they amounted to 5,249.

In 1891 the clerk of the Senate Committee on Pensions received $500 extra and the examiner $750 extra; in 1902, $500 each; in 1903, $750 each; in 1904, $750 each; in 1905, $250 for one and $1,000 for the other; in 1906, $750 each; in 1907, $1,000 each; in 1908, $1,000 each; in 1909, $1,000 for the clerk and $1,200 for the examiner; in 1910, $1,200 for the clerk and $1,200 for the examiner; in 1911, $1,200 for the clerk and $1,200 for the examiner; in 1912, $1,200 for the clerk and $1,000 for the examiner; in 1913, $1,000 for the clerk and $1,000 for the examiner; in 1914, for the first time, we dropped out the clerk and gave $1,200 to the examiner; in 1915 we give $1,200, I think, to the examiner and nothing to the clerk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Fourteen hundred dollars, I think.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, I appeal to Senators to give for the extra work, which means day and night for this force, and especially for the clerk to the Committee on Pensions, who has to perform an enormous amount of labor, a sum at least equal to that paid to the employees of similar committees of the House.

I was chairman of the Pension Committee for a number of years, and I know something about the extra work that is performed by the employees of that committee.

I insist that the showing is such that the conferees ought either to have prevented the House granting the public moneys to pay to two men $800 each, or at least they should give the one man on this side of the Capitol an equal amount for the labors he has performed. Anything short of that is a gross injustice that we ought not to submit to.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I regret very much that the conferees have seen fit to leave this item out of their report. I coincide thoroughly with everything that has been said by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I am a member of the Committee on Pensions, and I am familiar with the nature and character and volume of the duties performed by the clerk of the committee. As the Senator from North Dakota has very justly stated, there is absolutely no reason why our conferees should permit the House to justly reward its servants, and at the same time permit them to refuse to let us do likewise with ours. On what possible theory this has been done I can not imagine, and I regret it very much, as undoubtedly, on account of the legislative situation and the near approach of the end of the session, it will be impossible to send the conference report back. The conferees are supposed to represent the Senate, and, it seems to me, should not have been influenced by a consideration of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been a member of the Committee on Pensions for the last 12 years, and I know full well the duties required of Mr. Long. This item was in the appropriation bill last year, and the House then saw fit to disagree to the amendment of the Senate. It seems to me that this, at least, ought to be a warning to the chairman of that committee that if he expects to pay the clerk of his committee, Mr. Long, the amount that is paid for half the amount of work in the House, he ought to appear before the Committee on Appropriations when the legislative bill is before that committee and have the salary of the clerk of the Pension Committee raised, as it ought to be; but let the legislative bill provide for him, and not every year try to make up the amount by an appropriation on the deficiency bill, which, of course, I cheerfully grant, he is entitled to, but such an amendment always has to be agreed to by the House.

The proper way would be to have it provided for in the legislative appropriation bill. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I think that is the proper way to take care of Mr. Long. I know as well as can the Senator from North Dakota the arduous work devolving upon that gentleman.

Mr. McCUMBER. We are not taking care of him in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. I say to the Senator that is the proper way to do it.

Mr. McCUMBER. But we can do justice here in the same way as we have done it for years, and there is no excuse for our refusing to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the Senate itself did not refuse to do it, but the conference report is in such condition now that we must either adopt it or reject it as a whole, and that, of course, I hardly think the Senate desires to do upon this one item. There may, however, be other items that would justify such action.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from North Dakota. I am on the committee and voted for this amendment, because, as a member of the committee, I know that for nearly 10 years we have been giving the clerk to the Pension Committee compensation for extra services, and instead of giving him $1,200, as we gave the clerk of the committee when the Senator from North Dakota was chairman, we gave him only $800 for two years, or $400 a year. That is treating this man with injustice, and that is why I voted for the item in the committee.

But, Mr. President, I want to call attention to another matter that has gone out in conference, and, in my judgment, it is a very important matter. If we are going to have an efficient Trade Commission, we ought to allow them to employ men who are competent to do their work. They must have men to go into court as lawyers, but under the bill as passed by the House of Representatives they can not employ men at a higher salary than $1,800 a year.

In the sundry civil bill, in the appropriation for the Trade Commission, after providing for the salaries of the commissioners, the bill goes on:

To continue all of such services and employments provided for the Bureau of Corporations during the fiscal year 1915, except the offices of commissioner and deputy commissioner, as in the discretion of the Federal Trade Commission may be required for its purposes and at the rates of compensation specified or authorized therefor, and for such additional clerks and others as are authorized in and at the rates of compensation fixed by section 167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; for necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $300,000.

It was represented and estimated to us by the President of the United States that under this section the Federal Trade Commission can not employ a clerk at a higher salary than $1,800, and I agree with him under the statute, because here is the section he refers to. They can not employ anybody under the sundry civil bill except as provided in section 167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. That section of the Revised Statutes of the United States says that the annual salaries of clerks and employees in the departments whose compensation is not otherwise prescribed shall be as follows: Clerks of the fourth class, $1,800; clerks of the third class, $1,600; clerks of the second class, $1,400. The highest salary fixed is $1,800, and it goes down from that to $720.

The Senate put on this amendment, which the conferees have stricken out:

The sum of $300,000—

The same amount that is in the sundry civil bill—

The sum of $300,000 appropriated in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1916 is made immediately available for the employment of special agents, special examiners, and legal counsel, at such rates of compensation as may be determined by the Federal Trade Commission: Provided, That no salary authorized herein shall in any case exceed $7,500 per annum.

They are bound to have legal counsel. How can this commission get along without some lawyer to advise them, to bring suits, to care for them in the courts? Then we allow $10,000 for the rent of a building. The item for rent has gone out. It does seem to me after reading this statute—section 167 of the Revised Statutes—that the Trade Commission can not employ anybody, expert or lawyer or anybody else, at a greater rate of salary than $1,800 and down to $720; and I do not think we ought to agree to any such report.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I listened last night, as did many other Senators, to a very sarcastic review of the Trade Commission measure by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. He was opposed to the bill upon its passage. I therefore assume that he spoke from that point of view. I did not, however, dream that Senators who were in favor of the Trade Commission bill would so soon verify his rather slighting references to it. If it be true that the Federal Trade Commission is to be limited, in the employment of persons who are to carry forward its work, to clerks at a salary of $1,800 a year, it would be far better that we should at once repeal this entire measure. It would become a farce, a mockery, if the work of that commission, important as it is, vital as it will be, has to be given over to clerks who are willing to work for that compensation.

There is no man, either here or elsewhere, who has the least familiarity with this measure but who knows that it is one of the most important enactments that ever passed the Congress of the United States. I think it is the best measure of this administration. I think it will be the distinguishng mark of honor in the administration, as we have seen it so far. But to say that these men, who are to determine throughout the whole country whether the business is being carried on in harmony with the standard that is here prescribed, must do it through the medium of clerks or employees who are to be paid no more than $1,800 a year, is simply to deny all vitality and all good to the measure.

I have looked hastily at the section of the Revised Statutes to which reference is made in the House provision. That section provides that all clerks and employees shall be graded so and so, from $1,200, I believe, to $1,800, with some minor employees at lesser salaries. I appeal to the Senate, if it desires to maintain this measure in the dignity that its importance demands, if it is not to make a mockery of what has already been done, and done after so much debate and so much earnest consideration, that suitable provision must be made for the employment of men not only of high character but of great attainments as well. We can not afford to put the business of this country into the hands of inexperienced men who are willing to work for $1,800 a year. We will require the very best men, trained men of experience and of judgment, because they will be the men who will collect the information, who will take the testimony, who will be responsible in the first instance for the proceedings that are carried on before the commission.

I very, very earnestly appeal to the Senate to stand by the amendment that it adopted to this bill, for if we do not, every word that has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire in derision of the measure will be verified in the administration of the law. As one who was cordially and heartily in favor of it, and who stood here day after day and week after week fighting for it, I want to see it the success which its friends believed it would be. I want to see it the instrument for good that its friends believed it would be.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I am quite in accord with the Senator from Iowa in regard to the desirability of employing high-class men in connection with this work; but I want to ask him if it is not true that one of the commissioners confirmed last night was within five years the secretary of a Senator, receiving $1,800 a year?

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be, Mr. President. I do not know as to that; but even if he was the secretary or the clerk of a Senator five years ago, that proves nothing to me with regard to his present capacity for the discharge of the duties of this commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would not that make it all the more important that they should have a good lawyer?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to disparage the appointees already named by insisting that the lawyer shall be of higher grade than they. I want the commission to have an opportunity to employ men who are capable of doing the work that will have to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa why he says they are limited to $1,800 a year for their highest employees. I did not catch his statement on that subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said so because the House bill provided, first, for the salaries of the commissioners themselves, and then for the salary of the secretary, I believe, and then the bill itself turned over to the Trade Commission the present force of the Bureau of Corporations. The House bill then proceeded to say that the commission might employ such other and further clerks and assistants as were provided for in section 167 of the Revised Statutes. That is the section under which all the clerks in all the departments are graded as to salary; and it provides that there shall be one grade at $1,200, another grade at $1,400, another grade at $1,600, and another grade at $1,800, but does not provide for the payment to any employee or any clerk of a greater compensation than $1,800.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Therefore they are limited to $1,800 for their best-paid assistants?

Mr. CUMMINS. The very best men.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I fully agree with the Senator that that is a mistake.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if what the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from North Carolina stated were the absolute facts, I would agree with them entirely; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill. On page 56 of that bill an appropriation of $300,000 is provided for the Trade Commission in these words:

> To continue all of such services and employments provided for the Bureau of Corporations during the fiscal year 1915, except the offices of commissioner and deputy commissioner, as in the discretion of the Federal Trade Commission may be required for its purposes and at the rates of compensation specified or authorized therefor, and for such additional clerks and others as are authorized in and at the rates of compensation fixed by section 167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—

And so forth.

Now, the Bureau of Corporations have attorneys to-day; they have experts to-day; and they are transferred bodily over to the Trade Commission under this provision. I understand, however, that the highest salary paid to an attorney in the Bureau of Corporations is $5,000, but the Trade Commission want an attorney to be paid $7,500; and that is all there is in this provision authorizing the employment of an attorney up to $7,500 per annum.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Utah think that the Trade Commission ought to be authorized to employ an attorney?

Mr. SMOOT. Why certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Utah think that the services of an efficient attorney, calculated to be able to perform the duties that would naturally devolve upon a position of that sort, could be employed for less than $7,500 per annum?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all the Senator from Utah knows is that in almost every bureau and every department under the Government of the United States the very best attorneys are hired for $5,000 per year.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say, further, that the highest salary paid any attorney in the Department of Justice is $7,500, and Mr. Davies appeared before the Appropriations Committee and asked that the amount be not $7,500 but $10,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, no; the Senator yielded the floor and I took it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did my best to retain it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for a ruling of the Chair upon the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Utah to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he yielded.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator from Utah said, "I thought the Senator from Iowa had yielded the floor."

Mr. CUMMINS. But I had not.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I will wait until the Senator from Iowa is through. I did not rise to ask a question of the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, Mr. President, I shall be very glad to finish in a very little while what I have to say, and it will be in the nature of a reply to the Senator from Utah.

It is true that the present force of the Bureau of Corporations goes over to the Trade Commission; but everybody who understands the Trade Commission bill knows that the work of the Trade Commission is not only infinitely increased, but radically changed. The Bureau of Corporations is simply an investigating body. It has no power whatever. It is simply an inquiring tribunal. The Trade Commission, however, is given wide and important powers, and no one ever dreamed that the force now employed by the Bureau of Corporations would be sufficient to carry on the work of the Trade Commission. I am not speaking for the high-priced attorneys. I do not know that attorneys are so necessary as men of fine poise and judgment in business. This commission is given a great jurisdiction. It is occupying a new and broad field. The work that has been done hitherto by the Bureau of Corporations will be carried on, of course, but there will be a vast amount of additional work, and that work is of a character that closely touches the business of the United States.

As admitted by the Senator from Utah, its power to employ any force additional to that now employed by the Bureau of Corporations will be limited to clerks with compensation of not more than $1,800 per year. It must be apparent to everybody that if we allow this appropriation to go in this way we will simply destroy the efficiency of the Trade Commission, and we might as well repeal its additional powers, for we will have then the amazing and the humiliating spectacle of five commissioners at $10,000 a year doing no more important or greater work than has heretofore been done by the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations at a salary of five or six thousand dollars a year, a most astonishing and indefensible conclusion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Trade Commission bill was passed almost unanimously by the House and the Senate, and that it provides that—

> The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable in like manner, and it shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may from time to time find necessary.

We therefore contemplated not only the employment of attorneys but also of special experts and examiners. We had in contemplation a higher class of capacity and experience than is usually covered by purely administrative work. This bill was modeled after the interstate-commerce act, which provides for the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a large discretion as to appointments and salaries, the appropriation being a lump sum, and the compensation being fixed by the commission. The amount allowed the chief counsel of the Interstate Commerce Commission is $10,000 per annum. Many attorneys, experts, and examiners are employed at salaries ranging from $3,000 to $5,000 per annum.

It was intended that a similar power should be exercised by the Federal Trade Commission. The Bureau of Corporations, of course, covers a more limited jurisdiction—its appropriation has been about $250,000. The House allowed the Federal Trade Commission in the sundry civil appropriation bill an additional amount of $50,000, making about $300,000 in all, exclusive of the salaries of the commissioners and secretary; but the extra amount of $50,000 seems to be limited to the payment of clerks, whilst it should include the employment of attorneys, experts, and examiners at adequate salaries. The Senate amendment to the deficiency bill was intended to correct this and also to provide $10,000 for rent of suitable offices for the commission, the quarters now occupied by the Bureau of Corporations in the Commerce Building being inadequate and also being required by the Department of Commerce. The conference report strikes these important amendments out, and thus the commission will start its important work in a crippled condition. I earnestly urge the rejection of the conference report.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood that, Mr. President. The appropriation as contained in the bill as passed by the House is directly repugnant to the Trade Commission bill itself and must have been prepared by some one who did not believe in the work that was authorized in the statute for the Trade Commission. I do not know how much will be required. I think the sum of $300,000 is very inadequate myself, but it will be sufficient to begin the work if the commission is permitted to surround itself with men who are competent to render it the assistance that it will require. It will require it not only to do its work properly, but above all other things it will require it in order that it may command the confidence of the business people of the United States, and that is not the least desirable thing in the administration of a law.

I hope the Senate will not agree to this conference report, but will insist upon giving to this new function of the Government, a most important and wide-reaching function, the support that it deserves and which will enable it to render to the people of this country the service which it was intended to render.

NEUTRALITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am asking unanimous consent to have laid before the Senate the House joint resolution 439.

Mr. NELSON. What is it about?

Mr. STONE. I will have it stated in a moment, if the Senator please. It is very important that this joint resolution should be acted upon at once, so that it may go to the House. It will take but a few moments. The Committee on Foreign Relations have unanimously directed me to report a substitute for the House joint resolution. If the Senate will consent to have it taken up, it will take but a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order even by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order by unanimous consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I asked that consent with regard to a Senate bill that had been slightly amended in the House and came back here, and I understood that there was no objection to it except that it might take some one from the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was objection on the part of the Senator from North Dakota yielding the floor to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let the House joint resolution be read.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I desire to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read and then see whether there is objection.

Mr. STONE. There is a substitute, which I report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which I ask may be read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 439) to empower the President to better enforce and maintain the neutrality of the United States was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That, from and after the passage of this resolution, and during the existence of a war to which the United States is not a party, and in order to prevent the neutrality of the United States from being violated by the use of its territory, its ports, or its territorial waters as the base of operations for the armed forces of a belligerent, contrary to the obligations imposed by the law of nations, the treaties to which the United States is a party, or contrary to the statutes of the United States, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to direct the collectors of customs under the jurisdiction of the United States to withhold clearance from any vessel, American or foreign, which he has reasonable cause to believe to be about to carry fuel, arms, ammunition, men, or supplies to any warship or tender or supply ship of a belligerent nation in violation of the obligations of the United States as a neutral nation; and in case any such vessel shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States without clearance for any of the purposes above set forth, the owner or master or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel shall severally be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, and, in addition, such vessel shall be forfeited to the United States.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

That the provisions of this resolution shall be deemed to extend to all lands and waters, continental or insular, within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4522) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, which were: On page 2, line 19, after "company," to insert, "subject to the provisions of this act"; on page 2, line 22, after "or," where it first occurs to insert "from any point in the United States to a point in and adjacent"; on page 3, line 3, after "pass," to insert "within the United States or within an adjacent foreign country when transported on a through bill of lading"; on page 3, line 11, to strike out "to a" and insert "from any point in the United States to a point in an adjacent"; on page 3, line 16, after "any," to insert "such"; on page 3, line 19, after "pass," to insert "within the United States or within an adjacent foreign country when transported on a through bill of lading"; and on page 4, line 15, after "any," to insert "such."

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RECLAMATION SERVICE.

House joint resolution 438, concerning estimates and expenditures for the Reclamation Service, was read twice, considered by unanimous consent, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That until the meeting of the Sixty-fourth Congress, those members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, who are Members elect to the Sixty-fourth Congress, are authorized to conduct hearings at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, concerning the work of the Reclamation Service and estimates for the various projects of that service.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the sundry civil act appropriates salaries of commissioners and secretaries. It makes an appropriation of $300,000 to continue all such services and employment for the Bureau of Corporations:

To continue all of such services and employments provided for, the Bureau of Corporations, during the fiscal year 1915, except the offices of commissioner and deputy commissioner, as in the discretion of the Federal Trade Commission, may be required for its purposes and at the rates of compensation specified or authorized therefor.

It then proceeds to authorize the employment of employees at the rates of salary fixed by section 167 of the Revised Statutes, ranging from $720 per annum to $1,800 per annum.

It then provides for the necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, the total being $300,000.

Mr. President, of course the Bureau of Corporations is absorbed by the Federal Trade Commission. For the last fiscal year there was appropriated for that bureau $250,000. For the Federal Trade Commission there is appropriated $355,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was $250,000 appropriated a year ago?

Mr. BRYAN. For the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course; I understand that.

The Bureau of Corporations is entitled to compensation per diem of attorneys, special examiners, special agents, and so forth. Of course the act expires June 30 of this year.

The amendment from which the Senate conferees receded provides that the sum of $300,000 appropriated in the sundry civil act, which I have just read, shall be made immediately available for the employment of special agents, special examiners, and legal counsel at such rates of compensation as may be determined by the Federal Trade Commission, with a proviso that they shall not pay their attorneys more than $7,500 per annum.

There is appropriated, then, for the Federal Trade Commission $105,000 more than was appropriated for the Bureau of Corporations, and it appears that they have quite as broad latitude in the employment of agents and attorneys as the Bureau of Corporations had.

This amendment has been in conference since early this morning until 6.30 this afternoon. It was not yielded up by the conferees on the part of the Senate until at the end of the conference, and upon the positive insistence by the House conferees that the House would not agree to the Senate amendment. I am speaking for myself and, I believe, speaking for my associates on the conference when I say that we are perfectly willing for the Senate to go back and try to have given to this commission unlimited power as here asked for in the employment of their special agents, examiners, and attorneys.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do not say "unlimited," but not exceeding $7,500.

Mr. BRYAN. That is only for the attorneys. I have no objection to trying it if the Senate wants to try it. It will cheerfully be done by the conferees. I do not know what the attitude of the House conferees will be after the action of the Senate. We found the House conferees fixed and determined. Several of the Senate amendments, as stated by them, would not be agreed to. This is one of them. I should like to have seen the Senate amendment agreed to. I am willing to go back and try it. It is getting late. I want the Senate to understand that it was not thrown away, that it was not given up, and that it was urged and argued that the Federal Trade Commission has as broad a power in the employment of these agents, attorneys, and examiners as did the Bureau of Corporations. If, with that statement, the Senate desires to ask for a further conference, I feel that there is nothing more to be said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. The question of the employment of clerks, and whether they ought to be paid by the year, or whether we should come in at the end of the year and ask for an additional allowance, is a small matter with which to take up the time of the Senate at this late hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRYAN. Surely you do not care to stake an $800 provision in dispute between the two Houses upon a bill carrying $8,000,000. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if this were a question simply as to whether the compensation of a clerk on the Federal Trade Commission should be made to accord with the General Statutes alluded to, section 167, I would have nothing to say; but I desire to ask the Senator whether, if the conference report is agreed to the Federal Trade Commission, which under the act creating it is authorized to fix the compensation of its own examiners and special agents and specially qualified men, would be compelled to limit the compensation of its skilled examiners and skilled men upon the basis of a mere $1,500 or $1,800 clerk?

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly not, unless it be due to the fact that the Bureau of Corporations is provided for in the appropriation act which expires June 30 of this year. But the language is quite broad, as was contended by the House conferees, to continue all such services and employments of attorneys and special examiners and special agents provided for the Bureau of Corporations during the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To continue them at the salaries they now have or at such as the commission may fix?

Mr. BRYAN. As in the discretion of the Federal Trade Commission may be required for its purpose.

Then it proceeds to say further:

> And for such additional clerks and others as are authorized in and at the rates of compensation fixed by section 167.

Mr. President, there is no disposition on the part of the Senate conferees, there is no disposition, I believe, upon the part of the House conferees to hamper or to hinder this commission. The House conferees felt that it was giving too much latitude; they felt the latitude of the bill was greater than in the act granting appropriations for the Bureau of Corporations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, is the matter in dispute, or the matter against which the Senator from Iowa has filed an earnest protest, simply as to the rates at which the mere clerks of this commission shall be compensated?

Mr. OVERMAN. Additional clerks, employees, and others.

Mr. BRYAN. Attorneys, special agents, and special examiners, are not included in section 167 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. That is what I was trying to bring out. I should like, if the Senator from Florida would yield for the purpose of my asking the Senator from Iowa if he agrees with the Senator from Florida in that understanding?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. Undoubtedly the work of the Bureau of Corporations can be carried on and will be carried on by the Trade Commission. That work is turned over to the Trade Commission.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, if the Senator please, has not the bureau——

Mr. CUMMINS. But that is a very little part of the work we are giving the Trade Commission to do.

Mr. BRYAN. But has not the Bureau of Corporations the right to transfer to the Federal Trade Commission the power to employ special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents? That is the argument of the House.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Bureau of Corporations has a certain duty to perform now; it has the authority——

Mr. OVERMAN. One minute. The law that gives them that power also expires.

Mr. BRYAN. There is a question about that. The language of the act is:

> To continue all of such services and employments provided for the Bureau of Corporations.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no doubt about that. If you want to confine the Trade Commission to the Bureau of Corporations, you have employed the right language for that purpose.

Mr. BRYAN. "To continue all of such services and employments," is the language; and those services and employments include attorneys and clerks.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. BRYAN. The House was contending that they had broad enough power already and that the language of Senate amendment numbered 13 was broader than they cared to agree to.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I understand, you continue the Bureau of Corporations just as the Trade Commission act does. It turns over to the Trade Commission all the powers of the Bureau of Corporations; it transfers to the Trade Commission all the employees of the Bureau of Corporations. You do not need anything for that except a general appropriation; and we gave to the Trade Commission another power, infinitely more important than the power of the Bureau of Corporations.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is to be carried on just the same.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, you are going to carry on that work with $1,800 clerks; and if you try to do so, of course failure is written at the very beginning of the chapter.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator to a mistake, which I think he has made in his statement. The Trade Commission act did not turn over to the Federal Trade Commission all the powers and functions of the Bureau of Corporations. That was the form in which the draft was presented, but the Senator will recollect that we changed that.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I did not yield to the Senator from Nevada for a speech.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. There is one thing about it which was urged by the House conferees, and I want to state it. It was that this authority was broad enough and large enough in the organization period of the board; that it would hardly get organized and started by the time Congress again convened.

I am more anxious to get the sense of the Senate on this proposition than anything else. If the Senate wants this bill to go to conference, the report ought to be acted on now. I have stated as well as I could the position of the House. I have stated that we kept in conference from 11 o'clock this morning until 6.30 this evening. I have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word. I hope this conference report will be sent back, not only on account of the Trade Commission item and the other item that has been referred to, but also on account of one or two other items in the bill. Simply indorsing what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and other Senators have said in reference to the importance of having proper provision in reference to the Trade Commission, I want just in a word to call attention to other items which, I understand, have gone out, in order that they may be considered if the bill goes back to conference.

As I understand, the item for the relief of Simon M. Preston went out in conference.

Mr. BRYAN. Is that a claim item?

Mr. JONES. No. I simply want to call attention to that situation. I recognize that that is a claim provision that ordinarily ought not to be in this bill, but there are two conditions with reference to it.

This man is 94 years of age, and is not going to live very long. The Senate has passed the bill for his relief. The bill has been favorably reported by a House committee and is on the calendar, but has not passed, simply because it could not be passed by unanimous consent, and there is no other way to pass it now. It does seem to me that under those circumstances it ought to be taken care of.

Then, there is another item that I understand is considered a claim, but which I do not think ought to be put on the claim basis.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me say to the Senator from Washington that we realized at the time these amendments were put on in committee that they were private claims, and if they had not been put on in committee they were subject to a point of order in the Senate. The House conferees took the position that they would not consider private claims which are now pending in committees that deal with these subjects, and especially on a deficiency bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not complaining of the conferees on the part of the Senate, because I know what they have to contend with, and I recognize the force of what the Senator has said. I am simply making this statement in the hope that, if this report goes back to conference again, possibly something may be done.

The other claim—that is, it is called a claim—was sent here as an estimate of the Treasury Department, with the request that it be paid out of a certain fund in the Navy Department. It is to pay to 12 or 13 persons who went with a party to Alaska from the Navy Department to get Alaskan coal for the purpose of testing its availability for use in the Navy. These parties, of course, had personal belongings; they were put on a lighter at Katala Bay and were being transported across the bay when the lighter sunk and their belongings were lost. They are poor men; they can not very well afford to lose these belongings; they were lost through no fault of theirs; they were in the employ of the Navy Department. The Navy Department was transporting their belongings and they were lost.

It seems to me that we ought to take care of a situation of that kind. These people ought not to be forced to have their claims collected through Congress. They can not afford to do so. One of the amounts is only $43, another $100, and so on through the different items—12 or 13 in all—making only a little over $1,300. I do hope that if this bill goes back to conference the conferees will see if it is not possible to take care of them.

As I have said, I recognize the force of what the Senator from Florida has said with reference to this conference report. I know what is very likely to be the attitude of the House members of the conference committee. I am not complaining of the action of the conferees at all, and I will not complain if they are not able to retain the provision in conference, but I simply want to express the hope that they will try to do it if the bill goes back to conference.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Washington that the conferees have had a great deal of trouble in arriving at a conclusion, and I think the situation is too serious to let small matters of that kind at this stage of the session defeat the conference report. I believe such an idea should not be considered for a moment.

Mr. JONES. I would not have made the suggestion I have if the other item were not in dispute, because I could not afford to do so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say, with respect to the item of $300,000, that the act authorizing the creation of the Federal Trade Commission was passed more than six months ago, and yet they have only recently been appointed.

We know that in the case of the Federal Reserve Board a period of four or five months elapsed before they were appointed, and then there was a period of some four or five months more before they actually got fairly under way. You are going to find the same condition with respect to the Trade Commission; and when they have $300,000 to start with, and Congress is going to convene on December 1 anyway, or perhaps a month or two before that time, it seems to me there will be no difficulty whatever in providing the Trade Commission with all the means they should have.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the conference report should be adopted. We are in the last stages of the session, and if we send this report back, the House conferees will have something to say; they are not going to yield upon everything; and, with the firm determination that they may have, we may have no deficiency bill at all enacted into law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, there seems to be a general impression that this bill must go back to conference because of certain important items. I certainly hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate will endeavor to make a firm stand for the provision of the Senate in reference to the appropriation, estimated for and recommended by the department, for wrapping twine and tying devices for the Postal Service. With an estimate that $50,000 was necessary to carry on this service, which amount was recommended, without a word of evidence to sustain the contention as I view it—without criticizing the action of any other body—the appropriation was arbitrarily cut in two. The Senate unanimously, both in the committee and on this floor, restored the amount asked for by the department, which, in my opinion, is necessary for the service. I hope, therefore, the Senate conferees will succeed—I know they will do their best—in inducing the conferees on the part of the other House to yield to the reasonable demand of the Senate in respect to this item, which is no more than the demands of the public service as voiced by the department on this question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, if I can have the attention of the Senator from Florida, I should like to say that we, of course, all realize the efforts of the conferees to adhere to the view of the Senate upon this subject; but it is quite important that we should have a proper understanding both of the act providing for the Bureau of Corporations and the Trade Commission act in order to properly understand this amendment.

A mistake has been made in saying that any of the functions or powers of the Bureau of Corporations were directly transferred to the Federal Trade Commission. The original bill did provide for that, but it was changed, and all that was transferred were the clerks and employees of the commission at their present grades and salaries.

Mr. BRYAN. But, Mr. President, I was speaking of the sundry civil act, which provides:

> To continue all of such services and employments provided for the Bureau of Corporations——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. It seems to me that they have power to employ attorneys, agents, and special examiners. I ask why they have not? Nobody has pointed out why they have not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Assuming, as the Senator claims in the first few lines upon page 56, namely, the words—

> To continue all of such services and employments provided for the Bureau of Corporations during the fiscal year 1915, except the offices of commissioner and deputy commissioner, as in the discretion of the Federal Trade Commission may be required for its purposes and at the rates of compensation specified or authorized therefor.

Assuming that that would warrant the payment not only of the clerks but of the examiners and the lawyers of the Bureau of Corporations at their present salaries, yet as to the additional clerks and employees, of which there will have to be a number, of course, and a higher class of employees, their compensation, it is to be observed, is limited to rates of compensation fixed in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Fixed in the classified service?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Fixed in the classified service. Now, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this extra amount is entirely applied to clerical work, whereas it ought to be left in the discretion of the commission as to whether it will be applied to employment merely of clerks or to the employment of skilled men at higher salaries.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, undoubtedly the sundry civil act contemplated the expenditure of more money than was authorized for the Bureau of Corporations, because the amount authorized carried in that act is $105,000 greater.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; but why should the extra amount be limited entirely to the payment of salaries fixed for the classified service?

Mr. BRYAN. Let us have a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, in order that the vote of the Senate may be of all the value possible, whatever the decision may be, I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion that the conference report be adopted.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Not observing him in the Chamber, I feel constrained to withhold my vote.

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] on account of sickness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce a pair existing between the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Bankhead	Gronna	Norris	Shields
Brandegee	Johnson	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.

So the conference report was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, resuming at No. 820, and that it also be in order to receive and consider unobjected committee reports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

CHILD LABOR.

Mr. NORRIS. I have in my hand a recent copy of the News and Observer, a paper published at Raleigh, N. C., by the Hon. Josephus Daniels, present Secretary of the Navy. In this paper there is an editorial entitled "Trying to push back the ocean," which is a very well written article on the subject of child labor. That part of the article which comments generally on the subject I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TRYING TO PUSH BACK THE OCEAN.

There was once a king—his name was Canute, we think—who thought that he could stand on the shore and sweep back the oncoming tides of the ocean. He used his broom vigorously, and at the first stroke, as the tide receded, thought that he had power over the ocean.

Yesterday in the State senate some very elegant gentlemen, who lacked the vision to see that the world will no longer tolerate child labor, essayed the task of King Canute, and with vigorous speeches succeeded temporarily in compelling a recession of the tide that is moving steadily everywhere else for the emancipation of the children who work in the mills. Behind these gentlemen was a committee composed of owners of cotton mills in the State.

The men who have built the cotton mills in North Carolina are among the State's best captains of industry, and nobody can give them too high praise for the work they have done in developing the State and giving it industrial supremacy. Most of them have also been liberal and kind and generous to those in their employ. If there were no organization of the cotton-mill men and each owner of a mill spoke his sentiments, many of them would have favored the bill which was defeated in the senate yesterday, and some of them do favor it; but, speaking as an organization, they have exerted their great power—and the cotton-mill men now exercise a greater power over such legislation than any other body of men in the State—against it. Their influence is paramount in many counties, and it has made itself felt in the State senate.

This organization is farsighted; it looks ahead to the senate, and for 10 years has been able to prevent any legislation that would secure real inspection of even the moderate child-labor laws which have been put upon the statute books. They consented some years ago to a law which was impotent to reach the need but would not consent to proper and adequate inspection. Yesterday they were able to convince most of the senators that such inspection was not necessary or desirable, and senators killed all legislation looking to strengthening the labor law, even in the smallest detail. It is to be regretted that men who have done so much for North Carolina should be so shortsighted. It is more to be regretted that senators who legislate for all the people should have lacked the wisdom to put North Carolina abreast with the spirit of the times.

The victory yesterday against child labor is one that will be short lived. No State in this day can stand for child labor any more than it could stand for slavery, for the duel, or for hazing. The hour has struck for the emancipation of the children in the factories. The sentiment of this country is overwhelmingly and irresistibly against using up the seed corn. These cotton-mill owners have persuaded themselves that their industry is dependent upon this utilization of the seed corn. They are grievously mistaken. No industry of this magnitude and character in the long run is dependent upon child labor. Whenever the millmen stop long enough to consider the question as it has been considered in every industrial community in the world except our own they will find a way to adjust their industry without compelling women to toil long hours and children to be denied their God-given right to play and live in the sunshine.

"Do you hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years?
They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
And that can not stop their tears.
The young lambs are bleating in the meadows;
The young birds are chirping in the nest;
The young fawns are playing with the shadows;
The young flowers are blowing toward the West;
But the young, young children, O my brothers,
They are weeping bitterly;
They are weeping in the playtime of the others,
In the country of the free."

A few days ago the House of Representatives in Washington, by a vote of more than six to one, passed the Palmer bill. This bill would prevent any factory selling its product in any other State if this product was produced by child labor. Only one vote was cast against this measure by a Member of Congress north of Mason's and Dixon's line. If the bill could get before the Senate at this session, it would become a law. It is as certain to become a law in the near future as that Congress of the United States is responsive to the most enlightened public sentiment of America. Even if the North Carolina Senate should for some years to come be responsive to the demands of the cotton-mill owners that children should continue to work in factories, the reform will come through the passage of the Palmer bill or one like it.

This paper covets the honor of North Carolina leading in the chivalrous spirit of not permitting the long hours of work for women or the working of children at all in cotton mills. The only question now to be considered in the near future is whether North Carolina, through its own legislature, will pass the enlightened laws which have been enacted by every other civilized nation in the world and nearly every State in the Union, or whether it will wait and be compelled to stop the working of children in factories by a Federal law. It is a matter of deep regret that the Senate yesterday thought it could stop the hands of the clock or sweep back the irresistible tide for the emancipation of children. North Carolina should lead, and it is to be hoped that two years hence the record made yesterday will be reversed, so that the State will of its own motion emancipate the children in the mills and not be compelled to do so by Federal laws.

ARMY VETERINARY SERVICE.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 543, House bill 4541.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a request for consent; it is a motion on the part of the Senator from Indiana to proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4541) to consolidate the veterinary service, United States Army, and to increase its efficiency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, is that bill on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. PENROSE. Why not let it be reached in due course?

Mr. KERN. Because it was reached last night and went over on the objection of one Senator. Three-fourths of the Members of this body are pledged to that bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What bill is it, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated again.

The Secretary again stated the title of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, an effort has been made to secure the consideration of bills not objected to on the calendar. Unless that can be done very soon, a great many bills will necessarily expire because we will not have time to reach them. I hope, therefore, special motions will be voted down and that we will reach the calendar and dispose of these other matters.

Mr. KERN. This bill will not take five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those in favor of the motion will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The Chair lays before the Senate House bill 4541.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, was the result of the vote announced?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has uniformly held that a division is for the information of the Chair, and not for the information of the Senate. If the Senate wants a record, it secures it by having a yea-and-nay vote. The motion was carried, however, beyond any question. There were 27 ayes and 22 noes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint veterinarians and assistant veterinarians in the Army, not to exceed 2 such officers for each regiment of Cavalry and Field Artillery, 15 as inspectors of horses and mules and as veterinarians in the Quartermaster Corps, and 5 as inspectors of meats for the Quartermaster Corps, not to exceed 62 in all.

SEC. 2. That hereafter a candidate for appointment as assistant veterinarian must be a citizen of the United States, between the ages of 21 and 27 years, a graduate of a recognized veterinary college or university, and that he shall not be appointed until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination as to character, physical condition, general education, and professional qualifications.

SEC. 3. That an assistant veterinarian appointed under section 2 of this act shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of second lieutenant; that after five years of service an assistant veterinarian shall be promoted to the rank, pay, and allowances of first lieutenant; that after 15 years of service an assistant veterinarian shall be promoted to veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain: Provided, That he passes a satisfactory examination under such rules as the President may prescribe as to professional qualifications and adaptability for the mounted service; or, if found deficient, he shall be discharged from the Army with one year's pay and have no further claim on the Government.

SEC. 4. That the veterinarians of Cavalry and Field Artillery now in the Army, together with such veterinarians of the Quartermaster's Corps provided for in section 1 of this act, now employed, who at the date of the approval of this act shall have less than five years' service, be reappointed as assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of second lieutenant; that the veterinarians who have over five years of service be reappointed and commissioned as assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of first lieutenant; that veterinarians with 15 years of service be reappointed and commissioned as veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain: Provided, That they pass a prescribed practical professional examination as to fitness for mounted field service: Provided further, That veterinarians now in the Army and in the employ of the Quartermaster's Corps who fail to pass the prescribed physical examination, due to disability incident to the service, and who have been incapacitated from rendering satisfactory service to the Government, shall be retired from active service with 75 per cent of pay corresponding to length of service as prescribed herein.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War, upon recommendation of the Surgeon General of the Army, may appoint, for such time as their services may be required, such number of reserve veterinarians as may be necessary to attend public animals pertaining to the Quartermaster Corps, who shall have the pay and allowances of second lieutenant during such period of service, and no longer: Provided, That such reserve veterinarians be graduates of a recognized veterinary college or university and have previously passed a satisfactory examination as to character, physical condition, general education, and professional qualifications in like manner as required of assistant veterinarians; such veterinarians (reserve) to constitute a list of eligibles for appointment as assistant veterinarians under the same condition as to age, probationary service, etc., as provided for in section 2 of this act, and such examinations as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of War for the proper performance of their duties.

SEC. 6. That candidates passing the examinations as prescribed in section 2 of this act shall be appointed, in the order of merit in which they passed such examination, to vacancies as they occur, such appointment to be a probationary one for six months, after which time, if the services of the probationer have been satisfactory, he shall be permanently appointed with commission antedated to embrace such probationary service. Probationary veterinarians whose services are found unsatisfactory shall be discharged at any time during the probationary period, or at the end thereof, without any further claim against the Government.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint a board of examiners to conduct the examinations prescribed herein, one member of which shall be a field officer, one a surgeon, and two veterinarians.

SEC. 8. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in behalf of this bill. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and by the Chief of Staff. It merely does for the Veterinary Corps of the American Army what obtains in all of the European armies. The department is very anxious to have action taken on it at this session of Congress. This bill has already passed the House of Representatives, and if it passes the Senate it will be enacted into law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am sorry that this bill was taken up in the absence of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. That Senator, together with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], made a minority report upon this bill. I think it is so succinct and to the point that I want the Senate to hear that report and see whether they want to vote for this bill or not.

The minority makes the following statement:

We regret that we can not join our colleagues on the committee in favorably reporting S. 4331, to consolidate the veterinary service in the Army. This bill is the product of 15 years of agitation carried on very largely by the American Veterinary Association, having some 3,000 members scattered over the country. They originated it, they have advocated it, and they have pushed it because of the advantage it would bring to the veterinarians who become its beneficiaries.

Now, Senators, listen:

It involves an increase in the cost of the veterinary service of about 37 per cent. It makes some increase in the number of men employed as veterinarians and inspectors, but it makes a much larger increase in pay and in ultimate cost to the Government by giving to some the rank of officers and by retirement with official rank. It is another step in the direction of loading down the military service with civilian attachments.

It is easy to argue that these changes work for efficiency in the Army. Perhaps they do to some extent, but we think the claim is largely exaggerated and that the real motive is to get a permanent place on the Government pay roll.

If this bill passes we will have the spectacle of Army veterinarians retired at the age of 62, practicing their profession comfortably and enjoying the Government retired pay. There is a reason for retiring officers at a certain age and giving them retired pay, because their military service has unfitted them for any practical walk in life; but in our opinion it is bad practice to take professional men and treat them in the same way. They do not need the benefits of retirement on pay any more than professional men in civil life need such assistance.

G. M. HITCHCOCK.
C. S. THOMAS.

Mr. President, I have objected to the consideration of this bill in the past. I was requested, in the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], to object to its consideration, and I have carefully followed that out. That statement made by the minority members ought to be considered by the Senate. The idea of an expense here of 33 per cent increase and veterinarians retired at the age of 62, when in full vigor of life, to draw from the Government of the United States three-quarters pay, not only to practice their profession but as long as they live.

Mr. KERN. Why should the opinions and views of two members of the minority of the committee be given more weight than the majority of the committee that makes another sort of a report after a full hearing?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator this question: Is there a statement made in the minority report of the committee as to the increased cost to the Government that is untrue?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the increase in cost estimated by the War Department is only $31,000. I want to say to the Senator that Gen. Wotherspoon, representing the War Department, appeared before the Senate committee which had this bill in charge and insistently urged that the bill ought to pass. There are something over 22,500 horses used in the Army and over 10,000 mules, with a constant increase. Our Government is the only one of the civilized governments that has not veterinarians commissioned and given a standing in the Army that attracts to the service the very best men of their profession.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not an Army official I know of who is not in favor of the retirement plan, and they want to retire just as early as they possibly can in life. This is taking professional men in the Army and retiring them at the age of 62 years, the Government of the United States being compelled to pay them three-quarters of the regular pay in the Army as long as they live. If this is economy, and if this is to be the policy, the sooner we find it out the better.

All I ask is a vote upon this bill. I am not going to discuss it any longer.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I certainly do not intend to discuss it. I merely want to say that Gen. Wotherspoon has stated that there would be a saving to the Government instead of an increased cost. The Government could save by having more efficient men as veterinarians. They would provide for the animals and keep them sound, and it would result in an actual saving to the Government, rather than an increase in cost.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I signed the minority report with the Senator from Nebraska for the reasons stated in the report. I shall not attempt to elaborate those reasons, certainly not at this late hour of the night. My chief opposition to the bill was the increase of expenditure without any necessity for it. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we should not only as to large, but as to small items, pay some attention to the condition of the Treasury. For my part, I am unable to see how the Government is going to save money by spending money, or how it is going to get any better service from men retired at the age of 62 upon three-quarters pay simply because there is an added inducement to those who desire to enter the service as veterinary surgeons.

Personally, I have not the slightest prejudice in regard to the matter, but I am inclined to think that if such a measure becomes a law it is because of the constant organized and persistent effort which from the commencement of the movement is bound to terminate to-night in the enactment of this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I certainly have no special attachment to retiring men about the time they ought to reach their greatest efficiency on three-quarters pay, or half pay, or 25 per cent. I am utterly opposed to increasing the retired list at the expense of the taxpayers. The Senator from Tennessee said that this increase of the pay roll will only be a little over $30,000. That, I believe, is estimated.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. If the Senator will pardon me I did not make that statement. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs made that statement. He said that Gen. Wotherspoon, who was then Chief of Staff, made it. I said that it would result, in the end, in no increased cost to the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not mean in any way to misquote the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I am sure of that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I regarded his authority as being just as good as theirs. I understood that he made his statement based upon that statement. It may be accurate, but I do not see any reason for adding permanently thirty-odd thousand dollars a year to this pay roll. It is not for just one year, but it is to be a permanent increase of the pay roll, with provision for the retirement of these men at 62 years of age.

Mr. President, I hope the measure will be defeated, and with a view of substituting something better I move that we proceed with the calendar where we left off the other night under Rule VIII, considering unobjected cases.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the motion as stated by the Senator from Georgia is not in order. You can not move to proceed to the consideration of the calendar of unobjected cases. You must move to proceed to the consideratin of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. JAMES. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a privileged motion. The question is on laying the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII at calendar No. 820, and that unobjected committee reports be also in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that will not interfere with messages from the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have the request stated again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will restate it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII for the consideration of unobjected bills, commencing at Order of Business 820, where we left off on the last call, and that it also shall be in order to receive and consider unobjected committee reports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

REFUND OF MONEY TO REPRESENTATIVES.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing and directing the Sergeant at Arms to refund to Members of the House of Representatives amounts of money deducted from their salaries was read twice by its title.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution. During the last——

Mr. PENROSE. We understand it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Everybody, I think, understands it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar will be proceeded with.

AMOS DAHUFF.

The bill (S. 7066) for the relief of Amos Dahuff was announced as the next bill on the calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Amos Dahuff, who was captain of Company H, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as of said organization on the 19th day of February, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUNCAN GRANT RICHART.

The bill (S. 6510) to authorize the appointment of Duncan Grant Richart to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "Fifteenth" and insert "Tenth," and in lines 7 and 8, to strike out the words "immediately after the name of Second Lieut. Harding Polk" and insert "at the foot of the list of second lieutenants of Cavalry," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Duncan Grant Richart, late a second lieutenant in the Tenth Regiment United States Cavalry, to the grade of second lieutenant of Cavalry, to rank at the foot of the list of second lieutenants of Cavalry: Provided, That prior to such appointment the said Duncan Grant Richart shall pass, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War, the physical examination required of candidates for appointment as second lieutenant.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. SEVY.

The bill (S. 4422) for the relief of John L. Sevy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, after the word "lands," on page 1, line 5, to strike out down to and including the words "range 8 west of," in line 11, and insert:

The south half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 12, township 36 south, range 8 west; the north half of lot 1, section 18, township 36 south, range 7 west; the south half of lot 3, section 12, township 36 south, range 8 west; the west half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 7, township 36 south, range 7 west; the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, section 7, the west half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 17, township 36 south, range 7 west of.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 13, after the words "United States of," to strike out "the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the west half of the southeast quarter of section 18; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 19, township 36 south, range 3 west" and insert "the north half of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12, township 36 south, range 8 west; the south half of lot 1 of section 13, township 36 south, range 8 west."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, after the word "west," to strike out the semicolon and to strike out all down to and including the word "west" in line 2, as follows:

The northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5, township 36 south, range 3 west.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LANDS IN LYMAN COUNTY, S. DAK.

The bill (H. R. 11318) authorizing the sale of lands in Lyman County, S. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

The bill (S. 6854) to incorporate the Boy Scouts of America, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill has been once read.

Mr. POMERENE. Was not that bill passed the other day, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been passed, but it has been read.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was read the other day, if the Chair is not mistaken, but the amendments have not been considered. The amendments will now be reported.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 9, after the name "Columbia," to insert "wherein its domicile shall be," so as to read:

That Colin H. Livingstone and Ernest P. Bicknell, of Washington, D. C.; Benjamin L. Dulaney, of Bristol, Tenn.; Milton A. McRae, of Detroit, Mich.; David Starr Jordan, of Berkeley, Cal.; F. L. Seely, of Asheville, N. C.; A. Stamford White, of Chicago, Ill.; Ernest Thompson

Seton, of Greenwich, Conn.; Daniel Carter Beard, of Flushing, N. Y.; George D. Pratt, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Lee F. Hanmer, Jeremiah W. Jenks, Charles P. Neill, Frank Presbrey, Edgar M. Robinson, Mortimer L. Schiff, Lorillard Spencer, and James E. West, of New York, N. Y.; G. Barrett Rich, jr., of Buffalo, N. Y.; Robert Garrett, of Baltimore, Md.; John Sherman Hoyt, of Norwalk, Conn.; Charles C. Jackson, of Boston, Mass.; William D. Murray, of Plainfield, N. J.; and George D. Porter, of Philadelphia, Pa., their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia, wherein its domicile shall be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 14, after the word "be," to strike out the words "deemed advisable" and to insert "necessary for corporate purposes," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the name of this corporation shall be "Boy Scouts of America," and by that name it shall have perpetual succession, with power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity within the jurisdiction of the United States; to hold such real and personal estate as shall be necessary for corporate purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On behalf of the committee Mr. SHIELDS offers an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 8, after the word "politic," to strike out "in" and in lieu thereof to insert "of," so as to read:

A body corporate and politic of the District of Columbia,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment offered by Mr. SHIELDS on behalf of the committee was in section 4, page 3, line 10, before the word "organization," to strike out "national."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment offered by Mr. SHIELDS on behalf of the committee was, on page 6, beginning in line 1, to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person within the jurisdiction of the United States to falsely or fraudulently hold himself out as or represent or pretend himself to be a member of or an agent for the Boy Scouts of America, for the purpose of soliciting, collecting, or receiving money or material, or for any person to wear or display any of the emblems or badges or fraudulently make use of the words or phrases of the Boy Scouts of America, as set forth in section 7, or any insignia colored in imitation thereof, for the fraudulent purpose of inducing the belief that he is a member of or an agent for the Boy Scouts of America. It shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, or association, other than the Boy Scouts of America and its duly authorized employees and agents, for the purpose of trade or as an advertisement, to induce the sale of any article whatsoever, or for any business or charitable purpose, to use within the territory of the United States of America and its exterior possessions, without the authority or permission of said Boy Scouts of America, any of the emblems or badges, words, or phrases of the Boy Scouts of America described in section 7 of this act, or any sign or insignia made or colored in imitation thereof, or of the words "Boy Scouts" or "Boy Scouts of America," or any combination of these words, or the Boy Scout motto "Be Prepared." If any person violates the provisions of this section he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction in any Federal court shall be liable to a fine of not less than $1 nor more than $500 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or both, for each and every offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF MONEYS TO OKLAHOMA SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

The bill (H. R. 16738) to provide for the payment of certain moneys to school districts in Oklahoma was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, before the word "municipal," to strike out "the proper," and in line 2, before the word "several," to strike out "proper authorities of the," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all moneys heretofore paid for lands sold by the Government for town-site purposes at the price of $10 per acre under section 22 of the act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890, and under the act entitled "An act providing for the commutation for town-site purposes of homestead entries in certain portions of Oklahoma," approved March 11, 1902, which have not already been paid to municipal authorities, shall be paid to the several school districts in which the lands for which such moneys were paid are located; and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to cause such payments to be made out of funds arising from such sales.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate disagree to the committee amendments, so as to pass the bill as it stands, in order to save time. The amendments are merely verbal and do not amount to anything.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Oklahoma tell us in a word just what that bill proposes to do?

Mr. OWEN. There is a little town-site balance which is held by the Government, and the bill directs it to be paid to the school districts to which it belongs. This is simply to appropriate that money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

The bill (H. R. 18031) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 476 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 476. There shall be in the Patent Office a Commissioner of Patents, one first assistant commissioner, one assistant commissioner, and five examiners in chief, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The first assistant commissioner and the assistant commissioner shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to them, respectively, from time to time by the Commissioner of Patents. All other officers, clerks, and employees authorized by law for the office shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the nomination of the Commissioner of Patents."

SEC. 2. That section 477 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 477. The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall be as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents, $5,000 a year.
"The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $4,500 a year.
"The Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $3,500 a year.
"Five examiners in chief, $3,500 a year each."

SEC. 3. That so much of section 440 of the Revised Statutes as follows the words "In the Patent Office," and refers to said office only be amended to read as follows:

"One chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner.
"One librarian, who shall be qualified to act as an assistant examiner.
"Five law examiners.
"One examiner of classification.
"One examiner of interferences.
"One examiner of trade-marks and designs.
"One first assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs.
"Six assistant examiners of trade-marks and designs.
"Forty-three principal examiners.
"Eighty-six first assistant examiners.
"Eighty-six second assistant examiners.
"Eighty-six third assistant examiners.
"Eighty-six fourth assistant examiners; and such other examiners and assistant examiners in the various grades as the Congress shall from time to time provide for."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the report of the committee on the bill just passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18031) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes, having considered the same, report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that the bill be passed.

The bill comes from the Commissioner of Patents and has heretofore unanimously passed the House of Representatives, and the reasons of desiring its passage are clearly set forth in a letter, which is hereto attached, from the Commissioner of Patents; also a letter of like import addressed to Hon. WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD,
Chairman House Committee on Patents.

DEAR SIR: House bill No. 18031, which you have introduced, proposes to amend sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to put into the Revised Statutes certain provisions which have been carried in appropriation bills, and to make other changes, all specifically pointed out below.

The bill makes no change of salary over the salaries carried by the appropriation bills for some years past and creates no new office, but, as will be indicated, changes the number of employees.

The greatest and most important change proposed is to equalize the number of first, second, third, and fourth assistant examiners. At present there are 110 fourth assistants, 88 thirds, 73 seconds, and 63 firsts. This is objectionable for the following reasons:

Each primary examiner has to supervise the work of twice as many assistants as was the case 30 years ago.

It is not practicable to increase the number of primary examiners, because it splits up the classes to an inadvisable extent, and the only relief for an excessive number of assistants relatively to the number of primary examiners is to have more assistants of higher grades and therefore better trained in their work and with better knowledge of their classes. There are on an average two and one-half fourth assistants and one and one-half first assistants to each division. I am proposing to equalize this and to have two for each division in each grade.

The proposed change will also tend to keep the assistants longer in the office, because of the increase of the rate of promotion. During the first two or three years the assistants are of comparatively slight value. The present minimum salary is necessary to get the class of men we need, but it is only by keeping them here for 8 or 10 years that the average quality of service that is required can be secured. The increase in the appropriation per annum by reason of the equalization of the number of assistants is less than $23,000, and as the total appropriations for salaries for the whole number of assistants is more than $600,000, this slight increase in salary of the assistants will be far outweighed by the percentage of increase of efficiency.

There are a number of other changes, which are enumerated as follows:

First. The bill provides specifically for the post of first assistant commissioner, an office created by the appropriation act of 1909, and fixes his salary at $4,500, which has been the salary since the office was established.

Second. It states what are the duties of the two assistant commissioners.

Third. It increases the number of examiners in chief from three to five. The reason for this amendment is that the board passes upon appeals aggregating about 1,100 per year. This is more than three men can properly pass upon. The delay and inadequate consideration of cases which naturally follow create unnecessary further appeals, with consequent expense and loss of time to applicants and a diversion of the attention of the commissioner from other useful work. Moreover, as there is no provision of the statute by which anyone other than the members of the board itself can be assigned to sit upon it, the protracted illness of one member of the board would seriously cripple its work, and the concurrent protracted illness of two members would stop the hearing of appeals.

Fourth. For a number of years the appropriation act has provided that the chief clerk shall be qualified to act as principal examiner, and this qualification is put into the Revised Statutes. This is very important, because an enormous amount of mail reaching the office contains inquiries which can be answered by the chief clerk if he is thoroughly familiar with the work of the office, but would otherwise have to be sent to the examiners or commissioner for reply.

Fifth. The librarian should be qualified to act as an assistant examiner, because the library is primarily intended for use in making searches.

Sixth. There are at present two law examiners, who are both assigned to supervising initiation of interferences. I am asking that the number be increased to five, the other three men being needed to do similar supervisory work with a view to making the work in the 43 different divisions of the office more nearly uniform. This work can not be done properly by the commissioner, because in doing it he would have to pass upon many questions which would normally come before him on appeal, and he should not commit himself before hearing the appeals. The work could not be done by assistant examiners, because the primary examiners would not defer to their judgment, but the law examiners are recognized as equal in standing with the principal examiners; in fact, receiving slightly larger salary, so that they can do supervisory work with advantage.

Seventh. The post of examiner in charge of classification work was established by the appropriation act of 1909 and has been continued ever since. There is no work of the office that is more difficult, and it is a continuing work, since the classification must always be under revision.

Eighth. The changes of salary indicated are all merely fixing salaries which have been in the appropriation acts for a number of years.

Ninth. The omission of the provision that two of the second assistant examiners shall be women is not intended to exclude them, but to remove the possible limitation upon the commissioner. Women make excellent assistant examiners and are appointed whenever opportunity arises.

Tenth. The grades of first, second, third, and fourth assistant examiners, heretofore made a part of the appropriation act, but for several years omitted, the difference being indicated only by the differences of salary, are reestablished, and the grade of fourth assistant examiner will, for the first time, be placed in the Revised Statutes, it having so far been carried in the appropriation acts only.

Eleventh. The number in each of the grades of assistant examiner is made 86. Since the time that there were 24, as indicated in section 440, the number has been gradually increased until at the present time there are 110 fourth assistant examiners, 88 third assistants, 73 second assistants, and 63 first assistants. The total number of assistants is 334. The increase by reason of making 86 in each grade would be 10 assistants, or a total of 344.

The total number of increases in the force by the foregoing bill is 15, and the total annual increase of salary due to this increase in the members of the force and reorganization of the assistant examiners, if given effect by the Congress, will be slightly more than $61,000.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I can not too strongly urge the need of this reorganization and increase of the force. The business of the office to-day is larger than it has ever been. The number of applications filed and the labor of examining each application increases steadily with the growth of the literature of the various arts, so that the office force is less adequate to do the work which it has to do than it was 10 years ago.

It is the function of the office to prevent the granting of patents which should not be granted, and the insufficiency of provision for its work results inevitably in improperly granting patents, with consequent burden upon the public.

Respectfully,

THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1915.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR JAMES: This bill carries only 10 additional assistant examiners, 3 additional law examiners, and 2 additional examiners in chief over what have been in the office for some years. All of the additional men will come on through the Civil Service Commission, excepting the 2 additional examiners in chief, who will be presidential appointees.

The bill further equalizes the number of assistant examiners in the 4 classes. At present there are 110 fourth assistant examiners, 88 thirds, 73 seconds, and 63 firsts. The bill provides for 86 men in each class.

The effect of making the number the same in each class is to increase the average salary of assistant examiners from about $1,880 a year, as at present, to $1,950 a year, an increase of $70 per examiner.

The total increase in salaries would be slightly more than $61,000. The office turned in last year a surplus of $240,000 and will turn in this year a much larger surplus.

The new law examiners are important to aid in carrying out administrative reforms which have been recently instituted looking to the unification of practice in the Patent Office, and to more rapid and satisfactory disposition of the business of the office.

The new examiners in chief are necessary partly because the work is too heavy at present, and partly because the general speeding up of the work in the office is certain to increase the labors of the examiners in chief.

Finally, the additional assistant examiners are needed to aid in the more rapid disposition of the business, there being such an accumulation of the work in a number of the divisions that applicants are obliged to wait six months or longer before their applications are reached for action.

The number of applications for patents is substantially the same this year as last, differing only by about 300. The number of trade-mark applications, however, has increased in one year by 20 per cent, and the number of design applications has more than doubled in four years, so that the work this year is larger than it ever was, and is steadily growing.

Owing to the slow promotions because of the small number of first and second assistant examiners, 50 per cent of the resignations are by third assistant examiners. After we have trained them and made them useful they resign and go into practice. I am fully convinced that if we could induce the assistants who resign to remain a few years longer in the office than they now do the efficiency of the force would be increased out of all proportion to the increased appropriation now required. The object of unifying the number of men in the different grades is to induce the assistants to remain longer in the office.

Respectfully,

THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

POLITICAL STATUS OF PEOPLE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LIPPITT. I ask that that go over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in regard to the bill which has just been announced as next in order on the calendar, I wish to say a few words. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who has been ill for the last two or three days, has been endeavoring to call this bill up for consideration. It is a bill relating to government of the Philippine Islands, and upon it a great deal of testimony has been taken, amounting to 750 pages. The matter was carefully considered by the committee. A majority report was made which was assented to by all but four Senators.

I recognize the fact, of course, that under the unanimous-consent rule the bill can not be taken up and considered, but I want to appeal to the Senators who have filed the minority report, because of the importance of the bill——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I shall have to insist on my objection to the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to make a brief statement, and I can do so when the next bill is announced, if the Senator does not allow me to say it now. Of course the Senator can object to the consideration of the bill at once.

Mr. NELSON. I will not object to any statement the Senator may desire to make, but I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator has a perfect right to do that. We have been trying for weeks, and the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, particularly has been trying, to get this bill up for consideration; but on account of the pressure of business, on account of the fact that we had the shipping bill, the immigration bill, and the great supply bills, by which the expenses of the Government are paid, it has been impossible to find time for the consideration of this measure.

I want now to ask Senators on the other side who are opposed to this bill, if they will not, after the completion of this Unanimous Consent Calendar, consent to consider this bill and agree to take a vote on it after two hours' discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is very important. It is a measure, Mr. President, that the Philippine people are looking to Congress for with intense eagerness. They have been assured from almost the beginning of the occupation of the islands by the Americans of self-government and independence. Now, since the bill has passed the House, inasmuch as it has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Philippines of the Senate, and inasmuch as it is here upon the calendar, it seems to me that we ought to be able, since the bill has been modified largely and does not embody as strong provisions as I had hoped it would, to give it two hours' discussion after the consideration of the bills on the calendar.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be utterly useless for the Senator to undertake to dispose of the bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How much time would the Senator want?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would want enough time to undertake to defeat the bill as it stands now. I can not understand why the Senator from Colorado should regard it as important that this Government should declare now what its attitude and policy in regard to the Philippines is going to be at some distant time in the future. It will be well enough for us when we arrive at that future time to determine then what our policy will be in regard to these islands upon which we have expended so much money and so many lives.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am compelled to demand the regular order.

Mr. WEEKS. Regular order!

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I insist upon the demand.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As long as our Declaration of Independence contains the statement that the "just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed," so long must we recognize that we can not govern the Philippine people without their consent and that means if we are true to the spirit of our Government we must recognize their right to independence.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Regular order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think I have the right to proceed on this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, I can speak on the next bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When there is the call for the regular order there is nothing which the Chair can do except to enforce it, and Senators ought to grant the courtesy to the Chair when they know that is the rule and not compel the Chair to insist on enforcing it. The regular order is demanded. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

LESTER A. ROCKWELL.

The bill (S. 283) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to be heard on that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that we are proceeding to consider bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, and each Senator only has a right to speak for five minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly. But I do not want that long; I merely want to make an observation in reply to the Senator from Washington. I will not take more than two or three minutes.

The Senator from Washington has said that he wants a sufficient length of time of consideration to defeat this measure. It seems to me that, in view of the fact that ever since the occupation of those islands we have continually promised these people not only self-government but independence, it comes with poor grace from Senators who believe in the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence that we should in any manner attempt to prevent the passage of such a measure as the one looking to the independence of the Philippine Islands. Men may differ somewhat as to the length of time that may be required to give these people independence, but I can not understand how anyone can deny the fact that they are entitled to it by virtue of their rights as citizens and by virtue of the principles enunciated in our palladium of liberty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator is not any more in favor of giving to the Philippine Islands that degree of self-government which is proper under all the circumstances than I am. The Senator seems to be confused in his statements, for he is mentioning in the same breath self-government and independence, which, in the the case of the Philippines, are two entirely distinct and contradictory things. There can be no self-government in the Philippine Island if the United States gives those islands independent government. The only self-government that can exist in those islands is under the protection of the United States; yet the Senator undertakes to say that at some future time we will withdraw that protection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I can not let the Senator take all of my time. I merely want to say in reply that the distinction which the Senator is attempting to make is really not well founded. Self-government does mean independence——

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is what it means; but, even if it did not mean independence, we have no right to govern those islands indefinitely when their people are intelligent enough to conduct a government of their own. I believe that they are more capable now of governing themselves under an independent government than we are to enforce any government upon them. There never was a people that had intelligent classes as found amongst the Philippine people who did not have the essential elements of independence and of self-government.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should just like to say a word—and I will not take more than two minutes—in regard to the Philippine bill and why it is impossible to agree to the request which the Senator from Colorado has made.

That bill deals with a very important subject in relation to the happiness, prosperity, and future welfare of 8,000,000 people. There are very decided differences of opinion in regard to the right way in which this country ought to go about the great duty which they have undertaken toward the people of those islands.

There are a number of Senators who have been very closely connected with this question, who are very familiar with it, and who are very anxious to discuss it. There are at least seven or eight Senators on this side of the Chamber who have very different opinions from those just pronounced by the Senator from Colorado, and who would not be willing to have this bill put upon its passage until they have had an opportunity to express their views and give the reasons for the views they hold.

In regard to this bill, therefore, I can only say to the Senator from Colorado that it will be absolutely impossible to pass the bill and have it discussed in the way Senators want to discuss it within the short time that remains of this session. So that to ask for unanimous consent agreement for that purpose, I think, is idle, as it would be necessary to refuse it.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 283) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell, and the Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Lester A. Rockwell, who was a private of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 29th day of April, 1865; but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The bill (S. 7041) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. I object to that bill, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this is a very meritorious bill, and the only reason I do not urge the Senator to withdraw the objection is that it is too late now to pass it at this session, as it is a Senate bill. It will be the first bill I shall present at the next session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

POST OFFICE AT COHOES, N. Y.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 21184) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building and site at Cohoes, N. Y. I call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the bill.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the limit of cost heretofore authorized by Congress for the purchase of a site and the erection of a post-office building at Cohoes, N. Y., from $100,000 to $140,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JAMES BELL, DECEASED.

Mr. WHITE. From the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, I report a resolution referring Senate bill 7633, for the relief of Bella Crounse and other heirs of the estate of James Bell, deceased, to the Court of Claims. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose, Mr. President, the request is in conformity with the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is, the agreement including bills on the calendar and reports of committees whenever unobjected to.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the way I understand the agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

The resolution (S. Res. 574) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 7633) for the relief of Bella Crounse and other heirs of the estate of James Bell, deceased, and all papers relating thereto be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for an investigation and report to the Senate of the facts of the claim referred to in said bill, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911, commonly known as the judicial code.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that we may be allowed now to proceed with the calendar. We can consider committee reports after the calendar is concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like——

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. SWANSON. There are some bills that have come over from the House, and are on the Presiding Officer's table, which are very much more important than some of the bills on the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

Mr. SWANSON. Very well; I will wait until we conclude with the calendar.

The bill (S. 6194) to provide for the acquisition of a site and erection of a public building thereon at Hood River, Oreg., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is a waste of time to read these Senate bills. We could not possibly get a Senate bill through the House.

Mr. PENROSE. Then let us object to them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to this bill simply for that reason.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 6373) to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 15799) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a short statement. In the absence of the Senator from Idaho I feel compelled to object to the consideration of that bill at this time, but I will say to the Senate that to-morrow morning I shall have no objection to the consideration of the bill provided section 6 is stricken from it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why can not the Senator move to strike it out now?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho wants to make a statement upon this bill when it is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An objection is made, and the bill will be passed over. We are just losing time.

The bill (S. 7255) to provide a harbor boat for the Revenue-Cutter Service to replace the Hartley at San Francisco, Cal., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to make a general objection to all these Senate bills, because it is a waste of time to start with them now. We know we can not send them to the House and pass any of them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will not do that, because of the fact that we have a House bill that corresponds with the Senate bill in some cases.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will withdraw the request.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

The bill (S. 4320) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen for lands within the limits of the Glacier National Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3200) relating to desert-land entries was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 16029) to authorize the Secretary having jurisdiction of the same to set aside certain public lands to be used as national sanitariums by fraternal or benevolent organizations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that bill go over.

Mr. PITTMAN. Was there an objection to this bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington objected.

Mr. JONES. I asked that it go over.

Mr. PENROSE. It has been objected to. Regular order!

Mr. PITTMAN. I could not understand the Senator on account of the confusion around me.

Mr. JONES. I asked that the bill go over.

Mr. PITTMAN. House bill 16029?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has the Senator any serious objection to it, or is he just saving time?

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

Mr. MYERS. Let me appeal to the Senator from Washington to withdraw his objection and let that bill be considered. It is a House bill that has come over here, and it is of great interest to the people of the Western States.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7109) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4495) providing for the establishment of a term of the district court for the district of Kansas at Salina, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 527) requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the Senate certain information relative to the purchase of ships, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

ROCKY RIVER BRIDGE, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 19078) granting the consent of Congress to the Cleveland Yacht Club Co. to construct a bridge across the west arm of Rocky River, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, SIUSLAW RIVER, OREG.

The bill (H. R. 8904) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at the mouth of the Siuslaw River, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of the Siuslaw River, Oreg., in such locality as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend, at a cost not to exceed $12,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third read, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4876) to amend section 41 of the national-bank act, being renumbered as section 5144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is a short bill and a very important one. I do not know that we will be able to get it through the House, but I should like to try if we can.

Mr. PENROSE. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. You can not get it through the House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would be impossible to get it through the House.

Mr. POMERENE. Possibly that is true, but there is a very great demand for action on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5850) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to that bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will allow me to make a brief explanation of the bill, and then I think he will withdraw his objection. It is a bill that has passed the House twice. It passed at a previous Congress and has passed the House in this Congress and was recommended favorably by the Judiciary Committee unanimously. The Senator's colleague authorized me to make this statement about it—that the amendment proposed was really overlooked, or rather the section was intended to have the effect that this amendment gives it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the bill has been before the Senate on two or three or four occasions and has failed of passage at every session. There are quite a number of Senators who have been opposed to it in the past, and I do not know whether it has been changed from the time that opposition was voiced against it or not.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the Senator must be mistaken about this bill having been before the Senate before. I understand that it has not been.

Mr. SMOOT. It passed the House and came to the Senate a number of times.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 17097) to fix the salary of the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) for the relief of Fred White was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 538) proposing to amend the rules of the Senate relating to debate was announced as the next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, was there any objection to Order of Business 864, House bill 17097?

Mr. PENROSE. I object to it.

The resolution (S. Res. 113) to amend Rule XIX of the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 221) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 13222) to regulate the use of public-school buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the control of the public schools in the District of Columbia by the board of education shall extend to, include, and comprise the use of the public-school buildings and grounds by pupils of the public schools, other children, and adults for supplementary educational purposes, civic meetings for the free discussion of public questions, social centers, centers of recreation, playgrounds. The privilege of using said buildings and grounds for any of said purposes may be granted by the board upon such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as the board may prescribe. That the board of education is authorized to accept, upon written recommendation of the superintendent of schools, free and voluntary services of the teachers of the public schools, other educators, lecturers, and social workers and public officers of the United States and the District of Columbia; that teachers of the public schools shall not be required or compelled to perform any such services or solicited to make any contribution for such purposes; that the public-school buildings and grounds of the District of Columbia shall be used for no purpose whatsoever other than those directly connected with the public-school system and as further provided for in this act. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest that the bills from Orders of Business 871 to 877 be omitted. They are all Senate resolutions or bills, and it is useless to try to pass them.

The resolution (S. Res. 537) that the Committee on Commerce is hereby discharged from further consideration of S. 7552 was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7652) providing for the continuance of the Joint Commission to Investigate Indian Affairs was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7179) to provide for the establishment of a forest reserve within the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 542) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the Senate certain information relative to interned merchant ships of belligerent nations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4619) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate certain lands in Oklahoma reserved for a town site, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7545) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Fort Worth, Tex., and for the remodeling, altering, etc., of the present post-office building, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF FRANK HENRY ROGERS.

The bill (H. R. 20439) for the relief of the heirs of the late Frank Henry Rogers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "to," to strike out "the heirs of the late" and insert "Mary L. Rogers, widow of," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary L. Rogers, widow of Frank Henry Rogers, who died from injuries received in the performance of his duties as an assistant superintendent of construction under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, while engaged in inspection work on the Federal building at Bellaire, Ohio, the sum of $2,190.

Mr. REED. What is the amount carried in the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amount is $2,190.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of Mary L. Rogers, widow of Frank Henry Rogers."

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 222) concerning the connecting parkway between Rock Creek and Potomac Parks was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

LANDS IN AKRON, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 18550) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey by quitclaim deed certain lands in the city of Akron, State of Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to convey by the usual quitclaim deed, to the city of Akron, in the State of Ohio, for street purposes and no other, the northeasterly five feet of the new Federal building site, at the southwesterly corner of East Market and Prospect Streets, in said city.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, Order of Business 879 was asked to go over, I believe, thinking it was a Senate bill; but——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it be considered now.

Mr. PENROSE. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I see it is a joint resolution.

Mr. REED. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right. I thought it was a Senate resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. No; let the objection go. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. That is what I thought it was, and therefore I objected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a joint resolution. We could not possibly get it through. We are wasting time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to ask leave to submit a report and let it go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that is out of order.

Mr. REED. Regular order!

Mr. PENROSE. Objection is made to the report, as I understand.

W. F. NICHOLS.

The bill (H. R. 4266) granting patent to certain lands to the legal heirs of W. F. Nichols was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent conveying title to the east half northeast quarter section 11, township 10 south, range 29 west, Arkansas, to the legal heirs of W. F. Nichols, upon the payment of $1.25 an acre therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4712) to authorize the sale of certain lots in the Hot Springs Reservation for church and hospital purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) for control and distribution of the flood waters of the Rio Grande was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

JAMES EASSON.

The bill (H. R. 900) for the relief of James Easson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Easson, of Racine, Racine County, Wis., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, being the sum unlawfully collected from him by the board of enrollment, namely, $300, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the Army, he not being a citizen of the United States at the time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 7078) to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5681) to amend an act approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7140) creating an additional land district in the State of California, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. FRANK E. EVANS.

The bill (S. 5619) to transfer Capt. Frank E. Evans from the retired to the active list of the Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, that bill is a little different from the others. It was reported at the request of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], Capt. Evans being a resident of Pennsylvania. The same bill is pending in the House and has been favorably reported, so that if it is passed here it can be passed there. I have no interest in it beyond the fact that Senator OLIVER is interested in it.

Mr. SMOOT. It could only be passed in the House under suspension of the rules.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think they will take care of it. It is not a matter in which I have any personal interest.

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

LAND PATENTS.

The bill (S. 6623) in relation to the location, entry, and patenting of lands within the former Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite or other like substances, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN GUTHRIE, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 21200) quieting title to a certain tract of land located in the city of Guthrie, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove a cloud from the title to a certain tract of land located in the city of Guthrie, State of Oklahoma, and more particularly described as follows, to wit: A tract of land 680 feet square, containing 10.62 acres, located within that part of the city of Guthrie, Logan County, Okla., formerly known as Capitol Hill, and bounded as follows: On the north by Cleveland Avenue, on the west by Capitol Boulevard, on the south by Harrison Avenue, on the east by Drexel Boulevard, designated and known on the official plat as Capital Park, whatsoever right, title, or interest the United States may have in and to said tract of land by reason of escheat or otherwise, be and the same is hereby released and quitclaimed unto said city of Guthrie.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGISTRY OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 18686) to provide for provisional certificates of registry of vessels abroad, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the consular officers of the United States and such other persons as may from time to time be designated by the President for the purpose to issue provisional certificates of registry to vessels abroad which have been purchased by citizens of the United States, including corporations, as defined in section 4132, Revised Statutes, as amended by the Panama Canal act and the act of August 18, 1914, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF STEAM VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 20107) to amend sections 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, and 4498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and section 12 of the act of May 28, 1908, relating to certificates of inspection of steam vessels, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that the report of the Committee on Commerce be incorporated in the RECORD immediately following the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1006, Sixty-third Congress, third session.]

AMENDING CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20107) to amend sections 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, and 4498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and section 12 of the act of May 28, 1908, relating to certificates of inspection of steam vessels, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass without amendment.

The bill has the approval of the Department of Commerce, as will appear by the following letter, which is made a part of this report, together with a report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 5, 1915.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On February 3, 1915, the House of Representatives passed H. R. 20107, to amend sections 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, and 4498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and section 12 of the act of May 28, 1908, relating to certificates of inspection of steam vessels.

This bill was reported to the Senate on February 4, 1915, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The amendments provided for in this act were submitted to me for my approval by the Steamboat-Inspection Service, and after carefully examining them such approval was given. I am of the opinion that the amendments are not only wise but necessary, and hope that the bill may pass the Senate without any delay. I will appreciate anything you may do to bring that result about.

Very truly, yours, WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

[House Report No. 1284, Sixty-third Congress, third session.]

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20107) to amend sections 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, and 4498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section 12 of the act of May 28, 1908, relating to certificates of inspection of steam vessels, having considered the bill, report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The advisability of this legislation is fully set forth in the following communications from Hon. A. L. Thurman, Solicitor for the Department of Commerce, and Gen. George W. Uhler, Supervising Inspector General Steamboat-Inspection Service:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, December 23, 1914.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 21st instant, addressed to Secretary Redfield, in regard to H. R. 20107, a bill to amend sections 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, and 4498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and section 12 of the act of May 28, 1908, relating to certificates of inspection of steam vessels, and requesting that the advice of the department be given to the committee, with reference to the merits of the bill and the wisdom of enacting the same into law, has been referred to me for attention.

I herewith send you a communication addressed to me by Gen. Uhler, Supervising Inspector General Steamboat-Inspection Service, containing in full the reasons why the bureau considers the proposed legislation not only advisable, but necessary. The communication of Gen. Uhler expresses the opinion of the department.

If there is any other information the committee would like in regard to the bill, if you will notify me I will see that it is promptly furnished.

Respectfully,

A. L. THURMAN, Solicitor.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE,
Washington, December 15, 1914.

The SOLICITOR DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE:

This bureau submits herewith, in accordance with recent general directions of the Secretary of Commerce, the following proposed amendments in sections 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, and 4498, Revised Statutes of the United States, and in section 12 of the act of Congress approved May 28, 1908, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes," which amendments relate to certificates of inspection and certificate to carry gunpowder issued to vessels, for the necessary action thereon, with the recommendation that these amendments be submitted to Congress for enactment into law.

CERTIFICATE OF INSPECTION.

Section 4421, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, reads as follows:

"SEC. 4421. When the inspection of a steam vessel is completed and the inspectors approve the vessel and her equipment throughout they shall make and subscribe a certificate to the collector or other chief officer of the customs of the district in which such inspection has been made, in accordance with the form and regulations prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors. Such certificate shall be verified by the oaths of inspectors signing it before the chief officer of the customs of the district or any other person competent by law to administer oaths. If the inspectors refuse to grant a certificate of approval, they shall make a statement in writing and sign the same, giving the reasons for their disapproval. Upon such inspection and approval the inspectors shall also make and subscribe a temporary certificate, which shall set forth substantially the fact of such inspection and approval and shall deliver the same to the master or owner of the vessel and shall keep a copy thereof on file in their office. The said temporary certificate shall be carried and exposed by vessels in the same manner as is provided in section 4423 for copies of the regular certificate, and the form thereof and the period during which it is to be in force shall be as prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, or the executive committee thereof, as provided in section 4405. And such temporary certificate, during such period and prior to the delivery to the master or owner of the copies of the regular certificate, shall take the place of and be a substitute for such copies of the regular certificate of inspection, as required by sections 4423, 4424, and 4426, and for the purposes of said sections, and shall also during such period be a substitute for the regular certificate of inspection, as required by section 4498, and for the purposes of said section until such regular certificate of inspection has been filed with the collector or other chief officer of customs. Such temporary certificate shall also be subject to revocation in the manner and under the conditions provided in section 4453. No vessel required to be inspected under the provisions of this title shall be navigated without having on board an unexpired regular certificate of inspection or such temporary certificate: Provided, however, That any such vessel operated upon a regular established line from a port of the United States to a port of a foreign country not contiguous to the United States, whose certificate of inspection expires at sea or while said vessel is in a foreign port or a port of the Philippine Islands or Hawaii may lawfully complete her voyage without the regular certificate of inspection or the temporary certificate required by this section, and no liability for penalties imposed by this title for want of such certificate shall be incurred until her voyage shall have been completed: Provided, That said voyage shall be so completed within 30 days after the expiration of said certificate or temporary certificate: Provded further, That no such vessel whose certificate of inspection shall expire within 15 days of the day of her sailing shall proceed upon her voyage to such port of a foreign country not contiguous to the United States without first having procured a new certificate of inspection or the temporary certificate required by this section."

This bureau recommends that the section be amended so as to read as follows (only the part down to the first proviso has been amended):

"SEC. 4421. When the inspection of a steam vessel is completed and the inspectors approve the vessel and her equipment throughout they shall make and subscribe a certificate, which shall be delivered to the master or owner of the vessel, and a copy of said certificate shall be kept on file in the inspectors' office. The inspectors shall deliver one copy of the certificate to the collector or other chief officer of the customs of the district in which such inspection has been made, in accordance with the form and regulations prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors. Such certificate shall be verified by the oaths of inspectors signing it, before the chief officer of the customs of the district or any other person competent by law to administer oaths. Every collector or other chief officer of the customs shall retain on file all copies of certificates of the inspectors required to be delivered to him. If the inspectors refuse to grant a certificate of approval, they shall make a statement in writing, and sign the same, giving the reasons for their disapproval. Upon such inspection and approval the inspectors shall also make and subscribe a temporary certificate, which shall set forth substantially the fact of such inspection and approval, and shall deliver the same to the master or owner of the vessel, and shall keep a copy thereof on file in their office. The said temporary certificate shall be carried and exposed by vessels in the same manner as is provided in section 4423 for the regular certificate, and the form thereof and the period during which it is to be in force shall be as prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, or the executive committee thereof, as provided in section 4405. And such temporary certificate, during such period and prior to the delivery to the master or owner of the regular certificate, shall take the place of and be a substitute for the regular certificate of inspection, as required by this section and by section 4426 and for the purposes of said sections. Such temporary certificate shall also be subject to revocation in the manner and under the conditions provided in section 4453. No vessel required to be inspected under the provisions of this title shall be navigated without having on board an unexpired regular certificate of inspection or such temporary certificate: Provided, however, That any such vessel, operated upon a regularly established line from a port of the United States to a port of a foreign country not contiguous to the United States, whose certificate of inspection expires at sea, or while said vessel is in a foreign port or a port of the Philippine Islands or Hawaii, may lawfully complete her voyage without the regular certificate of inspection or the temporary certificate required by this section, and no liability for penalties imposed by this title for want of such certificate shall be incurred until her voyage shall have been completed: Provided, That said voyage shall be so completed within 30 days after the expiration of said certificate or temporary certificate: Provded further, That no such vessel whose certificate of inspection shall expire within 15 days of the date of her sailing shall proceed upon her voyage to such port of a foreign country not contiguous to the United States without first having procured a new certificate of inspection or the temporary certificate required by this section."

The purposes of the proposed amendments in the section are as follows:

First. Present section 4421 requires that the original copy of the certificate of inspection issued to a steam vessel shall be delivered to the chief officer of customs and that a copy of the same shall be retained by the inspectors. Present section 4423 requires that every chief officer of customs shall retain on file the original certificate of inspection and shall issue to the master or owner of the vessel three certified copies thereof, two of which shall, where practicable, be posted in conspicuous places in the vessel, and the third copy shall be retained by the master or owner.

Altogether five copies of the certificate of inspection, including the original, are now required by law.

By the proposed amendments in section 4421 the original certificate would be issued by the inspectors direct to the owner or master and be kept on board the vessel.

The inspectors would issue a copy of the certificate to the chief officer of customs of the district, which would be filed in his office. A copy of the certificate would be retained on file in the inspectors' office.

Three copies of the certificate of inspection, including the original certificate, for every steam vessel inspected would thus be required under the proposed amendment, thereby saving two copies for each steam vessel inspected.

This bureau deems that the original certificate of inspection issued direct to the master or owner of the vessel, one copy to the chief officer of customs, and one copy on file in the inspectors' office are sufficient for the reason that one copy posted on board the vessel is sufficient for the vessel, and it is not necessary that the master or owner of the vessel have a copy in addition to that in his possession on board the vessel.

As to issuing the original certificate of inspection direct to the master or owner of the vessel and kept on board the vessel, delivering a copy of the certificate to the chief officer of customs, and retaining a copy on file in the inspectors' office, would state that such is now the practice in the case of certificates of inspection issued to sail vessels of over 700 gross tons carrying passengers for hire, and barges of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire, under the provisions of section 4417, Revised Statutes, and in the case of certificates of examination issued to foreign steam vessels of countries having reciprocal inspection with the United States, under the provisions of section 4400, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress approved March 17, 1906, which practice works satisfactorily.

Second. The words "forty-four hundred and twenty-three, forty-four hundred and twenty-four," and "and shall also, during such period, be a substitute for the regular certificate of inspection, as required by section 4498, and for the purposes of said section until such regular certificate of inspection has been filed with the collector or other chief officer of customs," are stricken out, to conform with proposed amendments in sections 4421, 4423, 4424, and 4498.

LICENSE TO CARRY GUNPOWDER.

Section 4422, Revised Statutes, reads as follows:

"SEC. 4422. Upon the application of any master or owner of any steam vessel employed in the carriage of passengers, for a license to carry gunpowder, the local inspectors shall examine such vessel, and if they find that she is provided with a chest or safe composed of metal, or entirely lined and sheathed therewith, or if the vessel has one or more compartments thoroughly lined and sheathed with metal, at a secure distance from any fire, they may grant a certificate to that effect, authorizing such vessel to carry as freight within such chest, safes, or compartments, the article of gunpowder."

This bureau recommends that the section be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4422. Upon the application of any master or owner of any steam vessel employed in the carriage of passengers, for a license to carry gunpowder, the local inspectors shall examine such vessel, and if they find that she is provided with a chest or safe composed of metal, or entirely lined and sheathed therewith, or if the vessel has one or more compartments thoroughly lined and sheathed with metal, at a secure distance from any fire, they may grant a certificate to that effect, authorizing such vessel to carry as freight within such chest, safes, or compartments, the article of gunpowder, which certificate shall be kept conspicuously posted on board such vessel."

A comma and the words "which certificate shall be kept conspicuously posted on board such vessel" are added after the word "gunpowder" at end of the section.

A corresponding amendment is proposed to be made in section 4424, Revised Statutes.

The purpose of this amendment in section 4422 is to require that the certificate to carry gunpowder shall be kept conspicuously posted on board the vessel. Present section 4424 provides that such steam vessel shall be liable to a penalty if a certified copy of the certificate is not "placed and kept as required" when carrying gunpowder on board, but the law does not state how the certificate is required to be placed and kept.

This bureau deems it advisable to require that when gunpowder is carried on a passenger steamer the fact should be made public by posting the certificate on board.

POSTING OF CERTIFICATE OF INSPECTION.

Section 4423, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, reads as follows:

"SEC. 4423. Every collector or other chief officer of the customs shall retain on file all original certificates of the inspectors required to be delivered to him, and shall give to the master or owner of the vessel therein named three certified copies thereof, two of which shall be placed by such master or owner in conspicuous places in the vessel where they will be most likely to be observed by passengers and others, and there kept at all times, framed under glass, and the other shall be retained by such master or owner as evidence of the authority thereby conferred: Provided, however, That where it is not practicable to so expose said copies they shall be carried in the vessel in such manner as shall be prescribed by the regulations established by the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce."

This bureau recommends that the section be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4423. The original certificate of inspection delivered to the master or owner of a steam vessel shall be placed by such master or owner in a conspicuous place in the vessel where it will be most likely to be observed by passengers and others, and there kept at all times, framed under glass, as evidence of the authority thereby conferred: Provided, however, That where it is not practicable to so expose said certificate, it shall be carried in the vessel in such manner as shall be prescribed by the regulations established by the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce."

The first part of the present section reading, "Every collector or other chief officer of the customs shall retain on file all original certificates of the inspectors required to be delivered to him, and shall give to the master or owner of the vessel therein named three certified copies thereof, two of which," has been proposed to be amended, and is included in proposed amended section 4421.

The balance of the section has been changed so as to agree with the proposed amendments in section 4421 and relates only to the matter of posting of the certificate of inspection.

CARRYING PASSENGERS OR GUNPOWDER CONTRARY TO LAW.

Section 4424, Revised Statutes, reads as follows:

"SEC. 4424. Whenever any passenger is received on board any steam vessel not having the certified copies of the certificate of approval placed and kept as required by this title, or whenever any passenger steam vessel receives or carries any gunpowder on board, not having a certificate authorizing the same, and a certified copy thereof placed and kept as required, or shall carry any gunpowder at a place or in a manner not authorized by such certificate, such steam vessel shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense."

This bureau recommends that the section be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4424. Whenever any passenger is received on board any steam vessel not having an unexpired certificate of approval or an unexpired temporary certificate of approval placed and kept as required by this title, or whenever any passenger steam vessel receives or carries any gunpowder on board, not having a certificate authorizing the same, placed and kept as required, or shall carry any gunpowder at a place or in a manner not authorized by such certificate, such steam vessel shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense."

The first part of the section, in regard to the kind of certificate of approval required to be carried, is amended so as to correspond with the amendments proposed to be made in section 4421.

In the latter part of the section, in regard to license to carry gunpowder, the words "and a certified copy thereof" are struck out.

The purpose of this amendment has been set forth in part under the heading of "license to carry gunpowder." The proposed amendment further requires that only the original certificate to carry gunpowder shall be posted on board, and does away with the requirement that the vessel, in addition to having a certificate authorizing the carrying of gunpowder, shall also have "a certified copy thereof placed and kept as required."

REGISTRY, ENROLLMENT, ETC., DENIED TO VESSELS NOT COMPLYING WITH THE LAW.

Section 4498, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, reads as follows:

"SEC. 4498. A register, enrollment, or license shall not be granted or other papers be issued by any collector or other chief officer of customs to any vessel subject by law to inspection under this title until all the provisions of this title applicable to such vessel have been fully complied with and until the certificate of inspection required by this title for such vessel has been filed with said collector."

This bureau recommends that the section be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4498. A register, enrollment, or license shall not be granted or other papers be issued by any collector or other chief officer of customs to any vessel subject by law to inspection under this title until all the provisions of this title applicable to such vessel have been fully complied with and until the copy of the certificate of inspection required by this title for such vessel has been filed with said collector or other chief officer of customs."

The words "copy of the" have been inserted between the words "the" and "certificate," so as to make the section agree with the proposed amendment in section 4421, which requires that a copy of the certificate of inspection shall be furnished the chief officer of customs instead of the original certificate of inspection.

The words "or other chief officer of customs" have been added immediately after the word "collector" at the end of the section, so as to make that part of the section apply also to chief officers of customs other than collectors, as surveyors of customs, in the general manner stated in the first part of the section.

CERTIFICATE OF INSPECTION REQUIRED ON SEAGOING BARGE.

Section 12 of the act of Congress approved May 28, 1908, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes," reads as follows:

"SEC. 12. That a register, enrollment, or license shall not be issued or renewed by any collector or other officer of customs to any such barge unless at the time of issue or renewal such barge has in force the certificates of inspection prescribed by section 10 and on board the equipment prescribed by section 11."

This bureau recommends that the section be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That a register, enrollment, or license shall not be issued or renewed by any collector or other officer of customs to any such barge unless at the time of issue or renewal such barge has in force the certificate of inspection prescribed by section 10 and on board the equipment prescribed by section 11."

The letter "s" at end of "certificates" has been stricken out.

The purpose of this amendment is to have the section amended in accordance with the proposed amendment in section 4421, Revised Statutes, wherein only one certificate of inspection is required to be kept on board.

A bill containing the proposed amendments is transmitted herewith.

GEO. UHLER.

MRS. H. G. LAMAR.

The bill (H. R. 14197) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mrs. H. G. Lamar was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of Mrs. H. G. Lamar, late of Macon, Ga., now deceased, $226.66, the same being for the rent of one building from October 27, 1865, to November 30, 1865, located in Macon, Ga., and occupied as quarters for the commanding officer and staff of the United States Army of the district of Columbus, Department of Georgia, under a contract of lease, made with said Mrs. H. G. Lamar by Capt. W. A. Rankin, assistant quartermaster, and dated October 27, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRADING OF GRAIN.

The bill (H. R. 17971) for securing the uniform grading of grain, preventing deception in transactions in grain, and regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE and others. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

WILLIAM HAM.

The bill (H. R. 11839) for the relief of William Ham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William Ham, who was a private in Company F, Eleventh Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 14th day of November, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIPMENTS TO PORTO RICO OR THE PHILIPPINES.

The bill (H. R. 12674) to provide for the allowance of drawback of tax on articles shipped to the island of Porto Rico or to the Philippine Islands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends all provisions of existing laws for the allowance of drawback of internal-revenue tax on articles exported from the United States, so far as applicable, to like articles upon which an internal-revenue tax has been paid when shipped from the United States to the island of Porto Rico or to the Philippine Islands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJUSTMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ACCOUNTS.

The bill (H. R. 15215) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to adjust and settle the shortages in certain accounts of said District, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to adjust and settle the shortages in certain accounts of said District arising through the defalcation of J. M. A. Watson, formerly an employee of the government of said District, by paying into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $63,939.96, to be credited as follows: Miscellaneous receipts, United States, $10,623.75; miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia, $51,556.22; and permit fund, District of Columbia, $1,759.99. There is hereby appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of this act the sum of $63,939.96, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT HALF-AND-HALF PRINCIPLE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 226) providing for the appointment of a joint select committee to investigate and report as to the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, and as to the necessity of any change or revision in the tax laws applicable to said District, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that it be indefinitely postponed. The matter has been settled in the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 18685) to repeal penalties on foreign-built vessels owned by Americans was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, after the word "remitted," to insert "Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall apply only in case that any vessel of the character above described after entering an American port shall, before leaving the same, be registered as a vessel of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of sections 4219 and 4225 of the Revised Statutes as imposes tonnage duties of 50 cents per ton and light money of 50 cents per ton on a vessel owned by citizens of the United States, but not a vessel of the United States; so much of section 4J, subsection 1, of the act of October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," as imposes a discriminating duty of 10 per cent ad valorem on all goods, wares, or merchandise imported in a vessel owned by citizens of the United States, but not a vessel of the United States; and so much of section 4J, subsection 2, of the act aforesaid as provides for the forfeiture of any vessel owned by citizens of the United States, but not a vessel of the United States, together with her cargo, tackle, apparel, and furniture, are hereby repealed. Any such tonnage duties, light money, or discriminating duties collected since the passage of the act of August 18, 1914, shall be refunded, and any such forfeitures incurred are hereby remitted: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall apply only in case that any vessel of the character above described after entering an American port shall, before leaving the same, be registered as a vessel of the United States.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire if it is the tariff act the bill proposes to amend?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have a provision putting a tax on certain classes of foreign vessels coming into the United States owned by citizens of the United States. We have recently permitted the purchase of foreign-built vessels by citizens of the United States and permitted them to hoist the American flag over those vessels.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering whether this is a bill to repeal the tariff act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it gives only the opportunity for foreign vessels purchased by citizens of the United States to get into an American port where they can register without any penalty when they first come in; that is all.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not repeal any part of the tariff act?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to it.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask for the record whether the bill repeals the clause in the tariff law imposing a 5 per cent differential?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. JONES. That is what I wanted to know.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the Senator will not object. If he will turn to the report, he will see that it is a very important measure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to it principally on account of the impossibility of finding out the nature of the bill before it is passed in the hurried manner in which the bill is being disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think I can explain it to him so that he will not object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator a question, which may hasten the explanation. Several inquiries were made as to whether it is an amendment of the tariff act, and I think one was informed that it is not an amendment of the tariff act. Yet the bill states that it is an amendment of the tariff act.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. There has been in every tariff act for the last 25 or 30 years a provision that imposed a penalty upon a vessel as to tonnage dues and as to light charges and as to the forfeiture of cargo for vessels owned by citizens of the United States, but not registered as vessels of the United States, when they entered an American port. That provision has been brought forward in every tariff act during this long period of time. It is brought forward in the present tariff act. The situation created is this: A citizen of the United States—and this was true before we passed the recent act known as the ship-registry bill—can purchase a vessel anywhere in the world, and by taking it to a port where we have a consul obtain a certificate and place upon it the American flag. That ship is entitled to the protection of the United States and can trade in all the ports of the world as other ships may; but under this tariff provision, if it comes into a port of the United States it is liable to these discriminating tonnage duties and also liable to a forfeiture of its entire cargo.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator let me finish, if he pleases?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to say that I notice an amendment, by way of proviso, in the bill which provides that the act shall apply only in case a vessel after entering an American port and before leaving the port is registered as an American vessel. In view of that proviso, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I was going to explain. Since our registration act there is no necessity for it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ENTRIES UNDER RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The bill (H. R. 19061) for the relief of homestead entrymen under the reclamation projects of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any person who has made homestead entry under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 388), for land believed to be susceptible of irrigation, which at the time of said entry was withdrawn for any contemplated irrigation project, may relinquish the same, provided that it has since been determined that the land embraced in such entry, or all thereof in excess of 20 acres, is not or will not be irrigable under the project, and in lieu thereof may select and make entry for any farm unit included within such irrigation project as finally established, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize advances to the reclamation fund," etc., and acts amendatory thereof: Provided, That such entrymen shall be given credit on the new entry for the time of bona fide residence maintained on the original entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER FOR MINING PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 4110) authorizing the cutting of timber for mining purposes by corporations organized in one State and conducting mining operations in another was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

JOSEPH ROBICHEAU.

The bill (H. R. 1062) granting a patent to Joseph Robicheau was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "district," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere with or defeat any sale heretofore made by the Forest Service of timber upon the land herein granted and the purchaser or purchasers of such timber shall have the right to cut and remove from the land all timber or lumber purchased, within two years from the approval of this act, and the said Joseph Robicheau shall have no claim to the timber so sold or to the proceeds thereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Joseph Robicheau to the following land: Northwest quarter of the southeast quarter and south half of the southeast quarter section 27, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 34, township 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, Coeur d'Alene (Idaho) land district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

The bill (H. R. 9591) to permit the manufacture of denatured alcohol by mixing domestic and wood alcohol while in process of distillation was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to know who objected.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that the bill might go over, and I can tell the Senator why in a very few words.

Mr. GRONNA. Regular order.

Mr. SIMMONS. My attention was called to another matter. I should like to have the Senator withdraw his objections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement. There is an objection, and that takes the bill over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand that the Senator from Utah objects?

Mr. SMOOT. And if it is not out of order I am perfectly willing to tell the Senator why.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If he has made up his mind and intends to continue objecting we had better go on with the other bills on the calendar.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

The bill (S. 5909) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PORT OF BAY CITY, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 2909) to extend the privileges of the seventh section of immediate transportation act to Bay City, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transporting of dutiable merchandise without appraisement to Bay City, Mich.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TO RATIFY ACT OF HAWAIIAN LEGISLATURE.

The bill (S. 6093) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii relating to certain gas, electric light and power, telephone, railroad, and street railway companies and franchises in the Territory of Hawaii, and amending the laws relating thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

HENRY J. DAVIS.

The bill (S. 5435) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

HEIRS OF JOSHUA NICHOLLS.

The bill (S. 2810) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls was announced as next in order.

Mr. WEEKS. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. JAMES. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. The bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and reported favorably from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator from Mississippi is very anxious to have it passed. It is a very meritorious measure. I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator puts it that way, and if it is any consolation to the Senator from Mississippi, who is sick and absent, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. JAMES. I would be glad if the Senator would do so.

Mr. PENROSE. It is useless to pass a Senate bill, however.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "$33,450" and insert "$20,450," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs at law of Joshua Nicholls, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,450, for and on account of property belonging to said Joshua Nicholls destroyed and captured by the United States soldiers in the year 1863, in the State of South Carolina, during the late Civil War. The said Joshua Nicholls was throughout said war a loyal citizen of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOTHER'S DAY ASSOCIATION.

The bill (H. R. 16298) to incorporate the Mother's Day Association was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that that may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

The bill (S. 6111) to incorporate the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 21122) to validate certain homestead entries was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all homestead entries heretofore erroneously allowed for the unused, unallotted, and unreserved lands of the United States in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservations, which lands were authorized to be sold under section 16 of the act approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1069), and under the provisions of the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 92), are hereby ratified and confirmed; but, in addition to the land-office fees prescribed by statute for such entries, the entryman shall pay $1.25 per acre for the land entered at the time of submitting final or commutation proof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5542) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide a method of applying postal-savings deposits to the promotion of the public welfare, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 16637) to provide divisions of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. WEEKS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will not object to this bill. It is a matter of very great importance to the public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

The bill (H. R. 12292) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ARKANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 18086) to amend section 71 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 4, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the counties of Desha and Chicot, in the State of Arkansas, be, and the same are hereby, detached from the western division of the eastern district of Arkansas and are hereby annexed to, included in, and made a part of the eastern division of the said eastern district of the State of Arkansas.

SEC. 2. That the county of Yell, in the State of Arkansas, be, and the same is hereby, detached from the Fort Smith division of the western district of Arkansas and is annexed to, included in, and made a part of the western division of the eastern district of the State of Arkansas.

SEC. 3. That this act shall in no wise affect the jurisdiction as to actions at law or suits in equity now pending, but all actions at law and suits in equity now pending in the respective districts and divisions having jurisdiction thereof at the time of the passage of this act shall proceed as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to transfer certain counties in the several judicial districts of the State of Arkansas."

OHIO JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The bill (H. R. 5849) to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 100 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 100. The State of Ohio is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Ohio. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Ashland, Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Carroll, Columbiana, Crawford, Geauga, Holmes, Lake, Lorain, Medina, Mahoning, Portage, Richland, Summit, Stark, Tuscarawas, Trumbull, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Auglaize, Allen, Defiance, Erie, Fulton, Henry, Hancock, Hardin, Huron, Lucas, Mercer, Marion, Ottawa, Paulding, Putnam, Seneca, Sandusky, Van Wert, Williams, Wood, and Wyandot, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Cleveland on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October, and at Youngstown on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March; and for the western division, at Toledo on the last Tuesdays in April and October. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court to be held at Cleveland may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term then being held or authorized to be held at Youngstown. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Cleveland or at Youngstown, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Youngstown. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Adams, Brown, Butler, Champaign, Clark, Clermont, Clinton, Darke, Greene, Hamilton, Highland, Lawrence, Miami, Montgomery, Preble, Scioto, Shelby, and Warren, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Athens, Belmont, Coshocton, Delaware, Fairfield, Fayette, Franklin, Gallia, Guernsey, Harrison, Hocking, Jackson, Jefferson, Knox, Licking, Logan, Madison, Meigs, Monroe, Morgan, Morrow, Muskingum, Noble, Perry, Pickaway, Pike, Ross, Union, Vinton, and Washington, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the western division shall be held at Cincinnati on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October, and for the eastern division at Columbus on the first Tuesdays in June and December, and at Steubenville on the first Tuesdays of March and September. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court being held at Columbus may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term being held or authorized to be held at Steubenville. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Columbus, or at Steubenville, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Steubenville: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Steubenville shall be furnished free of expense to the Government until the completion of the Federal building: And provided further, That terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held at Dayton on the first Mondays in May and November. Prosecutions for crimes and offenses committed in any part of said district shall also be cognizable at the terms held at Dayton. All suits which may be brought within the southern district, or either division thereof, may be instituted, tried, and determined at the terms held at Dayton."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUTIES ON FLAX-PREPARATORY MACHINES.

The bill (S. 5881) providing for the refund of duties collected on flax-preparatory machines, parts, and accessories, such as described in the act of Congress approved February 7, 1913, imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to the consideration of that bill, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

REFUND OF INCOME TAX.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 398) to refund, under certain conditions, a portion of the offers in compromise for failure to make the return required under the act of October 3, 1913, said offers in compromise having been covered into the Treasury, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO LAND RESERVATIONS.

The bill (S. 6486) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Pike National Forest, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that bill is a duplicate of House bill 18747, which was passed this morning, and is now on the Secretary's desk. I ask that that bill be taken up and considered, instead of the one which has just been stated as being next in order on the calendar.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I do not intend to object, though it hardly comes within the rule, but I think it ought to be done. I have another bill in the same situation. I merely want the Senate to remember that fact in a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 18747) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Pike National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, Senate bill 6486 will be indefinitely postponed.

SAMUEL M. FITCH.

The bill (H. R. 10122) to credit Samuel M. Fitch, collector of internal revenue, first district of Illinois, on the books of the Treasury Department with the sum of $1,500 for cigar stamps lost or stolen in transit, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. EHRMANN.

The bill (H. R. 13591) for the relief of John P. Ehrmann was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMATO CASTELLANO, LIBERO BARANELLO, AND MICHELE BARANELLO.

The bill (H. R. 16777) for the relief of Amato Castellano, Libero Baranello, and Michele Baranello was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. FRITCHARD.

The bill (H. R. 17343) for the relief of Charles L. Pritchard was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. F. CRAWFORD.
